NEW CAMP COUCH.—MAYNARD and Co., 17, Poultry, invite the attention of Military Officers and others proceeding to India to this important and simple Bedstead. The following is an extract from an Officer of the Madras Army, dated Prooty, April 7th, 1834:—"Again I am seated on Maynard's Travelling Bedstead, which has accompanied me thus far, and, by the bye, has been extremely serviceable to me during the campaign." Extract from a letter from a Naval Officer:—"I can with justice say that there was no such convenient piece of furniture on board my ship, being, from its construction, doubly useful in quality of a standing couch by day, and a swinging cot in bad or hurricane weather; it moreover occupies less space in a cabin than the ordinary bedsteads, and, being exceedingly light and portable, is easy to be handled in shifting or taking on shore. My daughter's answered extremely well in travelling after her arrival in India. In fine, it is the best constructed thing of the sort I have ever met with." May be seen at MAYNARD and Co.'s Military and General Outfitting Warehouses, 27, Poultry, next the Mansion House.

36th—Fever is very prevalent and fatal with the service comps. of Antigua, having carried off Ensign and Adjt. Clarke, his son, and several of the men. Four or five officers and very many men were on the sick list when our advices came away, and no hope entertained of the recovery of the band master, Mr. Smallstick. The regt. had received orders for St. Lucia and Dominica. Capt. King, who so distinguished himself at Sandhurst, has joined the depot. Quartermaster Hall is at home on leave.

39th—Letters from Madras communicate the death of Ens. Moore.

There is no intention of bringing home the regt. next year, there being no rebel for it.

95th—Lieut.-Col. Campbell is about to join and assume the command.

Royal Artillery.—On Saturday night it is usual for the non-commissioned officers (who are married and allowed to sleep out of barracks) to visit the market after tattoo, to procure their provisions at a cheap rate. Last week the officer on duty sent every one he met to the guard-room, such practice tending to give a bad example to the men; they were subsequently liberated with a suitable admonition. Col. Power, lately commanding at Charlemont, is now in command of the troops at the Mauritius, being next in rank to the Governor, Maj.-Gen. Sir W. Nicolay. Lieut. Gilbert is on leave from this garrison.

Royal Engineers.—Private Haywood, on Thursday, was sent to Brixton for thirty days, pursuant to sentence of court-martial, for drawing his bayonet in a fray. Another private has also been sent to the same place for a similar offence, and threatening to do "mischief," at a public house called the "Three Daws." Lieut.-Col. M. C. Dixon is now stationed in Ceylon.

Mr. Greensill has been appointed Ordnance Storekeeper at Cork Harbour, vice Mr. Smiley, retired.

Portsmouth, Jan. 1.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Dec. 26—The Seaflower sailed for Falmouth to be employed as a temporary packet, but finding some of the regular vessels had arrived, and her services not being required, she returned to the port on Tuesday. Lieut. Hayes went passenger to Falmouth to join the Hastings. The artificers of the yard were set to work on the Melville on Tuesday; her copper is stripped. It has also been found requisite to remove the copper from the Pique, to ascertain if any of the outer timbers have started. The Erebus bomb has been rigged in the basin, and floated out; there is a report that Com. Belcher is to have her. The Messenger steamer is expected to tow her to the eastward. Lieut. Inman, son of the Professor of the Naval College, is to be employed under Capt. Ross, and he left Portsmouth for Hull on Saturday to join the Cove. The Ranger packet, Lieut. Turner, arrived at Spithead on Thursday, and, in a few hours after, proceeded on to Falmouth. Jan. 1—The Victory has been moved from her moorings and given place to the Britannia, and Adm. Sir T. Williams's flag was hoisted in her this day. The Earl of Minto has most considerately promised that a commission in the Royal Marines shall be given to Mr. Henry Timpson, eldest son of the late Capt. Timpson, whose death we announced last week. The Seaflower, and her tender, the Cracker, are the only vessels fitting at Portsmouth. Ships in port—Britannia, Excellent, Royal George, yacht.

Sheerness, Jan. 1.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Dec. 27—Sailed the Ranger packet, Lieut. Turner, for Falmouth. H.M. brig Racer arrived at the Nore. 28—H.M. steamer Lightning arrived, with H.M. brig Fairy in tow, from Woolwich. Racer came into harbour. 30—Court Martial assembled on board H.M.S. Ocean, to try Capt. Hope and officers of H.M. brig Racer for getting her on shore. Capt. Hope admonished. 31—Lightning steamer returned to Woolwich with the Fairy, Capt. Hewitt, one of the members of the Court-Martial. Racer taken into dock; false keel and part of the gripe gone, but her bottom not the least injured. Officers and ship's company speak well of her sailing qualities, and also of her being a good sea boat. It is expected she will not be paid off.

The Melville, 74, on being commissioned for Sir Peter Halket (Bart., will bear a Commander and four Lieutenants, besides the Flag Lieutenant and a crew of 450 men.

Rio de Janeiro, Oct. 23*d*, 1835.—"We expect the Satellite, sloop of war, with treasure, from the South Sea about the middle of next month. She will despatch in a few days after her arrival for England. A Jew Mage of the name of Feijo has been appointed to the administration of the government of that country, with the powers a sole director."

The effective Warrant Officers have been placed in six classes:—first class, line-of-battle ships; second class, fourth and fifth rates; third class, all other vessels.

During the past week the Royal George, revenue cutter Lieut. Steine, when about mid-channel, espied and gave chase to a French smuggling cutter, and after several hours manœuvring the Royal George was gaining on her so fast that the smugglers thought it prudent to destroy her cargo which they did, by throwing a very large crop of tubs overboard. She proved to be the Le Jean, of Cherbourg. On Tuesday night, about 11 o'clock, the Eagle, revenue cruiser Lieut. Umbleville, fell in, off Portland, with a French smuggling cutter, supposed to be the Eliza, and succeeded in capturing a tub boat, containing 83 tubs of foreign spirits which has been deposited in the Custom House at Weymouth. The night being very dark, the boat's crew and the cutter escaped.

An accident occurred on Monday afternoon, which had nearly occasioned the loss of life. A boat belonging to the Ordinary, in attempting to cross Portsmouth Harbour, with a strong ebb tide and north-east wind, came in contact with the mooring-warp of a schooner that was placed in a most improper situation, and immediately upset, and went to the bottom. Fortunately there was but one man in the boat who was instantly plunged into the water, and appeared to be in the most perilous situation. By the prompt efforts however, of a collier's boat, and a wherry that was crossing the harbour at the time with three gentlemen, the poor fellow was rescued from a watery grave. We cannot refrain warmly applaud the characteristic humanity of our British sailors, who, in the course of two or three minutes, had a boat on the spot from every vessel within sight of the accident, whilst we cannot too severely censure the existing authorities for allowing vessels to remain so improperly and dangerously moored.—Hampshire Telegraph.

Last week a circular was received by the whole of the public departments in the dockyards, &c., requiring the officials to refrain from the exercise of any influence on the subordinates in their respective departments, in relation to the election of Town Councillors.

We have letters from Malta (by the Firefly, arrived at Falmouth), dated 9th ult. The Columbine sailed on the 23d Nov. for Constantinople with despatches, having a quarantine officer on board to prohibit any communication with the shore. The Volage, Capt. Richards, had gone to Athens, and from thence was to proceed to Constantinople. The Portland and Medea were at Amrina, in attendance on the King of Bavaria; the former is ordered home. The Orestes was at Tripoli, Favourite at Smyrna, Tyne on the east coast of Spain, Tribune and Childers at Cadiz. Mr. Wickham, from the Admiral's office, had joined the Volage as Acting Purser, in place of Mr. Colvin, dead. Capt. Martin, C. B. took command of the Caledonia on the 23d of November. The experimental squadron was still at sea, and in consequence of the late weather and the very frequent calms they had experienced no decisive advantage had been reported. They were therefore ordered to remain out until they encountered some rough weather, in order to try the respective merits of the ships upon all points of sailing. The Vernon was said to have had the advantage in the partial trials which had occurred, and the Columbine, which had accompanied the squadron, had, on one occasion, weathered upon the Barham fifteen and upon the Vernon ten, miles in nine hours; and as this was more than she had ever done upon former trials, it was supposed both the frigates had been altering their trim, when the partial flaws of wind came on. It was the opinion, of the fleet, that the ships, in order to have a thorough trial should be sent to cruise in the Atlantic for a month, as the variable currents in the Malta Channel might influence one vessel more than another, and thus no satisfactory result be obtained. The Barham's inclination, in the strongest breeze they had ever entered when going seven knots on a bowline, was 8½ degrees, the Vernon's being 6½. By the next packet we shall have a detailed account; but it is remarked by the officers of the Revenge, that whether the ship had improved in her sailing qualities, or the others fallen off, the frigates did not display the great superiority over her that they were wont to do. The little Columbine was the admiration of all, for the admirable way in which she was handled, and her extraordinary property of creeping to windward. We trust this vessel will be sent to cruise on the Coast of Africa, where these qualities might be most useful, in the capture of slavers, which now abound upon that coast, and persevere in that infamous traffic, their superior sailing inducing them to hold in contempt the utmost exertions of our cruisers, which are only able to effect a capture occasionally. We are glad to perceive that the Watchwitch has been ordered to that station.

Royal Marines—(Woolwich Division.)—Private Hawkins has been tried by Court Martial for selling his [illegible] This sentence has not yet been promulgated. The practi[illegible] soldiers making away with their "necessaries" is still prevalent to a great extent, and until some effectual remedy is resorted to the crime will flourish, as the parties who purchase with impunity boldly assert, in the first instance, the participes criminis cannot be competent witnesses unless previously pardoned, which, for obvious reasons, cannot be admitted; secondly, they are assured they would not be betrayed were it the case; and thirdly, they would contest the legality of any fine.

The female nurses in the Marine Hospital have been dismissed, and male attendants are ordered to supply their places. This is certainly an age of delicacy and refinement!

To the records of individual gallantry with which we seek the contingencies of gracing our pages, we have great pleasure in adding the name of Lieut. Hannes Boubury, of the Thunderer. That vessel was under close-reefed topsails, in a stiff gale, and the night setting in, when a sailor was washed off the yard-arm into the water, striking the ship's side as he fell. Young Bunbury, who lost his right arm at Navarino, was on deck, and seeing the man fall, ran down into the gun-room, meaning to throw an arm-chair out of the window to the sailor, when he should come up astern. He knew him to be a good swimmer, and thought the chair would serve all purposes; but when he saw the man rise and splash about in a confused manner, he guessed at once that the blow had stunned him, and immediately, and in his blood, jumped in himself with the chair. When he rose he hooked the chair on the stump of his arm, and catching the seaman with his left hand, there held him, while many heavy seas broke over them, till at length one sea still heavier dashed them asunder; but by that time the man had recovered his senses, and struck out, till the boats came, and both were picked up. Lieut. Bunbury is of a slight make, and now but 21 years old.—United Service Journal.

A letter addressed to Messrs. Fox and Co. of Falmouth, who knew of the steam boat Cape Breton, when she put into on the 2nd Dec., after having been 1200 miles to the westward of Scilly, on her voyage from London to Nova Scotia.

GENTLEMEN—Feeling it a duty incumbent on us publicly to express our high satisfaction, and also gratitude, for the seaman-like conduct and masterly manner in which Mr. Smith performed his duty under the dangerous situation in which we were placed, but rescued by his exertions, we have taken the liberty to send you this letter. During the most tempestuous gale of wind, with the sea running at least one hundred feet above the vessel, appearing every time as if the next coming wave was commissioned to blow her up and all on board by its overwhelming fury, carrying away boats, stanchions, and spars, with her stern bulwarks and the sea washing every man from the wheel, that it became necessary to lash each man alternately to the helm, where they received much injury,—during this trying situation, in the heaviest of the gale or the hurricane, Capt. Smith coolly exited every man to his duty, and stood the whole night by the helmsman, though frequently exposed to great danger, the sea running completely over him. The morning presented a scene of wreck and desolation such as is seldom witnessed and not to be described. Every sail split, fore-yard carried away, the stove, the funnel, upwards of one ton weight, adrift on deck, one of our number lying dead, and others disabled with bruises and fatigue, with upwards of three feet water in the hold, and only two helmsmen to take the wheel alternately every 6 hours—in the midst of all this Capt. Smith calmly performed the ceremony for the dead, and had the body, sewed in a hammock, committed to the deep. He attended to the various duties which then devolved on him with as much coolness as if all had been in perfect safety, having a temporary fore-yard and sails prepared in as fit a state as practicable for scudding before it. Feeling as we are indebted to Capt. Smith for his preservation of the ship and our lives by his skilful conduct throughout, and after arriving before the sea without compass during two long and winter nights, he brought the ship to the land with the utmost precision, seldom leaving the deck by day or night, and attending minutely to the wants of the sick and disabled amongst the crew, we shall be greatly obliged by your inserting this statement to be inserted in the public journals, as a testimony of our esteem and gratitude to him.—Signed "Thomas Chellew, the first mate, and seven of the crew."—Cornwall Gazette.

[We are glad to find that Capt. Smith, whose seaman-like and gallant conduct is so handsomely acknowledged by his crew, is a Commander in the Royal Navy.—Ed.]

DEVONPORT, 31st DEC.—The Starling cutter sailed on Wednesday. The Hunsoake lighter sailed for Falmouth with part of the 37th Regt. for Pendennis Castle, and proceeded on Monday with part of the 32nd Regt. The Firefly steamer arrived from Falmouth on Monday, and towed down the Donegal from the Harbour the next day, and will tow the Terror Bomb to Chatham when ready, which will be in a few days.

The Swallow packet, Lieut. Griffiths, which arrived here on Friday from Falmouth, is ordered to be paid off: the repairs which she requires are very extensive.

The Sailmakers in this Dock Yard have been of late very busy making sails for the various packets at Falmouth.

In Hamooze—Royal Adelaide, Swallow, Firefly, Falmouth, and Sir Charles Malcolm.

A Court Martial was held on Thursday at Sheerness on Capt. Hope, of the Racer, on charges of tooning that ship on shore on the Coast of Labrador; the particulars of which we have given: he was admonished to be more careful of his conduct in future. The Racer will be paid off and re-commissioned. She has been docked, and notwithstanding the thumping she encountered for several days on the rocks, she has sustained no damage whatever, except the loss of a portion of her false keel.

On Friday the Messenger steamer arrived at Deptford, to take in provisions and stores for the frozen-in ships. She will sail immediately with the first lighter on this service; and, if success attends, the Messenger will tow the whalers home; the urgency seems so great, that all parties worked on Christmas day, and, in the evening, the Messenger proceeded for Hull. It is now fifteen months since any of H.M.'s ships have been paid at Chatham.

It is confidently reported that the agency or purveyorship of the wards in Melville Hospital at Chatham, is to be, in future distinct from the Paymaster of Royal Marines, and it is thought Mr. Mark Marsden, Purser of the Ordinary at Chatham, will succeed to this appointment.

The Harlequin yacht, with the body of Lord Vernon, arrived at Falmouth on the 27th ult.

THE NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE AND THE INDIAN ARMY.

SIR,—The officers of our Army were exceedingly gratified at the perusal of the two editorial articles contained in the first and second numbers which were forwarded gratis to the various regiments in the Indian Service. They contain unvarnished facts, splendidly and eloquently illustrated. It has, indeed, ever been a matter of surprise and regret that so powerful and influential a body as the military service of India should have refrained so long from establishing a certain and regular organ for the advocacy of their rights and interests.

Now that we have met with so distinguished and impartial an advocate, who will boldly and fearlessly espouse the cause of the weak and unfriended, in so remote a country, I feel fully persuaded that we shall not experience such cavalier treatment at that black-looking edifice in the city, where you see well-fed jolly-looking porters, with red waistcoats and three-cornered hats, luxuriously reclining in large teak-wood chairs, under the portico of that substantial-looking building. It is ardently hoped that our heart-rending appeals and respectful remonstrances will not meet with so unceremonious a reception as was hitherto the case. Previous to the renewal of the East India Charter, in 1833, scarcely any attention was bestowed on Indian subjects, which is really astonishing, considering there is hardly a family of any respectability in the United Kingdom, at the present moment, that is not, either immediately or remotely, connected with the two Services in some way or other. Substantial information is what the people of England, and, in fact, those of all Europe, now want respecting the institutions—political, military, and moral, of British India. The public have now an ample opportunity afforded them of becoming enlightened, as I am perfectly satisfied that no person possesses greater facilities for analysing those intricate subjects so accurately than yourself. The object which you, Sir, profess to have in view, namely, "to awaken the public to the value of our Eastern empire, and the danger in which it is placed," will, I anticipate, be attained when the mystery is cleared up. I strenuously contend that a Government cannot rest on a very secure and permanent basis when it resists public inquiry.

If the Army is placed in the front rank of discussion, our respective claims, perpetual banishment, and the peculiar disadvantages under which we labour, will probably attract the attention of those official authorities who possess the necessary powers to remedy the acknowledged evils. India is a peculiarly constituted country, and every person who has the remotest knowledge of it, cannot but admit that the Army is the paramount pillar of the State. I feel myself necessitated to remark that the unbounded munificence of the honourable Court, so repeatedly blazoned forth in almost every work that treats on India, is a mere delusion; it is a false light erected instead of a beacon; it emanates from parties who are more or less interested, and who reasonably calculate on obtaining an adequate reward, in the shape of a Writership or Cadetship, for the advocacy of a system which is not adopted in this country. A falling-off in the prices at the Quarterly sales, to the extent of three farthings per pound, would sensibly affect the acute feelings of the honourable legislators in Leadenhall-street. I apprehend that no attack of spasmodic cholera would be the consequence; but a dissatisfied Army, on whom the very fate of the empire solely depends, is a matter of perfect indifference in their estimation. I trust this unpalatable truth will become apparent before the error is irretrievable. Their splendid and gallant Army, consisting of 250,000 men, whose breasts are filled with loyalty and devotion, has invariably been treated as an affair of secondary consideration. This observation is so common that it will be needless for me, on the present occasion, to quote instances to support this assertion. A good cargo of Teak and Indigo would be infinitely more acceptable, and would, unquestionably, meet with a much more gracious reception than a ship-load of officers who had ruined their constitutions in this service. The feelings of a man must be truly enviable, after so actual residence of seventeen and a half or eighteen years in this delicious cool country, on finding himself third Lieutenant in his regiment, with those magical letters "B. C." behind his name!!!

I do not for an instant hesitate to aver that the empire of India never was in a more critical position than it is at the present moment, and I am fully prepared to substantiate this bold assertion by facts and evidence incontrovertible. The "blessings of peace," "friendly alliances," and "cordial assurances," &c., so often promulgated in the British senate do not apply with equal force in this country. The Native Princes cannot, or will not, comprehend those terms,—it is not their object, neither is it in their nature to encourage or cherish those patriotic and ennobling sentiments. A Rajah is treacherous and ungrateful in the extreme; you cannot place the slightest reliance on his most solemn asseverations; to violate a treaty, and to disregard faith, would be a master-piece of policy in his estimation. To corroborate this assertion, I beg to refer to the talented pamphlet written by the late Marquis of Hastings. That illustrious statesman and soldier knew right well that the native character was entirely composed of duplicity, treachery, and intrigue. The conduct of the Peishwa at Poona during the time the Hon. Mr. E. was employed in a political capacity at that Court is so well known, that it need only be mentioned to satisfy the minds of the most incredulous. Let any theorist, whose political creed is diametrically opposed to mine, refer to the working members of our profession, who have had ample opportunities of acquiring a competent knowledge of the resources of the country, and who are acquainted with the feelings and dispositions of the inhabitants in the interior of the country. A thorough initiation into the principles and working of the Indian machinery is not to be accomplished in a year or two; a short residence of two or three years at either of the three Presidencies will add very little to one's stock of information. A superficial observer at the capitals would naturally infer, from the bustle and activity that usually prevail, that everything was going on prosperously; that both Europeans and the Natives were satisfied with their condition. Can appearances be relied on at all times? I reiterate, let the incredulous theorist divest himself of all prejudice, patiently and dispassionately investigate the evidence of gentlemen who are practically acquainted with the principles, details, and operation of our complicated system, and I will venture to affirm that the cause of the discontent will instantaneously appear, and the specific required to allay the symptoms of an alarming and contagious disease. The Government ought, unquestionably, both now and at all times, to act on the broad principle of conciliation to the utmost point that may be consistent with its duty; and it, as unquestionably, ought never to sacrifice its duty to conciliation.

The reduction which has taken place in the Army is appalling in the extreme. I have heard many experienced officers pronounce an opinion that great danger is ultimately to be apprehended from the impolitic General Order of 1820. I cannot conceive how the Company could possibly have had recourse to so hazardous an experiment; no earthly good can possibly accrue from it, with the exception of some paltry saving of 150,000 or 200,000*l.* per annum, a mere drop in the ocean, at the best. The question is this, whether it is wise or in accordance with sound policy to place "the brightest jewel in the British Crown" in jeopardy for the paltry consideration of pounds, shillings, and pence? I boldly maintain that no Government is justified in permitting reductions to have a retrospective effect, provided you were taught to believe, previous to entering the service, that you were to receive such and such stated salaries for the performance of specified duties. We all know that the Army is the worst paid branch of the Service. A just and equitable system of economy is, I am free to confess, indispensably requisite, considering the dubious state of our finances under the operation of the new charter, but, at the same time, set about it judiciously, and with due regard to vested rights and interests. The overgrown salaries of Residents, Commissioners, Collectors, and Judges, appear to be quite overlooked by the authorities at home. The salaries received by some of those gentlemen almost equal the pay of a whole regiment, including officers. I simply wish to inquire why this liberality should be extended to the Civil Service and withheld from the Military? Our prospects are lamentable in the extreme; promotion is quite out of the question now-a-days. An officer obtaining his company after an actual residence of twenty years in this salubrious climate must consider himself fortunate. We are all anxiously looking out for the sanction of the Court of Directors to a plan for a retiring fund, submitted and drawn up in an admirable style by Mr. Curwin, the Assistant-Master in the Mint at this Presidency. We fervently hope that our honourable masters will see the justice and policy of some boon being extended to their military servants, thereby enabling them to return to their native land, with a moderate competency, after a long period of faithful service in a treacherous unhealthy clime. A forcible appeal from your talented pen will indubitably awake the authorities to our gloomy prospects and present deplorable condition.

Your correspondent C. B. is, I fear, much too prejudiced against the Company's officers. I recognise his style of writing, and, if I mistake not, he once held a very pretty command in a delicious coal station in the Western side of India!! You have handled him so effectually that I have but little to add. I fear, Sir, I have trespassed too much on your valuable time already, otherwise I would give publicity to a few startling facts. I will reserve those observations for a future period.

"A. B." A CAPTAIN OF 26 YEARS' STANDING.

Calcutta, 12th Aug. 1835.

[We have sacrificed much to support the Indian Army, and we are willing to persist in our endeavours. We wish there were many such advocates as A. B., but, as we have before said, there is little esprit de corps in many of the Officers who retire from the service, or are on furlough in this country. Much good can be effected by liberal and strenuous exertions.—Ed.]

HELPS AND HINTS FOR THE USE OF SKATERS.

SIR,—To offer you introductory apologies on submitting observations anxiously aiming at the PRESERVATION OF LIFE may partake more of insult to your humane disposition than of obedience to the dictates of courtesy; wherefore I cannot do better than to unfold, even unceremoniously, the reflections which the account of the "Inquest on the bodies of the persons drowned in the parks" produced on a mind which (I must, although reluctantly, add) may hope to lay claim to some qualification to form contrivances likely to lessen similar catastrophes, since, yielding to a natural bias, I have, even for a long series of years, made scientific and inventive pursuits a hobby, which, of late, has become as lucrative as ever it proved amusing. Had I not felt that it is indispensable to secure the CONFIDENCE of your readers before I can hope that my advice, although prompted by humanity, will be attended to, I never could have reconciled these and the following declarations, being much too egotistical; yet, to secure that attention which is desired to recommendations that are suspected of being chimerical, it may be necessary to state that the following are offered by one who both theoretically and practically has supported his pretensions of being able to curtail the dangers and to enhance the pleasures of life,—an assertion borne out, first, by several of his numerous patents; secondly, by the instruction at his highly applauded stadium; and thirdly, by his several publications,—ALL decidedly aiming at the attainment of the several labours for which (by applause much above my deserts) I have been most usuriously rewarded! However, since disinterested anxiety to cause the ADOPTION of the following helps has goaded these particulars from me, I may feel confident that the liberal class of your readers will permit my [illegible] plead in extenuation of apparent boast.

The principal evils that [illegible] remedied, I consider to be two—first and mainly, the generally fatal delay in the application of resuscitating means, a delay which a positive knowledge WHERE to look for the sufferer, whether concealed under ice or covered by water, would curtail VERY materially: at present, many remain under the ice for hours! nay, often they are left uncovered! whilst those that have sunk, mostly are brought up by drags, slow and uncertain in their effect, and, at any rate, liable to inflict severe, perhaps dangerous, lacerations, as recently proved to be the case. Secondly, the difficulty alike of approaching persons surrounded by rotten and fractured ice, and of throwing ropes, &c., to them, of which the last inquest gave woeful confirmations. Yet there is no great difficulty in obviating both these impediments! the contriving of methods which, from their simplicity and cheapness, may enable the poorest skater even, either to make them himself, or to procure them, was the only difficulty, one however which may be exceeded by the obstinacy of the foolhardy, ever ready at bravado, but too often found wanting in the scales of real courage.

To meet the first evil, I advise every skater to procure a good-sized bladder; thereupon to fasten within its neck, and perfectly air-tight, a piece of tube, or even a good-sized quill, so that it may retain air when stopped by a cork, after having been inflated; next, let him form two circular pieces out of either tin or pasteboard, four inches in diameter, in order to fix them firmly on an axis (say three-quarter-inch long between these circles, but projecting a trifle through and out of the centre of each of them), and having previously and securely fastened to this axis the end of a piece of thin, yet tough, webbing, or even of a strong flaxen tape, neither being more than three-quarter inch wide. Now let him wind, closely and neatly, as much of this webbing or tape round the axis as the sides will hold (it will prove from 50 to 60 feet), thereupon to place the projecting ends of the axis of this reel, or sheave, between other circular pieces, but a trifle larger, being of either metal, thin hard wood, or even sole leather; such outer pieces lastly to be connected, near the edges, by from four to six small pieces of wood, either glued, rivetted, or screwed to them; thus to produce a machine not unlike a surveyor's measuring tape, only much cheaper, and open all round, the loose end of the webbing hanging out of it, in order to fasten thereto, at the time of going upon the ice (and after inflating it) the bladder, which, folded up before, occupied but little room in the pocket. This small apparatus should have another piece of webbing fastened firmly to its outside case, in length from fifteen to eighteen inches, that is, additionally to a sound loop at its loose end, the loop being large enough to receive the part of the arm nearest the shoulder, that, after the arm is in the loop, the little machine machine may be introduced at the nearest arm-hole of the waistcoat, and passed out of the other, after having crossed the chest under the waistcoat, thus to fasten the whole to the body in a manner as easy as secure; the machine is now to be deposited either in the coat's breast pocket or between the waistcoat and the coat, always taking care that nothing may impede the winding-off the webbing, wherefore the loose end should be uppermost. The skater having, at his arrival at the skating ground, securely attached the inflated bladder to the end loosely hanging out of the reel or sheave, may commence skating, thus prepared for the worst, throwing the fully inflated bladder either over one of his shoulders, or allowing it to hang below his chest. It will be obvious to the meanest understanding even that his being immersed must cause the bladder to float, thus to wind off by such a resistance as much webbing from the reel as there is distance between the bladder and the unfortunate skater; and whether the latter be hidden under ice, or sunk to a bottom less than the length of the webbing (wherefore it should be between fifty and sixty feet long), buoy-like, this will preserve an indicating communication with the sufferer, and therefore direct, WITHOUT loss of time, WHERE to apply means for his speedy extrication; nay, moreover, a sound webbing, when properly handled and tugged at, may itself not only draw a skater from under the ice, but even to the surface, after he has sunk, since it is well known that very little force is required to move, or to restore buoyance to, an immersed human frame. For similar reasons might this apparatus be made available by young swimmers, who could have the reel in a belt round the chest, and hold the webbing between their teeth, about 8 inches from the bladder, or where aquatic sports, partaking of violence, increase risk.

My remedy for the second evil is not only still more in my own line (gunnery), but is perfectly easy, alike as to preparation and execution. I advise a line, rather than a rope, to be thrown (one of those well-laid signal halyards, which, although light and slight, will draw a great weight along the water); let a sufficient quantity be coiled neatly on a square board, that it may be carried by landsmen without being "fouled," and more readily, the upper end of the line having a ring, such as by sailors is called a thimble, soundly spliced or worked into it; this ring, on its inner diameter, being a trifle less than the calibre of the gun or carbine intended for this service. Let a cylindrical stick be formed of rough, yet light, wood, one third, or one fourth, less in its diameter than the calibre of the gun in question, having a sound cork (tightly fitting the bore of the gun) fixed to one end (easily effected by passing a screw through the cork into the stick, first placing a piece of tin as a "washer," to remain between the screw-head and the cork); this stick, at its other end, should have a light iron ferule with a strong point, about three or four inches long, to receive more or less lead, in moveable pieces, for which reason this point should be tapped, and have a nut to fit the screw, the whole being about four inches longer than the barrel of the gun; and this is the whole apparatus by which such a line can be thrown over a river much wider than the Serpentine, and in the following manner; having settled the charge (which may be increased as occasion may require, but it is infinitely better to increase the load on the stick, aided by additional elevation, if an increased range is sought), the stick is pushed into the barrel, with the cork end pressed down on the wadding, over the charge of powder; the nut and lead having previously been removed from the tapped point, the thimble attached to the end of the line is to be passed over the point, so as to lay on the muzzle of the barrel; the lead and nut are now to be replaced, and only AFTER all this HAS been DONE, and AFTER the coil of line has been inspected, and a little at the top loosened, is the gun to be primed! thereupon to be cocked, and elevated in a direction, as nearly as possible, over the party immersed; it now should be fired steadily, when it will be found that the stick driven out, and always moving with the lead foremost, will slide through the thimble on the muzzle, till the latter is drawn away with, and at the tail of, the flying stick, by the impediment of the cork, thus to carry such a line to no ample distance, and without loss of time. Some signal could prepare persons on the opposite side, not only to take care, but also to assist in securing the stick with the end of the line thus sent over, thereupon easily to be shifted from either or both sides, so as to place it more readily within reach of sufferers, who thus could be drawn to either shore, or to a boat. An iron rod will not do, since it more certainly would sink, and draw the rope under water should it fall short of land or sound ice. Respectable and consistent applicants may rely upon finding me prepared to instruct them, as willingly as gratuitously, in this my mode of throwing a line, provided they can satisfy me that they really are likely to employ such tuition for the public good, and disinterestedly. Similar services would have been offered to the Royal Humane Society, but for the following impediment: having, in April last, officially, by letter (and in terms not only deeply respectful, but, so far from being assuming, perhaps too submissive), made them a tender of certain accommodations, which, besides much trouble, could not fail, if accepted, to have entailed on me a very considerable expense, I was left a considerable time without any reply, at last, not only to receive a verbal, but even a very uncourteous, nay, an offensive one, since it beamed with perfectly gratuitous mistrust, &c.! My respect for this benevolent society as a body, and my gratitude for the philanthropy of its members generally, remains undiminished; nevertheless, although I am bound by liberality to disbelieve that the act of some prejudiced or inimical few can prove the bias of the many, still, having received, and as an official answer, this strange acknowledgment of an offer that not only was prompted by feelings that vibrate in unison with those of that body, but, moreover, have been confirmed by acts which have spurned at economy, and disregarded danger, when lives could be saved, I may hope to escape censure for improper tenacity, or for neglecting the channel most concerned, if I merely hesitate (for resentment I disclaim) to expose myself to similar and uncalled for provocations, whether they were authorised, or exceeding the original authority. The only selfish desire I cherish, is that my name may remain coupled with these little inventions; and why not? since destructive instruments bear their inventor's names, although producing a different recollection with the relatives of sufferers, &c., and a different record also than that, which, too vainly, perhaps, I hope to secure to mine on the tablets of philanthropic utility.

Stadium, Cremorne House, Chelsea, Dec. 29th, 1835.

THE MILITARY COMMAND OF THE CANADAS.

SIR,—Ever since the nomination of the Earl of Gosford as Captain-General of the British Provinces in North America, and the subsequent appointment of Sir Francis Bond Head (rather an extraordinary one, unless done with a view to economy) to succeed Sir John Colborne in Upper Canada, it has been often asked, upon whom the important and extensive military command of the two Canadas devolves. Has it been assumed, as generally happens during the temporary absence of a Governor, by the next senior officer in those provinces, Col. Nicol, of the 66th regt., at Quebec? or is it kept separate, and the reports from the two commands transmitted by the senior officer at each to Major-Gen. Sir Colin Campbell, at Halifax, in Nova Scotia? These are points which have been much discussed by many members of the military profession. It was said that the subject had occupied the attention of the authorities at the Horse Guards, and that orders respecting it had been forwarded to Canada. I believe I am correct when I state that this is the first instance of these two highly important and increasing provinces, since they became British possessions, being without a Governor, either in the one or the other, who was not an officer of high distinction and standing in the British army. When a change of system takes place, much good is expected to result from it; we may therefore hope that the government of those provinces has been placed in the hands of able men, and that they will govern them with integrity and wisdom. A LIEUTENANT ON FULL PAY.

MANNING THE BRITISH NAVY.

SIR,—In your paper of the 19th inst. you have done me the favour to insert my observations upon a subject you seem to consider of some importance, but which, in the estimation of many, will appear perhaps more interesting to myself than to the public.

Emboldened by this courtesy on your part, I may occasionally trouble you with my thoughts upon other matters more immediately connected with the service whose interests you so ably advocate. Hints, thus thrown out, however crude they may appear, will serve, at any rate, as texts for your more able correspondents; and for my part I shall be well satisfied if the suggestions I may hazard should lead, through the medium of other proposals, to any improvement in a profession for which we must all feel so deeply interested.

Although a great deal has of late years been done to render our naval service more perfect, much, I think, still remains to be effected. I am sanguine enough to believe that our present commercial prosperity, as well as our vast dominions, are still capable of being greatly and beneficially extended; for we seem to be the only people who were ever disposed to administer power with reference to the general happiness of mankind.

It is almost trite to remark that an empire, so essentially colonial as ours is, can only be maintained and consolidated by a preponderating naval force, since this alone can give security to trade, or preserve that close connexion between distant settlements and the mother country, so essential to the interests of each. And it is equally clear, I believe, that without colonies our commerce would be at the mercy of foreign custom-house leagues or other jealous combinations of our continental rivals.

I certainly am not sailor enough thoughtlessly to invoke so great a calamity as war, but I think that we should strive to place our navy upon so formidable a footing, as might demonstrate to other nations the impossibility of ever contending with us upon the seas; and this, moreover, would be the surest method for preserving peace.

It seems therefore to be the duty of every one, in any degree connected with the service, to seize such occasions as may offer for making observations which he conceives might prove useful; and with this view I purpose trespassing from time to time upon your attention. It is possible that we may sometimes differ in opinion, but in our objects, at all events, we shall coincide, as I am certain that you are only anxious to promote the general interests of the country, and especially of that branch of the public service, confessedly the most important as well as the most popular.

There are few considerations of greater consequence, whether we view it as a constitutional question, or merely as a measure of defence, than the speedy and effective equipment of our fleets. With the exception, however, of late attempts at registration, and of the improved treatment of sailors on board ships of war, which last has deservedly rendered the service very popular, little has been hitherto attempted towards establishing any permanent system for manning the navy, or even for providing against a sudden emergency.

The supineness of our administration upon this subject seems really astonishing, more particularly because public discussion has almost precluded the possibility of any recurrence to impressment as an ordinary practice for procuring seamen. I am aware that the power of compelling their services is still claimed by the crown, and in the event of any threatened invasion the exercise of it might possibly be acquiesced in. But suppose that we were menaced with some danger apparently less pressing or less manifest; if government, for instance, should receive information of designs which would make a sudden augmentation of our naval force desirable, and if this should happen under an administration who might, for the moment, be unpopular with the people, will any one pretend that under such circumstances impressment would be practicable? And what might not be the consequence if any abortive attempt were made to raise men by means so arbitrary and so odious. These, it may be said, are barely possible contingencies; but surely nothing should be left untried which holds out a promise of enabling us to avoid so dangerous a conjuncture.

If during the twenty years of peace which we have now enjoyed various legislative experiments had been made with this object, we might by this time have matured some scheme which would have secured by law the services of our seamen.

There are many measures, however, which it is quite competent for government to adopt without any further enactments, and which would require no material increase in our expenditure. These, with your permission, I will endeavour to point out in my next. MARIUS.

[If our able Correspondent will turn to our early numbers, he will find that this subject has been most ably and amply discussed, and his preliminary observations even forestalled. He must be aware that two Acts were passed last Session with the obvious intention of doing away with the necessity for Impressment—and it is but reasonable that sufficient time should be allowed for the working of these, before the question is again agitated. To this opinion we pledged ourselves, whilst commenting on the effect to be anticipated from the acts alluded to, in our Gazette of 11th July last; and we think it is but right that we should adhere to our expressed intention. If Marius strikes out any new feature on this subject it shall have ready attention.—ED]

CORPORAL PUNISHMENT IN THE INDIAN ARMY.

SIR,—Lord William Bentinck having abolished corporal punishment in the Indian army, how will the sepoy submit to the resumption of it, if it be true that so impolitic a direction has been given to the new Commander in-Chief, a Tory of Peninsular fame, and known for strict discipline? It is to be hoped that, as Sir Henry Fane is a good officer, although inexperienced in Indian matters, he will surround himself at least with a portion of the Company's officers, and that other points relative to military arrangements have likewise been left discretional with him; and that the Governor-General, with the sanction and approbation of the Leadenhall-street Directory, as well as the Ministerial Board of Control, will bestow some little consideration upon the importance of the subject in all its bearings, as regards our most important colony and that army which forms its safeguard. Experimentalise anywhere but amongst a people who dislike innovation. Look to the example of China; observe the effect of constant changes in Europe. All measures should therefore be well concocted, and acted out with strict and impartial justice. The army of the Company furnish many examples of their dislike to interference with their established customs—as the one alluded to at Vellore, by a Correspondent of yours, attests. It is therefore most essential to the preservation of India, as with the march of intellect and knowledge, is power that the army be kept true to their employers, it being the only check to the power of resistance which the people might any day put in practice. Their commanders should be men of sound discretion, and ready perception, of the Wellington or Napoleon school, with the experience of long Indian service. Such men, having a vital (because their all) interest in the discipline, security, and success of the army, would be slow to recommend anything adverse to the interest of their employers, the East India Company: and surely that Company and his Majesty's Government should evince a determination to do justice to all, and not establish bad precedents at either Presidency, which would become the nucleus of discontent, and increase dissatisfaction amongst the Native forces. You, Sir, evince a decided and impartial interest for all the Services, whether King's or Company's, and every officer must and does feel deeply indebted to you.

TRAFALGAR AND THE NAVY.

SIR,—Finding that your impartial columns are the vehicle through the which I can best convey my sentiments to the public, I cannot remain inactive and indolent, either in fanning the flame, or stirring up the embers of national gratitude towards the heroic veterans of Trafalgar,—towards individuals, many of whom are too modest to urge their own claims, or paint their own pictures,—towards men who have held their life and blood cheap, in comparison with the value of their homes and their country,—towards seamen who looked dangers in the face, and fought with a bravery as invincible as lions,—but who have received more balls from their enemies, than they have either ribands or medals at the hands of their countrymen.

What, Mr. Editor, would the French nation have done, if they, instead of our countrymen, had won the bloody conflict of Trafalgar? This is what they would have done; they would have shouted "Vive les Nation," "Vive le Villeneuve et les braves Marines." Honours would have been heaped on them; gold medals and ribands would have been dangling at their breasts; and this would have been esteemed a slight recompense. The busts of their slaughtered heroes would have been paraded through the streets of Paris; altars would have been raised to their memories; and their names, in letters of gold, would have been emblazoned in the archives of their country.

If this stain be not effaced, and that too, speedily, I hope, every Englishman will feel the disgrace stinging him to the quick. Can we resist the current of our feelings at such a system of forgetfulness as this? Shall the national generosity of the French government surpass us in those genuine sentiments of patriotism, which are the birthright of every Englishman? Shall they teach us the path of public duty and public deserts? The odium is upon us as a nation, until it be removed by the Government who have so long omitted, we know not from what cause, to do justice to the claims of the veterans of Trafalgar.

Lord Minto, who now presides over the Board of the Admiralty, cannot be aware of the situation in which these neglected tars have been placed; and it is time that the veil should be removed from his Lordship's eyes, that he may see that the Army claims only a portion of those national favours they have so well gained; but not the whole of the country's bounty.

"Fiat justitia, ruat coelum," is an excellent apophthegm. Our brave seamen do not grudge the soldiery their well-earned distinctions, but they like "a fair fight and no favour;" and, to use the dying words of their beloved chief, Nelson, "England expects that every man will do his duty;" and she confides in the integrity of Lord Minto for the execution of his.

Lord Bridport once said, on removing from the gangway of his ship, when in action, to the quarter-deck, and who had scarcely arrived there before a 32-pounder carried away the stanchions,—"a very nice miss;" and truly, Mr. Editor, this has been a nice miss, for the Trafalgar lions have been missed altogether.

But we live in a new age, and amongst new men, and hence doubtless arises, in a great measure, the forgetfulness of the old.

If the tide of mental improvement be advancing, and there can be no end of that improvement until reform is carried out into every department of the public service, let that tide be carried into a right channel, and directed to safe and remedial measures.

Is it not monstrous that officers in other branches of the public service should have been maintained in ease and wealth in their various offices, and yet, that the men who covered themselves with unfading glory in Trafalgar, never received even so small an honour as a riband and a medal? Should not the officers who played so prominent a part in that engagement exert themselves more to obtain so trifling, but important, a distinction? The answer must be in the affirmative, and the negatives are none.

Sure I am, Mr. Editor, that the Board of Admiralty would willingly patronise the officers, should they, upon their parts, bestir themselves, unceasingly and diligently, for the procurement of so laudable an object.

Conscious of the firm and unbiassed principles which have ever been supported by you, Sir, and that you will always continue to be the friend of injured merit, I am, &c.

JUSTITIA.

[We have fought hard on this question, and we may shortly have to congratulate the Service that our efforts have not been fruitless.—ED.]

THE FROSTED SILVER BALL FOR INFANTRY CAPS.

SIR,—The extensive circulation of your valuable Journal among the members of the military profession, and the readiness which you have shown in submitting the suggestions or remarks of your various correspondents to the notice of your readers, induces me to submit to your notice the following observations upon the order lately issued from the Horse Guards, for the infantry of the line to wear a round white ball on the top of their caps, instead of the tuft, and the officers to supply themselves with a frosted silver ball. When the continental nations of Europe are so busily engaged in improving the condition, comfort, and character of their armies, it is gratifying to find that the highest authorities with us are not unobservant of what they are doing. The introduction of the white ball (and I believe it has long been adopted in the French army) must by every one be considered as an improvement, and tend greatly to increase the neatness and smartness of the common soldier. This point (certainly a material one) would be much increased if the brass plates now in use in front of the caps were diminished in size, and some smaller and neater pattern adopted. I know not whether the frosted silver ball ordered for officers can be equally commended. It is well known that nothing tarnishes so easily by exposure to the air or by damp. It may answer for inspections or reviews, and when quite new will look well, but for all real practical purposes a white silk ball would be more useful and more lasting. The same objection applies to the brass plates now in use by the officers of the infantry. Were the size of them diminished, and a neater and smaller pattern adopted, I am sure the appearance of the cap would be improved. It is in times like the present that these minute points claim consideration. Should these suggestions of mine appear to you worth attention, and be acquiesced in by any one of my brethren in arms, my object will be attained.

A STRICT MILITARY INQUISITOR.

A RAP AT TRISTRAM.

SIR,—Your bombastic correspondent Tristram, whose effusions afford so much satisfaction and entertainment to your readers, has, I imagine, run a-head of his reckoning whilst commenting upon the formation of Courts-Martial. I have come to this place to overhaul the log he connected with these proceedings and his statements, and I find that the act which regulates Courts-Martial is 22nd of Geo. II. cap. 33, and there is nothing set forth in section 36, articles 9, 12, and 14 (being those which allude to the point) about voted ships. I need hardly inform him that the act passed in 19 Geo. III. does not affect the case, the first (cap. 6) being to authorise the Court-Martial on Admiral Keppel to be held on shore, the other (cap. 17), entitled "an Act to amend 22nd Geo. II. cap. 33," referring only to that part which prohibits members of Courts-Martial from going on shore pending the trial, and the revision of the 12th article of war, under which Admiral Byng suffered. I will call the attention of Tristram, however, to the King's regulations at present in force, dated 1st Jan. 1833, which provide at chap. 2, sec. 4, article 4, as follows:—

"If a Captain shall, under any circumstances, accept the command of a ship or vessel under the sixth rate, he shall, during such command, be considered as a Commander only, superior to all other Commanders, but subject to the orders of all Captains commanding posted ships (except with reference to sitting on Courts-Martial, on which occasion he is to sit as Captain, as if he commanded a rated ship), but this shall not affect his seniority on the list of officers of the navy, nor his rank and command whenever he shall afterwards command a rated ship."

I presume our friend Tristram has overlooked the part I have underlined (now printed in italics) in forming his opinion on this subject, and that he will admit that the Rate does not affect the Rank as regards Courts-Martial. And so wishing him a merry Christmas, I give him this nut to crack.

JAPIT.

ON THE TITLE OF POST CAPTAIN.

SIR,—I send you an extract from the last Quarterly Review, which may perhaps serve as an answer to your Correspondent "Corineus."

29th Dec. SCRUTATOR.

"The origin of this strange term 'post-captain,' now abolished in the Navy, we conceive to be this:—Masters and Commanders, or even Lieutenants, commanding a vessel, though popularly called Captains, have no claim to that title, nor to regular advancement by seniority, but may be promoted to the superior ranks over the heads of their seniors; while the Captain, properly so called, when once placed on the list, took his post, and proceeded to the rank of Admiral by mere seniority, from which there could be no deviation; so that, when an officer obtained that rank, he was said to be posted, that is, placed beyond the reach of favour or other contingencies."

SPECIAL JUSTICES IN THE WEST INDIA COLONIES.

SIR,—Although the superscription may appear somewhat foreign to the subjects usually filling the columns of your valuable paper, yet as the very honourable body, to whose hard case I propose directing your attention, is chiefly composed of gentlemen who have the honour of holding commissions in either the Naval or Military department of His Majesty's Service, you will perhaps not consider a short notice of their arduous duties very irrelevant to the subject on which in general you more particularly treat, nor do I feel that I intrude too much on the liberality with which you have opened your columns to correspondents, when I remember that they are extended not only to communications on Naval affairs, but that the gallant defenders of our country, unconnected for the time although they may be with its wooden walls, ever find a ready means of assistance and protection from injustice or neglect, in the pages of the Naval and Military Gazette.

The delicate and difficult nature of the duties which the Special Justices in our West India Colonies are called upon to perform, in order to establish the first principle of the act of the British legislature for the abolition of slavery, viz. a confidence between master and apprentice; the inadequacy of the salary in [illegible] Islands, some of which are without exception the most extravagant portions of the globe, the enormous expense attendant on the purchase of horses, conveyances, &c., indispensable requisites in the satisfactory execution of their duties, as well as in the attempt, with the small compensation they receive, to maintain the dignity of their station and the respectability of their rank in society, without which the negro would not look upon them with those feelings their situations render it incumbent they should be regarded with, the harass and incessant fatigue which in many of the islands they undergo, where the body is, generally, peculiarly prone to disorder, all (with many other reasons of the same description) have contributed to the death or retirement of the majority of those gentlemen who have been bold enough to brave the battle of climate-rial disorders, and left those few who have been fortunate enough to survive with an [illegible] suffering more or less from the effects of constant [illegible] to a tropical sun. Such, Mr. Editor, being the [illegible] state of the Special Magistrates in the West India [illegible], it remains to be enquired whether, at the time the [illegible]ots were first filled, the gentlemen who accepted [illegible] were made aware of the arduous nature of their [illegible], as well as the outlay they were called on to make, and [illegible]fy were fully prepared at once to enter upon it with [illegible] allowed. I should conceive the reverse to have been the case, from the fact, that the first act for the amelioration of slaves passed in any of the Colonies was sanctioned by the Governor of Jamaica, on or about the 24th of December, 1833, and that the packet, which sailed from Falmouth in the early part of October in that year, bore a considerable number of those gentlemen to that Colony, where they must have arrived in the beginning of the following month. It was this act which in that Colony rendered the duties of the Justices so oppressive, and I need not say that its spirit was followed in every other island, although the regulations somewhat differed in order the better to suit the internal management of each. It was this act (brought forward and passed by the Assembly under the impression, that "half a loaf is better than no bread," and perhaps somewhat naturally in a spirit not betraying [illegible]ARANCE as one of its leading features at finding themselves forced to concede a portion of the authority they had been wont to exercise to a body of gentlemen from the mother country) that compelled the Justices, in one of its clauses, to visit each estate within his district once in every fourteen days, and oftener if required. When you consider, Sir, that at the commencement of the working of the Apprenticeship system there were in that Island only between 25 and 30 Magistrates, some of whom had districts almost as large as the county of Kent, containing perhaps an [illegible]prentice population of from 17,000 to 20,000, and that 300*l.* was the salary allowed, you will not be surprised to learn, that out of the 15 gentlemen, whose names appeared in the first Gazette, two only remain now in the island, one a West Indian, who enjoys the luxury of an easy chair in filling the office of Inspector-General of Police, and therefore with the exception of an occasional sitting at Spanish Town Court, makes his situation a sinecure; and the other, a gentleman who had the good fortune to obtain the town of Kingston for his district, in which he is only obliged by law to hold a court six hours in each day. That the Government did an injustice to the Special Justices by giving sanction to that portion of the act (if such a medley as it is can be termed an act), which rendered the duties of those gentlemen so onerous after they had each expended a large sum in equipping themselves for an appointment which they accepted under very different anticipations; and that, by increasing the salary to a sum still insufficient to meet the exigencies of their situations, they made a very small retribution, I think appears evident enough; and it is with a feeling of confidence that I feel assured I need go no farther than here leave the case in your hands, only lamenting that among the many publications that have lately emanated from the press respecting the present state of the West Indies, no one should have touched on a subject which it is very apparent is not only an injustice to the parties themselves, but is not unlikely to tend towards doing considerable injury to the Colonies, it being a perfect impossibility, while so small a salary is allowed, that the Magistrates can faithfully execute the duties of their office, and that consequently neither the cases of master nor apprentice can possibly receive proper adjudication.

ASSIMILATION OF THE ARMIES OF THE THREE PRESIDENCIES OF INDIA.

SIR,—It has long been matter of astonishment to me, that, while our anxious desire has for some time been evinced to assimilate the three armies of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, they still continue subject to different rules and regulations. If we had occasion to assemble a large army in field service (which I trust we may, and the cause which produces so much discontent and imagined wrongs, would give place to a better feeling), levies would, most probably, be made of a portion of troops from each Presidency, and can you conceive any thing more inconvenient, as well as detrimental to its efficiency, than a brigade composed as follows:—a Brigadier of the Bengal army, a Brigade-Major of the Madras army, a regiment of his Majesty's army, a regiment of the Bombay army. The Brigadier, the Brigade-Major, each regiment, being subjected to different rules and regulations! The same applies to troops of different Presidencies stationed in the same garrison, and officers on leave at other Presidencies, who are, of course, liable, through ignorance of its regulations, to be frequently at fault.

The regulations of the Madras army are dated 1806, thirty years old! and they have been cancelled and re-made so often by the volumes of General Orders which have since appeared, that it is impossible to follow them. Each succeeding Com.-in-Chief has given a finishing touch to the orders of his predecessor, frequently making a distinction without a difference, which admitting of various interpretation, has rendered them almost unintelligible, and an officer has to wade through the whole of the six folio volumes of General Orders, besides a quantity of circular letters, before he obtains the information he desires.

Now would it not be better to compile a new book of "Rules and Regulations," similar to the King's, as far as practicable, by which we should have both services and the three armies disciplined on the same system.

I may say the same regarding our dress and equipments, which, with the exception of the infantry, are very different in each Presidency, and none like the King's troops (infantry excepted again). Although some years have elapsed since a complete change was made in his Majesty's army, only our infantry have been ordered to conform to it, and although the British army are clothed in scarlet, because it is our national colour, the cavalry of the Indian army pertinaciously continue their foreign aspect in French grey, of which there are 100 different shades, and no two officers ever have the same. The last orders of the Madras army on dress are dated 1822 (except for the infantry), and I give the following as a specimen of their defects.

"The cavalry appointments are ordered to be made "agreeably to a pattern lodged in the Adjutant-General's office." I need hardly add, that, as the patterns are only to be known by viewing them at the Adjutant-General's office, every regiment is different, although meant to be exactly alike. The horse appointments are not even mentioned, hence the general complaint of the difficulty experienced by Cadets for the Madras Cavalry in providing themselves with appointments of the proper patterns, which is very hard, considering their enormous price. (The uniforms and accoutrements cost about 150*l.*)

Would not a book of "Regulations for Dress," assimilating the three armies of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, like that for the King's service, be equally beneficial to our ensure uniformity, and be the means of saving officers on cadets proceeding to India from unnecessary expense owing to their ignorance of the exact patterns, without being furnished with the power of knowing them?

AN OFFICER ON FURLOUGH.

* Tristram's first letter is in type, but we regret that the pressure of other subjects compells us to postpone its publication till next week. The following are also in type: "X. Y. Z.;" "A Post Captain" on the Packet Question; "V. S. P." "A Constant Reader;" and "Phi theorus."

Graceful compliment.—When Marshal Tallard was taken a prisoner in England, he passed some time with William Cavendish, Duke of Devonshire. His compliment at his departure was expressed in these terms: the Duke,—"My lord, when I come hereafter to compute the term of my captivity in England, I shall leave out the days of my enjoyment at Chatsworth."

In the district of Appein, in Silesia, a woman, aged 100 years, hung herself lately. All her family having been successively conveyed to the tomb, she laboured under the idea that God had forgotten to call her out of the world.

Burke assigned the copyright of his celebrated work on the "Sublime and Beautiful" to Dodsley, Feb. 1757, for twenty guineas, with a proviso of a further payment to the author of ten guineas, should it reach a third edition. The assignment sold recently for [illegible] pounds.

It is a remarkable fact, that the Duke of Wellington closed his career, technically speaking, before Marlborough commenced his. Wellington gained the battle of Waterloo at the age of forty-six.

The Women of India.—A woman is getting old at five-and-twenty, and at forty too often becomes a perfect hag. That exquisite roundness of limb, which is a general characteristic—a beauty rare in other countries, but common throughout India, where no raw-boned clumsy, angular women are to be seen—is lost either in a skeleton-like meagreness or in an incumbrance of fat. It would be difficult to imagine anything more hideous than a very old woman in any part of Hindostan. Some of the men, together with a venerable appearance, preserve the remains of former good looks; but the women are altogether frightful—impersonations of witches, the most withered and revolting description. A few, however, notwithstanding the loss of every outward attraction, retain a strong influence over the minds of the other sex.—Asiatic Journal.

A Gentleman mixing in Society.—"Who is that gentleman who has just ordered his seventh tumble of punch? He seems to be a member of every Club in London." "I believe he is, but I forget his name; he is evidently a person who mixes a good deal in society."

Great Issue of New Publications.—So rapid is the publication of new and sterling literary productions by such writers as Hook, Marryat, James, Grattan, Trollope, Jameson, the two Bulwers, and others of equal celebrity, that we are requested to call the attention of our readers to the very cheap and ready mode of procuring them through the admirable New Library System, just planned, and conducted by Mr. Edward Bull, the librarian of 19 Holles-street. His system not only ensures all the New and Standard Works for perusal 24 volumes at a time, for Six Guineas the year, but allows to every subscriber any of those new works he may wish to possess, to the amount of Two Guineas, and provides them also with catalogues and boxes free of expense. A new system is also planned for supplying societies and book clubs in all parts of the kingdom from Bull's Library; and the public, to avail themselves of its advantages at the beginning of the new year, should address their orders forthwith to Mr. Bull, the Librarian, 19, Holles-street.

The new Christmas game called The Heiress or Six Suitors, is highly amusing, and likely to become exceedingly popular. The game represents the caprices of a lady, who is surrounded by eight devoted aspirants, to each of whom is assigned a separate road to the temple of his ambition, and much amusement and speculation are produced by the numerous perplexities into which the fair one leads her unhappy suitors. It may be played as a round game or by two persons only.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 2, 1836.

THE report of an intention to effect a complete alteration in the mode of remuneroting Pursers, which first appeared in the Hampshire Telegraph, has produced great excitement and no small discussion amongst Naval Officers. We are, however, gratified to learn, that, should the measure (as proposed) be carried into effect, it will give very general satisfaction. We believe the Government have had it in contemplation for some years to better the situation of Pursers on Half-Pay, and more particularly to equalise the condition between those employed and unemployed.

During the war, when but few Pursers existed who were not provided with ships, the anomaly in this respect was not so great; their profits were generally admitted to amount to from 20*s.* to 30*s.* per man per annum for every person victualled, and advancement to higher rates was speedy; but the peace was accompanied with greater distress to this, than any other class of public servants under the Crown; for nearly nine-tenths of them were suddenly reduced from comperatively lucrative situations to the miserable pittance of half-pay, allotted by Order in Council; the first 100 on the list having 5*s.*, the next 200 4*s.*, and the remainder only 3*s.* per diem!!! and when it is borne in mind, that the junior of the first hundred on the list has upwards of thirty years' service, and the junior of the last class more than twenty-five years' service, it is not to be wondered at that the large majority, who had no interest by means of which to get employed, or to whom no sufficient opportunity had been afforded to effect savings when in employment, should be overwhelmed in poverty;—there were few to pity them however, as the system of Purserage was viewed with little complacency either by officers or seamen, for sweeting the Purser (that is wasting the necessaries he supplied) was looked upon as, if not a meritorious act, certainly a good frolic, so long as the remembrance of the system in force previous to 1797 endured. After nearly twenty years of complaint and remonstrance, however, the Admiralty thought proper to consider the case, and some measures were designed for increasing the half-pay of the unemployed out of the profits of those in active service. It was ordered that the amount paid for savings should be limited to tenths instead of eighths, thus depriving the one party of a fifth of their usual receipts, and appropriating the abstracted portion to a fund out of which the half-pay of the remainder was to be increased. Now, the principle of Purserage and the payment of these Officers by savings we have always thought to be radically wrong, and we are not singular in this opinion. Hence the excitement the announcement of intended alteration has produced.

We consider that it would greatly add to the respectability as well as the efficiency of this class of Officers, and certainly to the Service at large, if they were paid a fixed salary, according to the rate they served in, and the responsibility they incurred in charge of the provisions and victualling,—that when unemployed the amount of half-pay, to the first hundred on the list, should be at least 7*s.* per diem, the next three hundred 6*s.*, that all who had served eight years, whether in their probation as Clerks or Pursers, should be entitled to 5*s.*, and the remainder to 4*s.* per diem. We divide them into four classes, because we conceive that when a man has devoted eight years of his youth to a profession, and is willing to serve when called on, or able to do so, he is justly entitled to a reasonable remuneration, and we have limited the lowest class to 4*s.*, because it might so happen that those comprised therein had not served in the Navy eight years, a Clerk being eligible to be made Purser after (we believe) three years' service. That some measure of this kind must soon be adopted we do believe, but knowing the great difficulty of effecting alterations in any branch of the public service, we are not so sanguine as our worthy contemporary the Telegraph, who concludes the matter as already done. There are many things, however, in favour of the measures being completed, for, taking the present savings of a Purser in first rates at from 1,000*l.* to 1,200*l.* per annum, and the proposed pay being limited to the half of this, a calculation will show that, supposing from eighty to a hundred vessels to be in commission, the savings (proportionately less of course in smaller vessels) will amount in peace to several thousands per annum, and in time of war to one hundred thousand! this of itself is a powerful inducement for adopting a beneficial measure, but we have also the conviction that the First Lord of the Admiralty and his advisers are earnestly and sedulously engaged in the consideration of several improvements in Naval Departments, both Civil and Military; and we hope that even economy (which has already been carried too far) will not be allowed to influence their decisions when matured, or to stand in the way of palpable improvements. In the case under notice, as the Pursers' balance books are easy of reference, a calculation could be made (taking an average of years) which would not only show very nearly the sum expected to be saved, but also act as a check upon Pursers in charge of provisions; but the necessaries we think should still be provided by the Purser, because we consider it would be attended with enormous expense to the public to provide depots of candles, lanthorns, &c., on foreign stations to meet the demand; and that it could be effected cheaper by the Purser's providing them as heretofore, a sufficient allowance being granted for that purpose.

We shall return to this subject, which we consider of high importance, at an early opportunity.

IN the event of any change in the Administration being likely to occur, as some of our contemporaries have stated to be the fact, but which we in no degree credit, unless perhaps it may be a few partial ones, we sincerely hope that, for the welfare of the NAVY and of the NATION, such changes will not extend to the ADMIRALTY; for the constant movements in this department are of serious injury to the Naval Service; the matured plans of one Board being upset by its successor, before it has been possible to carry them into execution. Our desire that no change should take place in the present Board is increased, from our knowledge that the general acts of Lord Minto have already given much satisfaction, as has his courtesy towards every Officer who has waited upon him, and moreover, we believe, that alterations are contemplated which will still further gratify the Navy, and prove of great advantage to its interests.

THE plan proposed by Mr. Curtis for a Retiring Fund for the Indian Army has been rejected by the Court of Directors as IMPRACTICABLE. This decision might have been foreseen after the recent regulation granting Pensions for length of Service. We also hear, from some of the old Officers at home, that the intention entertained a few weeks since of establishing a Retiring Fund, and for which object a Committee was formed in London, has been given up as hopeless.

THE following ships have been ordered to be brought forward as demonstration ships:—At Portsmouth, Benbow and Pembroke, seventy-fours; Madagascar and Samarang, frigates. At Plymouth, Implacable, seventy-four; Kent and Donegal, seventy-eights; defaults of Stag, frigate, to be made good. At Sheerness, Blenheim and Hawke, seventy-fours. These, added to the ships already in commission (effective guard ships included), will place a very strong fleet at the disposal of Government should occasion arise, and is but a necessary precaution whilst France and America are arming.

SINCE we offered our remarks on the COAST GUARD SERVICE we have had the satisfaction of finding that several of our contemporaries, and numerous of our correspondents, have warmly supported our opinions on this subject, particularly as regards the fairness and justice of giving to each Captain and Commander a five years' turn only in these advantageous appointments.

One of the journals to which we allude has further suggested that which we are sure cannot but meet the approbation of the First Lord of the Admiralty, as well as of every one connected with the Navy; this is, that whenever the contemplated changes may be made in this establishment those Officers, who have already had a tour of service in it during the last ten or fifteen years, should not again receive this boon until every other who has claims and pretensions to his country's favour that has never yet been thus employed, has had his tour also; by which just arrangement every Post Captain and Commander on the list may hope at length to become a sharer in those advantages. We are the more induced to repeat and to support this fair suggestion, because we have been shown that many POST CAPTAINS have formerly belonged to the COAST GUARD SERVICE for several years, and likewise that some Commanders have been preferred twice, if not thrice over, as Inspectors, to the manifest injustice of their brother Officers of equal, and, in many cases we believe, of far superior merits and claims.

A happier era has at last arrived, we confident rust, under which FAIRNESS and EQUITY will be duly administered to every Officer, according to the services he may have rendered to his country, wholly regardless of any private influence, or Parliamentary weight, that may be sought, by which to overcome such well-grounded preten-sions.

THE more we dwell on the serious disasters which are constantly befalling our Merchant shipping, the more do we feel impressed with the absolute necessity of some immediate Legislative enactments for the better security of the lives and properties of our fellow-subjects, who are thus exposed to such shameful risks on the high seas,—risks not arising from natural causes, such as storms and unavoidable incidents, but from the notorious unseaworthiness of the vessels in too many instances, and in others from the evident want of skill and experience in the officers belonging to them.

To remedy the first of those evils, SWORN SURVEYORS, men of honest principles, duly qualified for this important trust, should be appointed in all the ports of the United Kingdom, where there are Collectors of the Customs, and the certificates of these Surveyors should be lodged in the Custom House before any vessel should receive her clearance from the port. To correct the second, we again repeat, that every man, destined to take the office of Master or First or Second Mate in any ship or vessel, should undergo a strict examination before the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House, or before other persons authorised by them, touching the qualifications of such Masters and Mates in seamanship, navigation, &c., and the certificates, shewing that they had undergone such examination, should be lodged by these persons with the Collector of the Customs at the port where the ship to which they belonged was lying, and no ship or vessel should receive a clearance until the officers belonging to her had fulfilled this regulation.

Much has been said of late respecting the loss of the two convict ships, the Neva and George the Third, near Van Diemen's Land, but as both these vessels were stranded on ROCKS we cannot see how their being thus wrecked can have any thing to do with their unseaworthiness, unless it is intended to be argued that newer and stronger ships would have held together longer, and thereby have enabled the unfortunate people on board of them to have saved their lives. So far we admit, that if it be proved that these vessels were old and unseaworthy, it is possible that better ships might not have broken up so soon, if at all, and thereby many more persons, and perhaps the whole of the convicts, might have got on shore from them; and, as regards those ships striking upon these shoals, which are said to have been well known dangers, this may have arisen from the unusual set of a current, which consequently could not have been calculated upon, but this also remains to be proved, for if this cannot be shown, it will of course be fairly maintained that there must have been some neglect or want of skill in those who had the charge of navigating these vessels, but until we learn the whole of the facts it would not be just to condemn these persons, and therefore on this point we will say no more at present.

We must next allude to a class of traders where the loss of property and of life is of constant occurrence; we mean the timber ships returning laden from America. Of these we find, in one newspaper only of last week, the names of no less than SEVEN having been lost at sea within a fortnight, together with the sacrifice of many lives, and the indescribable sufferings of the crews. The names of those vessels are, the St. David, of Plymouth, of which we spoke in our last number; the Civilian, of Hull; the Harmony, of Newcastle; the Duckenfield, of Scarborough; the Britannia, of Cork; the Despatch, of Bideford; and another, seen by the Priam, of Plymouth, waterlogged, but whose name she could not discover. To this melancholy number LLOYD'S LISTS, for the last month, add several others. With these facts before us, does it not become manifest that means ought to be devised to prevent the recurrence of such lamentable evils, and that ships employed in this hazardous trade should no longer be suffered to be, as they now too generally are, old worn-out vessels that have been deemed unfit for the employ, or which they were originally built; but that the timber ships should henceforward be strongly built vessels, expressly for this trade; and, moreover, that care should be taken by the Collectors and other proper officers at the ports where these vessels take in their cargoes, that they never be suffered to overload, as is now very frequently the practice we are informed, whereby the cupidity of the Master, who, most likely is part owner of the over-insured ship, causes the loss of the lives of his passengers and crew? Our only motive in submitting these remarks is with the hope that they may meet the early attention of His Majesty's Government, every member of which, we are well assured, must partake with us in those feelings of humanity, which have dictated these suggestions, for the better preservation of the lives of our valuable seamen.

IT has been with much satisfaction that we have just learnt, that the Government have commenced a course of strict inquiry throughout all the seaports of the kingdom, relative to our different fisheries, in order, no doubt, to frame the necessary laws for their better protection in the approaching Session. When we consider the vast importance of these valuable nurseries for our seamen, it must be evident that every possible encouragement should be given to them; whereas, we are most sorry to know that of late years they have been generally disregarded; and this too whilst France and America are wisely continuing to do their best to encourage all their fishing establishments, both at home and abroad.

On the coasts of Newfoundland, where, to our shame be it spoken, the exclusive use of the very best fishing stations were ceded to one of those powers (France) at the peace, French vessels regularly resort every season, and our former rival sent twelve thousand men and boys there last year. The Americans, in like manner, have another excellent part allowed them, and constantly employ numerous vessels in this fishery. At home, likewise, France manifests the same zeal in promoting similar nurseries for her future fleets;—every large boat that leaves their ports to fish for mackarel, &c., in the Channel, is compelled to carry from eighteen to thirty men and boys, according to her tonnage, and they have several hundreds of these fishing vessels thus employed; whereas our principal fisheries in the Channel is in trawl vessels, carrying from three to four men and boys only, and we believe there are not a hundred of these trawlers altogether, for by the shamefully illegal system pur-sued in these vessels, of using meshes for the bottom of their trawls so small that a shrimp even cannot escape, whilst the law directs that each mesh shall not be less than two and a half inches square, they destroy millions of the young fry every day, together with the spawn also, and thus the trade of a fisherman with us is fast on the decline as no longer bringing a livelihood. This positive fact is known to every sea-faring man in the west of England, where the greater part of the trawl vessels belong, and it is the constant subject of complaint with every person who witnesses the shameful violations of the existing laws on this head.

Until new statutes can be framed we would earnestly advise that means should be at once taken to put the present laws strictly in force, by ensuring directions to be given to the officers of the different Custom Houses, as well as to all the Coast Guard Officers and the Commanders of Revenue Cruisers to see that the Acts of Parliament, relative to our fisheries, including those about the fishing-nets, trawl-nets, &c., be rigidly attended to, and, in order to encourage those officers to a close regard to these duties, they should receive all the fines levied for violations of these laws. Above all, a sum cutter, or schooner, belonging to Government should constantly be stationed to watch and cruize with the trawl vessels, in order to see that they do not come nearer to the shore, when their trawls are down, than the law now in force prescribes, and which we believe to be full six miles, for it is in approaching the coasts so closely as they do, sometimes within half a mile, particularly in the spring of the year, that they destroy the spawn, which has been deposited in the sands by the different species of fish, breaking it up before it has reached maturity:—and thus, on the decks of the trawl vessels, buckets full of this glutinous mass may constantly be seen at every haul of the trawl.

That a remedy ought to be applied forthwith to these serious abuses every lover of his country, who must regard our fisheries as one of the principal nurseries of our NAVY, will, we are sure, maintain; and we will hope, that the facts which we have now but faintly shown may meet the eye of some one Member of the Government, who can so far immediately apply the loudly-called-for corrections, by ordering those measures to be adopted without delay, which we have submitted, and which can be successfully carried into execution without any additional cost whatever to the nation, and with very little extra duty on the part of the officers above named, who, as we have said, should be commanded to enforce those clauses in the present Acts of Parliament for the preservation of our fisheries, which will in a great degree, if not wholly, put an end to the unlawful and highly injurious practices of which we complain.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE FROM SPAIN

General Evans, by a movement not more happy than judicious, had succeeded in baffling the designs of the Carlists assembled in great force across the Biscay Mountain to oppose his advance from Bilbao upon Vitoria, and by taking a circuitous route, through defiles and over mountains hitherto deemed accessible only to Guerillas, utterly disconcerted the plans of his enemies. The march from Bilbao to Briviesca, in the neighbourhood of Burgos, a distance of thirty-three Spanish leagues over a country offering obstacles which nothing but the zeal and determination of the British soldier could surmount, cannot fail to stamp the character of General Evans as an able tactician in the eyes of competent military judges. Our space does not admit of entering minutely into detail. On the 8th Nov. the head-quarters reached Briviesca, seven leagues from Burgos, where Cordova, whose army lay echelloned along the road from Vittoria to Logrono, came over to meet and congratulate his ally on the able and efficient manner in which his junction with him had been effected. He returned the same day. At Briviesca the army halted for a fortnight, to restore the strength and organisation of the men, in some degree affected by their long and harassing march. General Evans himself had been for upwards of ten days confined to his room by indisposition resulting from fatigue and anxiety of mind. He had, however, sufficiently recovered to be enabled to leave Briviesca for Vittoria on the 30th November. On the 1st Dec. the head-quarters reached Miranda, and on the 2nd the whole of the legion entered Vittoria, amid the shouts and vivas of the inhabitants, the avenues leading to the town and the streets of the town itself being lined with troops from Cordova's army, paying all due honours to their brethren in arms. No interruption was offered by the Carlists, who from a distance beheld the long line of march with feelings of vexation that may well be imagined. On Sunday the 5th, Cordova inspected the legion outside the town, and at no great distance from one of the enemy's advanced posts. He was attended by a brilliant and numerous staff, which, added to that of General Evans, gave an eclat to the scene. Several manœuvres were performed with excellent order and precision, and the whole terminated with a volley and the charge. On the same evening a ball was given at the theatre to the British Officers, at which Cordova, Espartero, and General Evans were present. There was, moreover, a grand display of fireworks.

On the morning of the 7th Dec., the date of our correspondent's letter, Cordova left Vittoria to join his head-quarters. His army, exclusive of the British troops, may be estimated at 30,000 men, well clothed and armed, and all eager for an encounter, which it was expected would soon take place, as the Carlists were concentrating their forces about four leagues from Vittoria: they had already assembled fourteen battalions. We fully expect our next account will bring intelligence of some important action.

During the recent military display at Kaligeb, Sir Henry Bethune appeared at one of the reviews. The Emperor of Russia, as soon as he heard of his presence, and observed him speaking in their own language to some Persian troops, issued his mandate that he should leave the town at six o'clock on the following morning! Sir Henry remonstrated, but all in vain. Persons were sent to the house where he slept, before the appointed hour, to assist him in making the necessary preparations, and to see him set off.

Mr. John Smith, Vice-Treasurer of Ireland, died last Tuesday in Dublin, very suddenly, from a putrid sore throat. He was about 65 years of age, and had been in Government employ nearly fifty years. Mr. Smith commenced his career as a temporary clerk in the Irish House of Commons, and on being transferred to the Exchequer gradually rose to the head of the department. The salary of Vice-Treasurer is 1,200*l.* a-year.

The Euphrates Expedition.—Accounts from the Euphrates expedition to the 6th Oct. have been received, at which date Colonel Chesney was just recovering from a severe fever. The larger steamer was afloat, and it was expected would be on her way towards Bussorah in a few more days. She was launched on the 26th Sept., broadside on, from a height of 23 feet, at an angle of 27 degrees, along three slips, and went off in good style, with the Turkish, Arab, and English flags flying, amidst the firing of guns and rockets, and to the astonishment of the natives to see iron float. Colonel Chesney had again met with unexpected difficulties on the part of the authorities; but, according to every expectation, he hoped to get both the steamers ready. It was his determination to proceed, however, with one only, as soon as it should be completed. Lieut. Lynch was just returned from a mission to the Arabs. He was sent expressly to counteract the intrigues set on foot to embarrass the expedition, and, according to all appearance, had been very successful.

Captain Aske, known as the author of "The Spirit of the Link," and other publications, died last week at Bath, at an advanced age. "His whole life," says a provincial journal, "was one continued series of struggles with misfortune, and he ended his days in utter destitution and want."

Lord Vernon arrived at his residence in Wilton-crescent on Tuesday evening from Falmouth, where he landed from the Firefly packet from Gibraltar. His Lordship was loudly cheered, and addressed his constituents in an animated speech.

The collections made under the King's letter on behalf of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel amount to upwards of 50,000*l.*

Port of London.—In 1823 the shipping which entered the London Docks presented an aggregate amount of 164,086 tons, the largest tonnage entered down to that period. In 1827 the opening of the St. Katharine's Docks raised a new competition; notwithstanding which the tonnage that entered the London Docks in the year just now expiring is 164,448 tons, exceeding that of 1823; and as the stock of the other docks has also greatly increased in value in the course of the year, it would appear that while the trade to London has increased, the docks have also become places of more general resort. The gross tonnage of British shipping, which entered the port in the year ending Nov. 30, 1834, was 700,416 tons; of the year ending at the like period of 1835, 737,780 tons; an increase of upwards of 37,000 tons.

Yesterday week the inhabitants of Woolwich were thrown into some alarm, in consequence of a riot with a party of the Horse Artillery and Marines at the Marquis of Granby public-house. In a short time some hundreds of persons were on the spot, and a number of watchmen, but the civil power being inadequate to quell the disturbance, a party of the guard was sent for from the Arsenal, which was immediately in attendance, and succeeded in restoring order, after taking thirteen artillerymen and four marines to the guard-room. Several soldiers are seriously injured, the horse-artillerymen having used their drawn swords. It is but justice to state, that the marines delivered up their bayonets to the landlady before they commenced fighting.

He obtained the cross of the legion of honour for his gallant conduct in the unfortunate engagement of La Macta, on the 28th of June. Having lost his horse in the charge in which Col. Oudinot, he gained possession of that of an Arab whom he slew; on this he managed to throw the corpse of his deceased Colonel, and bring it safe to Oran.

Theatres.

Covent-Garden.—The pantomime at this house has proved a decided hit; it is entitled Harlequin Guy Fawkes; or, the Fifth of November. The introductory portion of the pantomime is founded on the attempt of Guy Fawkes to blow up the King and Parliament, and is judiciously managed; the only indifferent scene is that in the study of the Astrologer, Sir Francis Moore. The view of the mansion and gardens on the banks of the Thames, where the conspiracy is planned, is an excellent scene, both as regards the scenery and the fun of the scene. The tricks and changes are all highly amusing, and though not all entirely new, they tell admirably. The effect of the on the Archery Warehouse and Butcher's Shop is clever conceived, and was extremely well executed; the blow was very effective, and is one of the best pantomime scenes we have witnessed for some time. The view of the Dome of St. Paul's by moonlight, from the top of an adjacent house, is a well executed scene. The introduction of the Chips of the Old Block is a happy conceit, and occasioned much laughter. We cannot bestow any great praise on either the Harlequin, Clown, Pantaloon, or Columbine; we think a better Columbine might be found among adies of the corps de ballet. The pantomime has drawn crowded houses during the week. We think it is the best pantomime of the season as far as regards the fun. Great things are expected from Miss Faucett, who appears as Julia, in the Hunchback, on Tuesday next. She will be supported on the occasion by Mr. Kemble and Sheridan Knowles. If she makes a hit, it is the intention to raise the prices of the dress boxes.

QUEEN'S.—This theatre re-opened on Saturday evening, under the sole management of Mrs. Nisbett, and from the variety of entertainment produced it appears to be the intention of the fair widow to carry on the concern with spirit. There were no less than four new pieces on the first night, all of which proved successful. Mrs. Nisbett appeared in a new two act comedy entitled Is she a Woman? and sustained the principal character, that of a lady addicted to field sports. The aim of the piece is to expose the folly of a young and beautiful lady of rank indulging a taste for fox-hunting. Her lover, Captain Cleveland, who has been absent for more than five years, is informed of her singular pursuits, and is determined to expose her folly to her. With the assistance of his servant Frank, he induces his uncle, Sir George Seymour, to believe that the lady had changed names with her brother, Hector Butler. The lady's masculine manners, and her brother's effeminate conduct, furnish evidence of the deception. This leads to several scenes full of life, bustle, and amusing equivoque, and the piece concludes to the satisfaction of all the parties, including the audience. This is a lively and agreeable production—the dialogue is extremely pleasant and smart, and the situations are good. This comedy has decidedly been written for the performers who act in it, and they do it every justice. The Lady Caroline Butler of Mrs. Nisbett was perfect; she was loudly and deservedly applauded throughout the piece, particularly for the admirable style in which she describes a fox-chase; this was a decided hit. Her brother Hector was cleverly acted by Oxberry; the part is well suited to this actor's peculiarity—the contrast was excellent. Cleveland found a very able representative in Parry, it was a clever and gentlemanlike performance, full of spirit and vivacity; he looked and dressed the character admirably, and was well rewarded for his exertions. The part of Frank was assigned to Mr. Penson who made his debut on this occasion before a London audience; he is a lively, bustling actor, is well acquainted with the business of the stage, and promises to become a favourite—he played his part well. Sir George found an able representative in Aylife. The comedy has been played every evening since with great applause. The pretty tableaux vivants from Lady Blessington's "Flowers of Loveliness," ought to be seen by all the town. The French dancers are clever artistes. Mdlle. Eliza is the best dancer at present in London, and Madle Agate is also a dancer of some pretensions. The new two act drama of Patrick the Foreigner, is from the pen of Mr. Jones who personated the part of Patrick. This gentleman has acquired a fair reputation as an actor among the good people of Edinburgh. His performance on this occasion was not such as to entitle him to our favourable notice; we think he acted imprudently in selecting an Irish part for his debut; his brogue is bad, and he lacks the spirit and animation necessary for the representation of such characters. He is to appear as Puff in the Critic, on Monday, when we hope he will prove more successful.

ADELPHI.—Mrs. Stirling, from the Birmingham Theatre, has succeeded Mrs. Nisbett in the part of Biddy Nutts in the Dream at Sea. Mrs. Stirling is but an indifferent substitute for Mrs. Nisbett in this part; indeed, we think Miss Vincent would have played the character far better. Mrs. Stirling was a great favourite at Birmingham, but her acting is not of that character to call forth more than limited praise: there is a great deal of country rust that wants rubbing off. We must say she sadly disappointed us; we were induced to expect something very superior in her acting, from the numerous startling puffs that preceded her appearance. She will, we doubt not, be found a useful member of the company. The new [illegible] mime is entitled The Elfin Queen; or, the [illegible] Fairies, and has been produced with great magnificence and splendour. The introductory portion of the piece is extremely amusing, and affords an opportunity for the display of some very beautiful scenery and superb dresses; [illegible] the best are the views of "the Doleful Dell" and the "Gaelic Saloon." In the latter, several excellent dances are introduced; in a pas de quatre we were particularly pleased with the dancing of Miss Daly and Miss Vincent. The military pas de trois, by Mesdames Griffiths, Lane, and Josephine, also deserves most favourable mention. In the pantomime there are several capital scenes full of life and fun; indeed the game is kept alive tolerably well from beginning to end. The scene at the card maker's was not good; we expected to have seen better tricks with the cards at this house. The Harlequin of Mr. Gibson is a truly wonderful performance; he is by far the best we have seen for many years; several of his feats were really astonishing. The Clowns, Columbines, and Pantaloon are all entitled to praise for their great exertions. The Pantomime was well received, and will, we think, prove attractive.

OLYMPIC.—A very amusing burletta called Barbers at Court has been produced at this house, since our last notice, and proved successful. The piece is smartly written, the situations are good—and the acting excellent. Liston and Keeley, as the Two Barbers, keep the audience in one continued roar of laughter. The new grand mythological burletta is called "the OLYMPIC PIC-NIC; and is from the pen of Mr. Sam. Lover. In point of scenery, dresses, and decorations, this is by far the most splendid piece ever produced at this theatre. The subject has not been well handled by Lover, there is nothing pointed or smart in the dialogue, and the parodies are all flat and ineffective. Mr. Lover has sadly disappointed us, we expected a vast deal of fun and amusement from his OLYMPIC PIC-NIC. He has held his scene In Nubibus, and we really believe he must have been either there, or in a fog, when he wrote the piece—for he has regularly (to use a theatrical phrase) "missed his tip." The arrival of the Gods and Goddesses to the Pic-Nic, is very cleverly managed, and produces a fine effect. We regret that Madame should have gone to such an enormous expense with so poor a piece. The scenery by Mr. Hilliard is of a very superior order. The scene of the "Studio of Apelles" and the view in the "Island of Crete" are gems. The fair widow is the representative of Psyche, has little to do but look lovely, and that, of course, she cannot help doing. Mr. Jupiter will do well to sing in tune; he ruthlessly murdered the beautiful air from The Siege of Rochelle. The house was crowded to excess. We hope soon to see Vestris in some smart little musical burletta.

We must omit our notice of the Christmas Novelties, at the other theatres, from want of space. Drury Lane, the Lyceum, and Victoria have each a Pantomime; at the St. James's there is a new burletta of very slight pretensions, called "Rasselas;" or, the Happy Valley; it has not proved a happy hit.

REPORT ON THE STATE OF THE NEVA.

THE Comptroller of the Transport Service commences his report by observing, that the circumstances which led to the loss of the Neva convict ship can only be known from the master and survivors of that melancholy catastrophe, on their arrival in England; and that all that he can at present state must necessarily be confined to the examination of the vessel by the surveying officers, and what was known of her previously to her undertaking the voyage on which she was unfortunately lost. He then states that all vessels, before they are engaged for the public service, undergo a most rigorous examination, and are surveyed by the resident agent for transports at Deptford, assisted by an experienced and skilful shipwright; that every ship taken up for some time past has been invariably docked for the purpose of examining her bottom; and that no vessel is finally accepted until a satisfactory report is received. A convincing proof of the severity of this survey is to be found in the fact that the owner of the Ann, which was rejected for this very service, preferred a claim to the Board of Admiralty, under high legal advice, for compensation, in consequence of the injury done to the character of his ship by her rejection. On the rejection of the Ann, the Neva was surveyed, and it so happens that the character of this ship rests on certain and indisputable grounds. She was 331 tons' burthen, was built at Hull in 1813 of British oak, for a merchant ship, and was first employed by Government as a transport in January, 1828, and continued in that service until May, 1832, making voyages to North America, the West Indies, and Mediterranean, and afterwards in conveying provisions for the use of his Majesty's ships at the Brazils and in the Pacific, always giving entire satisfaction. In 1833 she was docked, and underwent a large and thorough repair in Ives's Dock, at Deptford, every part of her that did not appear to be perfectly sound, staunch, and substantial, being replaced with new; and on that occasion the shipwright's bill alone amounted to upwards of 2,800*l.*, being more than the cost of the hull of a new ship of similar tonnage. Most of these repairs took place under the immediate inspection of the Deptford officers.

As soon as she was ready, she proceeded with male convicts to Sydney, returning by Manilla and Singapore, and bringing home from the latter place a valuable cargo in the highest possible order. On her return to this country in 1834, she was taken into Dawson's Dock, at Limehouse, put into a perfect state of repair, new coppered, and again tendered to convey female convicts to the same destination. On this occasion her repair cost the owners upwards of 500*l.*; the resident agent at Deptford observing that, when she quitted the river, she was in every respect qualified, both with respect to her hull and equipment, to proceed to any part of the world, and to receive on board any description of cargo; and the builder, in whose yard she had been repaired, adding his testimony that she had undergone a general and careful repair, and was in every respect fit to perform the voyage for which she was chartered.

[illegible] facts, resting on the evidence of the Govern-ment-agent and shipwright, who had every opportunity of seeing the repairs while in progress, and on that of the persons who actually made the repairs, are fully confirmed by a communication from the Secretary of Lloyd's an establishment which has the strongest reasons for endeavouring to ascertain the state of a vessel with the greatest accuracy and precision. The report from Lloyd's dated the 19th of November, 1834, is in the following words:—"From the very great repair this ship had in 1826, principally in her bottom, and in her upper part in 1833, and the additional fastenings now put in, she is in a most efficient state of repair, fit for the conveyance of dry and perishable cargoes to all parts of the world, and should be classed 'A 1'"—which is the second description of the first class of vessels.

With regard to the character of the master of the Neva it appears that he was first employed in the public service as a Master in the Salsia transport, in July, 1829, and continued Master of that ship until 1833, making voyages to Bermuda, North America, the Mediterranean, Brazil and South America, always giving satisfaction to the King's officers with whom he sailed. In March, 1833 he became Master of the Neva, and carried out male convicts to Sydney, on which occasion he had a great number of adults under his charge than on the occurrence of the late unfortunate event.

His certificates from the Governor of New South Wales, and the Surgeon-Superintendent of the ship were perfectly satisfactory.

The owners and brokers of the vessel speak of him in the highest terms, and state that he never met with an accident previous to his recent disaster; that his conduct has been always highly satisfactory, and that they consider him to be a careful, trustworthy, experienced seaman, and a good navigator.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—On Tuesday the King of the French opened the Chambers with the following speech:

"Gentlemen of the Chamber of Peers and the Chamber of Deputies,

"In seeing you again assembled around me, I am happy in having to congratulate myself with you upon the situation of our country. Its prosperity increases every day; its internal tranquillity appears henceforth beyond the reach of attempt to disturb it, and ensures its power abroad. The measures that you adopted in your last session have attained the end that we in concert proposed to ourselves; they have consolidated public order and our institutions.

"I was deeply affected by the sentiments which France manifested towards myself and my family, when, at a moment which it is painful to remember, Providence deigned to preserve to me a life for ever devoted to the service of my country.

"An expedition, undertaken for the security of our possessions in Africa, has been conducted and accomplished as was becoming to the honour of France. It is with emotion I have beheld the eldest of my family share the hardships and dangers of our brave soldiers.

"I have reason to congratulate myself on the state of our relations with the European Powers. Our intimate union with Great Britain is drawn closer every day; and everything inspires me with confidence that the peace we enjoy will not be disturbed.

"My government has continued to take, upon our frontier next Spain, the measures best calculated to fulfil faithfully the clauses of the treaty of April 28, 1834. I offer up ardent wishes for the internal pacification of the Peninsula, and for the consolidation of the throne of Queen Isabella II.

"I regret that the treaty of July 4, 1831, with the United States of America, has not been able yet to receive its complete execution. The King of Great Britain has offered to me, as well as to the United States, his friendly mediation. I have accepted it; and you will participate in my desire that this difference may be terminated in a manner equally honourable to two great nations.

"The situation of the finances is satisfactory: the public revenue is increasing by the sole effect of the general prosperity. The financial bills will be presented within a few days to the Chamber of Deputies.

"The bills which have already been presented or announced to you, will likewise be submitted to your examination, as well as those which a recent legislation reserves for the deliberations of the present session.

"I hope, Gentlemen, that the moment has arrived for France to gather the fruits of her prudence and courage. Enlightened by the past, let us profit by an experience dearly purchased; let us apply ourselves to calm all minds, to render our laws perfect, and to protect by judicious measures all the interests of a nation which, after so many storms, holds up to the civilised world the salutary example of noble moderation, the only pledge of durable success. The care of its repose, its liberty, and its greatness, is my chief duty, and its happiness will be my dearest reward."

After the King had ceased, and silence was restored,

Home Minister read the oath, and the Deputies repeated—"I swear." His Majesty then retired.

PORTUGAL.—Lisbon, Dec. 25th.—Lord Howard de Walden and the American Minister here having come to an amicable understanding about the case of Capt. Harvey, of the American ship Liverpool, has been lodged on board the United States' frigate Potomac, and will be taken to the United States for trial. An officer from the frigate is to take the Liverpool to New York.

A vague rumour prevailed in Paris on Tuesday that a second Fieschi plot had been discovered by the police. There appears to have been no good foundation for this rumour, though some countenance was given to it by the fact of the KING proceeding to the Chamber of Deputies, where the ceremony of opening the Chambers as usual took place, by a different course than that usually taken.

VIENNA, Dec. 17.—The increase of our naval force is much talked of, either because our maritime trade in the East, Egypt, and Northern Africa, has greatly extended, or because the great maritime powers increase their stations in the Mediterranean, which circumstance may soon bring on important events. A portion of the last loan is said to have been destined for that purpose.

GREECE.—The latest returns state the Greek army to consist at this moment of 5148 regulars, 1463 irregulars, and 1351 gensdarmes, forming a total of 7962 men. Independently of this force, there are 37 local Commandants, and 150 officers unattached, belonging to the regular troops. The entire strength of the Greek army amounts therefore to 8049 men. The number of subaltern officers is 258, of whom 119 are native Greeks, and 138 are Bavarians. There are 3250 Bavarians also among the non-commissioned officers and privates. There is not a single Greek who holds a General's rank.

AMERICA.—The American President's Message has been received in London since our last. On the question between the Governments of the United States and France, the language of the President is calm, firm, and strong; but such as certainly leaves a very reasonable hope of peace. The French Chambers will doubtless recognise the wisdom of preferring an act of strict justice to an absurd resentment of an imaginary indignity, in a case, too, in which France has been the aggressor.

TURKEY.—Constantinople, Dec. 2.—Lord Ponsonby was on Saturday received in private audience by the Sultan. After requesting him to return his thanks to the King of England for the present of horses, the Sultan ordered the Seraskier to place in the Ambassador's hands a snuff-box with his likeness, encircled with brilliants of great value, and expressed the hope His Majesty might accept it, as a mark of his esteem. After addressing Lord Ponsonby in highly flattering terms, the Sultan presented him with a decoration in brilliants similar to that worn by the grandees of the empire of the first class. Messrs. Doyle and Bagot were presented with a decoration of the third class.

Literary Notices.

1. Paris and the Parisians in 1835. By FRANCES TROLLOPE, Author of "Domestic Manners of the Americans," "Tremordyn Cliff," &c. 2 Vols. 8vo. Richard Bentley.
2. The Monarchy of the Middle Classes. France—Social, Literary, Political. Second Series. By HENRY LYTTON BULWER, Esq., M.P. 2 Vols. post 8vo. Richard Bentley.

THESE two works on the same theme have, curiously enough, made their appearance at the same time, as if to provoke discussion, and give to English readers two contrasted views of one subject. Mrs. Trollope pursues her inquiries in the cheerful spirit and with the nice tact and discrimination peculiar to her sex, confining her observations chiefly to society, and to the manners and pursuits of the female portion of it. As this portion, however, carries its influence in France more into the world of politics, literature, and even philosophy, than with us, it follows that the authoress, in continuing her investigation, is of necessity compelled to treat of those subjects over which she throws the light of an original and graceful mind, not the less interesting on account of her being a staunch Tory. Mr. Bulwer, on the contrary, as an honest Whig, probes deeply the state of opinion now existing in France, discusses the political and religious institutions of the country, is industrious in the examination of its statistics, its religion, its literature, its morals, and the comparative situation and influence of the different parties whose conflicts still agitate the nation. The works of two writers, thus diversely circumstanced, cannot fail to present, at every turn, fresh sources of interest, the more absorbing from the varied illustration given by each to the same topics.

Mrs. Trollope, it appears, enjoyed every facility for introduction into the very interior of Parisian life in the best circles, and, among the rest, was present at the morning parties of the celebrated Madame Récamier, the unrivalled beauty of five-and-twenty years ago, and even now a distinguished belle. It is delightful to us to contemplate the long reign of this queen of elegance and of female charms, and to think that, while the regal dynasties of France have undergone three or four signal changes, Madame Récamier still maintains an undisputed sovereignty. Mrs. Trollope's sketch of her parties and of her conversation is very animated and characteristic, and would afford, had we room to extract it, a pleasant specimen of one of the most piquant books which ever came from the pen of a woman.

Mr. Bulwer's volumes will be extensively read and referred to on account of the great mass of valuable matter contained in their pages, and for the tranchant wit and sound sense he has brought to bear on matters which affect ourselves scarcely less than the people who, at first sight, appear to be chiefly concerned. The philosophy, as well as the literature, of "Young France" is a monstrous anomaly: it is fit that we should discern the true features of both, an advantage which Mr. Bulwer places at our command. Our knowledge of our neighbours (so essential for many reasons to us) is indeed greatly increased by both the works under notice, and we accordingly warmly recommend them to the earnest attention of our readers.

Navy List. January, 1836. John Murray.

THERE is an evident improvement in this List, as was indeed the case to a great extent in the one for October last. There appears to have been considerable care devoted to avoid those errors which we have sometimes had occasion to point out; and it is but justice that we should now call attention to the improvement. An Alphabetical List of Admirals appears this month, which will be found very useful for reference, and altogether the style and arrangement of the book are such as the compilers of the Army List (Messrs. Cannon, Wilkinson, and Coleman) would do well to copy. By the by, we believe the second of these War-Office clerks has been superannuated; but we expect Mr. Coleman to make the List something superior to its present imperfect publication, if not, he and his coadjutor, Mr. Cannon, may look for a rival Army List.

United Service Journal. January, 1836.

SEVERAL letters on Naval matters this month appear in our excellent contemporary, which, as the subject of them has been already partially discussed in our columns, we shall notice as opportunity offers. For the present, we will draw attention to those signed I. N. T. and C. R. R. N., proposing an arrangement for the sale of Naval Commissions. A great deal of argument has been already wasted on this point, and I. N. T. must be sanguine indeed, when (taking the relative situations of a probationer entering the Army or Navy), he expects any one will be found to purchase the rank of Midshipman for the sum of one thousand pounds, or invest that capital with the certainty of realising 100*l.* per annum, after 5 years' service at sea and the contingencies thereof. With the exception of this proposal, there are, however, some sensible and just observations in the letter of I. N. T. which will, we hope, command attention. The present number is a good one.

The Child's own History of France. Joseph Thomas.

A very useful little history, embellished with portraits of the kings of France. The object of the author is to stimulate youth to further reading, by relating only the more prominent and interesting events of each reign.

The Comic Annual. By Thomas Hood, Esq. A. H. Baily.

Our quaint friend is as happy and racy as ever. His present annual of whims and comicalities is admirably illustrated with droll designs after his peculiar humour, and the literary portions of the volume are, like all Hood's doings, clever and brimful of fun and merriment.

An Initiatory Step to English Composition. By M. Rice. N. Hailes.

THIS well-arranged compendium or grammatical analysis will be found not only useful to the student, but prove an excellent assistant to all who have the laborious duty of instructing youth in the principles of the English language.

The Angler's Souvenir. Tilt.

DECIDEDLY the most embellished work that ever came under our notice. There is not a page in the volume without characteristic illustrations, and many of them deserve the warmest eulogy. It is truly an Angler's Manual, for it contains every instruction and information that can be useful to the admirer of the various sports of fishing.

* Several Notices are unavoidably postponed till next week.

MEMORABILIA.

News for Economists.—Mr. Hume will doubtless be delighted to learn that the Spaniards are about to re-establish their naval dockyards, and set about building ships of war. (For the use of Great Britain, of cou

Sporting in Spain.—Mr. Turtle-dove Quill, w lately peeping into the covers of Cerlos, and de deeth among the sand-larks on the sierras of Andal was decoyed by a water-wagtail into the brushwood there so fiercely assailed by a brood of wild pea that his escape with life could only be effected at th crifice of arms, ammunition, and clothing, together some forty or fifty mocuses to the surrounding cl for their assistance.

Irish Clergy.—The following list of additional d tions came too late for insertion in our last—viz., J a penny cake of oatmeal, and a ponderous volum economy. D. O'C. a crucifix, a flaming sword, a real death's head and cross-bones. Dr. D. the lo the giant's begging-box emptied of the rint.

Charitable Institutions.—We have much pleasur announcing that the penny subscription for erecti house of refuge for the pensionless widows and or children of naval officers is advancing rapidly; two sixpence has already been raised, and it is confide hoped that their grateful country will by a vote in liament award as much more after deliberate consi tion. Hints to H. Ps.—The Virginian narcotic, hu been found a grand panacea for the cure of that invet disease hunger, it is proposed to petition the legisla for a remittance of duty in behalf of H. Ps, so leave a few pence at the daily disposal of the suff patriarchs, for the education and clothing, &c. o young families.

Hope in Perspective.—"The Terror bomb was terday brought down from her moorings to be got r to accompany the Erebus from Portsmouth, for th lief of the whaling vessels beset by the ice in Baffin's since 11th Oct." Verily the names alone of these "Sisters of Charity" are ominous, and only require the Sloth sloop of war should be added as an escort.

No compulsion, only you must.—The heroic exa of voluntary privation, shown by the Anglo-Portug Legion at Oporto, in the surrender of pay which famine could not extract from the treasury, has nobly followed by their brethren, the British crusade Spain. It is miserable, diable, John Bull, to deal Men-disabled!

Semper paratus.—Our Plymouth correspondent w —"Such is the despatch used in fitting the Terror, the mainmast of the Fly, and mizen of the Imogene ( ships fitting for service) have been taken for the fore mizen of the Terror." This is very encouraging! W if ten sail of the line were wanted in a hurry? Perh Spain would lend us a bowsprit or two, Holland a mainmasts, and France send in advance (knowing shall take them) the remaining spars required.

Precautionary Measures.—There being no dis able ships of war in any of our naval ports, it i contemplation to hire a few transports to convey pr sions and water to such of our Argosies as may be tained in the chops of the channel by easterly w which generally prevail at this time of the year, usually encountered on the homeward passage from southern, eastern, and western hemispheres.

A CHRISTMAS CAROL.

Sing a mournful song for Christmas,
We have no Christmas now;
Sing a mournful song for Christmas
Beneath the holly bough.

The world has lost its childhood,
Its hair is touched with grey;
Oh! sing beneath the holly
How mirth is past away.

The rich and poor are strangers—
They live too far apart;
There is snow upon the housetops,
And snow, too, in the heart.

No pleasure is in common,
And never ties can bind,
Like joys they share together—
Man's soul unto his kind.

Where is the ancient yule lo
That lit the ancient heart
Have tale and jest, like fair
Forsaken our dull earth?

Hang up no more the misle
As in the olden time,
When blush and smile betwe
Made maddeo summer clim

Too heavily the present
Is felt upon our day;
Ours is the age of iron,
With the gilding worn aw

Sing a mournful song for Ch
mas,
Beneath the holly bough;
Sing a mournful song for Ch
mas,
We have no Christmas no

East India Intelligence.

RETURN.—The 48th Madras N.I. are said to be in or to relieve the 28d regt. at Singapore and Malacca. unexpected arrangement, rumour says, originated in difficulty, supposed or discovered, is getting Bengal tr to embark for any long period of service in these str without their wives and families.—Prince of Wales Isl Gazette, June 27th.

Penang—(Military).—Lieut.-Col. Cedogan is appointed to command the 15th N.I. stationed in these straits, but he is absent, on leave, in Europe, and Major Haleman of that regiment is directed to join and take command thereof.—Ib.

An Act has passed the Legislative Council of India, empowering the Governor of Bombay to appoint any military officer to the post of magistrate. We entirely approve of this act of the Government, but we wish that the principle could be carried further, and that our Darogahs could be superseded by native commissioned or non-commissioned officers acting under an European military magistrate. We believe that a change of that kind would soon work a wonderful improvement in the whole system of police, and render it a blessing instead of a curse, as it now often is, to the people.

Madras.—A private letter from Hyderabad states, that a Moonshee of the 28th is in custody for seditious doings and writings, and that the guards are all on the qui vive. This may be a first evidence of the happy effects of concentrating large masses of native troops in single stations.—Herald, Aug. 1.

The 3d Buffs, the King's regiment, now here, quits this station in November next. The stud at this place is to be abolished, and it is rumoured that the stables are to be converted into quarters for a cavalry regiment.

Extract of a letter from Saharunpore.—"Considerable gloom has been cast over our small society by the death of Arthur Trench, than whom no man in the Civil Service will be more deeply and generally regretted. He was, in truth, an ornament to society and the Service. * * *"

Custom House and Post Office.—The Sherburne has all back from sea, and Mr. Elliott, who had taken his passage in her for England, has returned to Calcutta, relinquishing for the present his intention of returning home, and resumed charge of the Post-office. Mr. Siddons has, in consequence, returned to his former situation at the head of the Customs Department. The Englishman stated that Mr. Hyde, who had been appointed to the Customs on Mr. Siddons' removal to the Post-office, had, by an occasional visit to the out-chokeys at unexpected hours, put the native officers on the alert; in consequence of which smuggling was checked, and certain articles of consumption, which formerly yielded but a trifling amount, had become suddenly productive of a large revenue.

Extract from a letter from Ghazeepore, dated 17th July. —"The rains have been so extremely heavy in this part of the country, as to have rendered it impracticable to sow the lands for gain, &c., as is usual at this season of the year; the consequence being, that the cultivators will be deprived of the crop, upon which, I understand, their principal subsistance depended."

Bengal.—The iron steamer from Calcutta reached Allahabad on 7th Aug., in 34 days from Calcutta, the longest passage yet made.

A Jockey Club has been formed; and a subscription to restore the race-course and to revive the Calcutta races, is now started: nearly 100 gold mohurs have already been subscribed.

A plan has been started in Calcutta for substituting a stamp duty for postage on newspapers, and the Customs committee have been directed by Government to report upon it. The stamp is not proposed as a tax for increasing the revenue, but as a better means of defraying that portion of the expenses of the Post-office which is now covered by the postage on newspapers.

We understand that the disturbances at Bhaulea are not of so serious a character as was at first apprehended; in fact, we believe there will be no occasion for the troops to halt.—Bengal Hurk. 30th July, 1835.

The new law regulating the future coinage of India has passed the Supreme Council, and was to come into operation at Calcutta on the 1st Sept.—Bombay Courier, 5th Sept. 1835.

Duel.—A very melancholy occurrence occurred at Bangalore. A Lieut. Joys[illegible], the son of Mr. Davis, formerly Chaplain at [illegible], travelled, and the former called out the latter. [illegible] took aim at his antagonist, but the shot of Joys grazed the head of Davis, and so injured the cranium that it has proved fatal.—Ibid.

Addiscombe.—In our account of the examination of the young gentlemen on the 11th ult. two of Mr. C. Young's first prizes were omitted to be mentioned. He gained the first prize for Mathematics and for Civil Drawing, as well as the other four that are mentioned.

COURT-MARTIAL.

Cornet M. Lushington.

G. O., Head-quarters, Calcutta, 1st Aug., 1835.—A European General Court-martial, re-assembled at Nomilah Agra, on Saturday, 4th July, 1835, of which Col. R. H. Sale, C. B., H. M.'s 13th Lt. Inf., is President, Cornet Matthew Lushington, 7th regt. Lt. Cav., was arraigned on the following charge:—Conduct disgraceful to the character of an officer and a gentleman, and in breach of order and military discipline, in having in camp at Salempore, in Rajwarra, on the evening of the 3rd Jan., 1835, appeared in the streets of tents of the 36th N.I. in a state of intoxication, and after having intruded himself into the mess tent of that regiment, and been desired by Major Godby, the President and senior officer of the mess, to quit the tent, thrown himself on Major Godby, using the words 'take that there;' and further, upon being ejected forcibly from the tent, applying the words 'blackguards, cowards,' and other terms of abuse to the officers then present at the mess who had just expelled him from the tent; he, Cornet Lushington, at the time being in arrest, and under the unpublished sentence of a General Court-martial, on a charge of intoxication on a previous occasion." The Court having duly considered the evidence for the prosecution, together with what the prisoner has urged in his defence, is of opinion, that he, Cornet Matthew Lushington, is not guilty of conduct disgraceful to the character of an officer and a gentleman in having a peared in the streets of tents of the 38th regt., N.I., in a state of intoxication, but that he is guilty of conduct unbecoming an officer in having thrown his cap at Major Godby, and making use of the abusive language attributed to him in the charge; the Court does therefore sentence him, Cornet M. Lushington, 7th regt. Lt. Cav., to lose one step in his regimental rank.—" Confirmed." The Provisional Com.-in-Chief is at a loss to understand on what grounds the Court have, in opposition to the testimony of four witnesses out of six, acquitted Cornet Lushington of intoxication, and adjudged so inadequate a punishment for his outrageous conduct. Signed by James Watson, Maj.-Gen., Provisional Com.-in-Chief.

Chain cables.—Many of our naval readers even, who may not have had an opportunity to visit the dockyard of Woolwich, may not be aware there is a "proving house," wherein the strength of these friends to the sailor is put to the proof by a curious machine (the only one in his Majesty's service), which is on the principle of hydraulic pressure. One end of the cable is made fast to a post, properly secured, and the other is hooked to a bar, connected with a cylindrical tube, about eighteen inches diameter and seven feet long, placed horizontally, into which water is forced by a pump, worked by four convicts in an adjoining chamber, as "all hands" employed vacate the proving house, for if the "coast" was not clear in case a faulty cable was unable to bear the tension to which it is subjected, it would inevitably, in its recoil, carry devastation to all around it. It is well deserving the attention of visiters (as well as the scientific) to the dockyard.

An Institution having for its object the protection of families from the reclassing of fortune, by enabling parents, at a small comparative outlay, to secure to their children a certain provision on their attaining a given age, must be considered a benefit to the community, and deserving of being placed in the first rank of provident and philanthropic institutions. Such is the object of the Family Endowment Society, which will provide for all the children of a family at a period when a provision becomes always acceptable, and frequently indispensable.

To accomplish an object so desirable, this Society will, at or after the time of marriage, endow every future child of such marriage, payable on each child's completing any agreed year of age from 14 to 21; endow every future male child or every future female child; endow children actually born previously to the date of the contract; and, if preferred, endow such actually born children, at an increased rate of premium, which shall be returnable if the children do not attain the age of endowment.

In order to afford every facility to the public, the premium may be paid, at the option of the parties, either in one sum at the time of contracting, or by annual sums, payable during any term of years not exceeding the age of endowment, dependent on the life of the husband only, or of the wife only, or on the joint lives of the husband and wife.

The Tables are calculated for all ages, and for every combination of age, and the following extracts will sufficiently illustrate the subject.—

Annual Premiums, for assuring the sum of £100 to each child, payable on completing its 14th or 21st year

On completing 14 years.

| Age of the Husband | Age of the Wife | Annual Premium, to cease at Husband's death, or after the 15th payment. £ s. d. |

| 43 | 35 | 12 11 6 |
| 52 | 40 | 10 15 0 |

Each child to receive £100 on completing its 14th year.

On completing 21 years.

| Age of the Husband | Age of the Wife | Ann. Premium to cease at Husband's death, or after 22d payt. £ s. d. |

| 52 | 40 | 7 1 0 |

Each child to receive £100 on completing 21st year.

Annual premiums, for assuring the sum of £100 to each male child only, or to each female child only, payable on completing its 21st year:—

| Age of the Husband | Age of the Wife | Annual Premium, to cease at Husband's death, or after 22d payment. Males only. £ s. d. | Females only. £ s. d. |

| 43 | 35 | 4 2 9 | 4 4 3 |
| 52 | 40 | 3 18 4 | 3 14 8 |

Example.—A couple, of the ages of 31 and 25, have 8 children who complete their 14th year; the Society will have to pay them £800; the whole amount of the annual payments cannot exceed £722. 2s. 6d.; and in case of the husband's previous death, this sum might be considerably less.

The necessary tables have been constructed from calculations which have been examined and approved by an eminent mathematician. They have been so formed as to yield an adequate profit, of which it is proposed to divide four-fifths amongst the parents or parties effecting endowments on unborn children, in proportion to the amount of their respective contributions.

The following extracts from the tables will show the premiums for the endowment of existing children.

Annual Premiums for assuring the sum of £100 to an actually born child, payable on completing its 14th or 21st year; the whole of such annual premiums being returnable should the child die under the age of endowment;—

Should the parties contracting with the Society prove unable to continue paid at least five annual premiums, be unable to continue the payments, such premiums shall not be considered as forfeited, but the Society will, notwithstanding, pay an equitable proportion of the endowment to the children then born on their attaining the given age.

In Pots, 1s. and 2s. each. Warranted in all climates.

"In this preparation the flavour of the Herring is preserved unimpaired, if not improved; the prime parts of the fish are concentrated in a substance about the consistency of butter, and which may be used in the same way; and, being put up in neat and portable pots, a treat may be enjoyed at any time, without the unpleasant smell and other inconveniences which attend the dressing and partaking of herrings in the ordinary way."—Weekman.

A CERTAIN and MOST SPEEDY CURE

From JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba.

(Signed) "JOSEPH HENRY GREEN.

"46, Lincoln's Inn Fields, April 25, 1835."

From BRANSBY COOPER, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success.

"New-street, Spring Gardens, April 13, 1835."

From WILLIAM HENTSCH, Esq., House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville-street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of: the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly, (Signed) "WILLIAM HENTSCH.

STIRLINGREES' ESSENCE.—Its vast

and increasing sale, from the recommendation of the highest Medical characters, as well as those who have experienced its salubrious and beneficial effects, proves its great success and superiority over every other preparation, in being the most safe and effectual remedy ever discovered for the Cure of Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Seminal Weakness, Strictures, Fluor Albus, or Whites, Pains in the Loins, Kidneys, Lumbago, Gravel, Irritation of the Bladder, Urethra, and every Disease incident to the Sexual and Urinary Organs, frequently performing a perfect cure in the short space of three or four days. It contains, in a concentrated state, all the efficacious parts of the Cubeb, chemically combined with Sarsaparilla and other choice alteratives, which renders it invaluable to those afflicted with secondary Syphilitic Symptoms, Pains of the Bones, Ulcers, Pimples, Blotches, Scorbutic Eruptions, Glandular Swellings, and all diseases arising from a tainted and impure state of the blood. In cases of Debility, Want of Power, both Local and General, Tabes Dorsalis, Diabetes, Wasting Impotence, and Nervous Depression of Spirits it has been taken with the most decided benefit. A regular perseverance in its use has invariably been found to improve the appetite, assist the digestive powers, and give muscular strength, energy, and vigorous health to the whole system. The most delicate female may take it with perfect safety. It is an excellent restorative after the constitution has been weakened or injured by mercurial or from any other cause.

Prepared only by the Proprietor, J. W. STIRLING, 86, High-street, Whitechapel, from whom it can be sent to any part of the world, upon enclosing a remittance, and any part of London (carriage free), in Bottles, at 4s. 6d., 10s., and 20s. each.

YOLAND'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION is the most wonderful Medicine ever discovered by man, for the cure of GONORRHŒA, GLEETS, STRICTURES, WHITES, Pains in the Loins, Affections of the Kidneys, Gravel, Irritation of the Urethra or Bladder, and for all Urinary Diseases in both sexes.—This Medicine is patronised, prescribed, recommended, and sanctioned by the Most Eminent of the Faculty, not only in England but on the Continent, and stated by them, from experience, to be the only Medicine that can be relied on for the cure of these complaints, and they invariably resort to it when their own remedies fail.

YOLAND'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION cures both sexes at all times sooner than any other known remedy, with the most triumphant success, after every Medicine of the present day has proved ineffectual, in that this justly celebrated specific has arrived at the acme of perfection, surpassing every thing of the kind that ever bore the name of medicine, frequently curing some of these serious diseases in a few hours. Those who have suffered from any of the above diseases for many years (such as strictures, &c.) will find upon taking this medicine for a short time, that, if not entirely cured, they will no longer feel inconvenience from the trifling complaint that remains.

References to respectable Surgeons, who are in the habit of prescribing this medicine extensively, will be given on application to the Proprietor's Agents.

Sold in Sealed Packets, with full directions, so that any one may cure themselves with perfect safety and secrecy, sent to any part of the world by HANNAY and Co., 63, Oxford-street, the corner of Wells-street, London, to whom dealers in the country are requested to forward their orders direct; and Retail by all respectable Medicine Venders. ## THE SPORTSMAN'S ANNUAL,

By EDWIN LANDSEER, R.A.

And other eminent Artists.

The Proprietors of THE SPORTSMAN'S ANNUAL believe that, independent of its novelty, the work will possess peculiar claims to public patronage. In the outset, they would explain that it is not a book of the Turf, but of the Drawing-room, or the Library; and, although of undoubted interest to the Sportsman, it is no less intended for the wider sphere of general society. It has been entitled because the subjects of its embellishments all belong to, or are in some manner associated with British Sports. They are, at the same time, all interesting subjects in NATURAL HISTORY; and the manner of their illustration, in the Literary department of the Book, is by means of Tales, Histories, Legends, Poems, Anecdotes, and Songs. The Proprietors hope that in these it will mingle instruction with entertainment for all classes. In the above respects, it resembles the mode in which the most popular of the Annuals are produced—and only differs from them in its novel character—which identifies it with the tastes and feelings of all lovers of Natural History, in its most beautiful and animated forms. A Gentleman, eminent in Literature, has been selected to superintend the work.

London: A. H. Baily and Co. 83, Cornhill.

HALF-PAY and RETIRED-PAY

NAVAL OFFICERS and OFFICERS of the ROYAL MARINES.—Notice is hereby given, That on the receipt in the Wages Department, at the Admiralty Office, Somerset-Place, the Declaration or Certificate of identity required from each officer by his Majesty's Orders in Council, a Bill for the amount of the half-pay or retired pay due will be made out in this Department, which will be payable by the Treasurer of his Majesty's Navy, on the following days, viz.—

On the 11th and 12th January, to Masters, Surgeons, and Pursers, and their Attorneys.

On the 13th, 14th, and 15th January, to Lieutenants at 5s. and under, and their Attorneys.

On the 16th and 18th January, to Lieutenants at 7s. and [illegible] day, and Captains, and their Attorneys.

On the 19th, 20th, and 21st, January, to Admirals, Lieutenant-Generals, Major-Generals, Colonels, Lieutenant-Colonels, Majors, Captains, Commanders, and Retired Commanders, and their Attorneys.

Great Inconvenience having been experienced by the claims of officers, who have not chosen to receive their half-pay or retired pay on the days fixed for their rank, being brought forward on the days appointed for the payment of half-pay and retired-pay to officers of different ranks, notice is hereby given that no such claims can in future be attended to on the days not appointed for officers of those ranks; but for the accommodation of such officers, and also for the convenience of those who may not have transmitted their Declarations or Certificates sufficiently early to admit of payment on the above-mentioned days, a recal will take place on the 22nd and 25th January; after which the half-pay and retired-pay will be payable on the first and third Wednesday in every Month, excepting during the general payment.

Officers residing in or near London, and wishing to receive their half-pay or retired-pay in person, are requested to deliver their Declarations or Certificates into the Wages Office, at the Admiralty, Somerset Place, or transmit them to the Secretary of the Admiralty, immediately on the expiration of each quarter; and those employing agents, are also requested to furnish their agents with their Declarations or Certificates, with the same dispatch, for unless such documents are delivered into this Office early, delay in the payment must unavoidably ensue.

As it sometimes happens that officers apply, personally, for their half-pay or retired-pay, without having previously sent in their Declarations or Certificates as required by the usual advertisement, any delay or inconvenience to which they might be subjected by this oversight it is in the power of the officers themselves to prevent, by an adherence to the existing regulations.

Under the authority of the statutes relating to the pay of the Navy (besides the above-mentioned modes), officers may receive their half-pay or retired-pay in any of the following ways, viz.—

1st. By drawing a bill for the amount, in which case they are to give notice thereof by letter to the Secretary of the Admiralty, marked in the corner "Half-Pay or Retired-Pay Accountant General," and thereupon a proper form of a Bill of Exchange will be sent to them.

2d. By a Remittance Bill or permanent Remittance Bill, payable to them at or in the neighbourhood of their residence by the Collector of Customs or Excise.

3d. By extract or permanent Remittance Bill at a Dock-Yard where there is an establishment of Pay Clerks.

In either of which two latter cases they must give a like notice to the Secretary of the Admiralty marked in the same manner, and a Remittance Bill or Extract will thereupon be made out and transmitted to them.

In all cases, the officer signifying his desire of payment is to state at the foot of his letter his Christian and Surnames, his rank, and a full description of his residence.

EXTRAORDINARY DISCOVERY.

PATRONISED BY THE NOBILITY, ARMY, AND NAVY OF FRANCE.

THE AXYRITE, or Patent Metallic Shaving Stone, for Removing the Beard without the aid of either Razor, Soap, or Water.

This most useful invention has obtained for the Patentee the Gold Medal of the Committee of National Rewards at France "for useful Discoveries and Inventions." It is now for the first time introduced into England, and cannot fail of being approved and adopted the moment it becomes known. With this Stone any person may shave without Razor, Soap, or Water;—by night or day—walking or riding—either on shore or at sea; in short, in any situation where a razor can or cannot be used. Naval and Military men, Sportsmen, and all gentlemen travelling will find the AXYRITE a most convenient appendage to their dressing cases, in such it will be found eminently convenient, and strongly recommended to their notice. To persons who from whatever circumstances do not or cannot shave themselves with a razor, arising either from want of habit, nervousness, or temporary ill health, will find this a most valuable acquisition. Even if the purchaser prefer still to continue the use of a razor, the AXYRITE will be found a useful auxiliary, as it often happens that from accident or the casual blunt-ness of the razor some few hairs are left, which, the chin being first well dried, it will instantly remove, and impart a soft appearance to the skin. Another great convenience may be mentioned, that gentlemen who use the razor in the morning, and do not wish to require it on going to evening parties, will find their half beard effectually removed by this Stone in a few seconds, or when obliged to remain all night at a friend's house, they will find it far more convenient than carrying all the paraphernalia of a shaving apparatus. There is not the slightest danger to be apprehended from the use of the Stone, as it is composed of perfectly innocuous materials; the public may feel perfectly assured that there is nothing in the composition in the slightest degree injurious to the health or the skin. The few remarks as to the manner, &c. of using this Stone will be found in the case.

The AXYRITE is sold, Wholesale and Retail, at the Depot, 77, Cornhill, London; and all respectable Perfumers. Price 5s. each.

A liberal Discount allowed to the Trade.

Mem.—Bills of Exchange drawn under or by virtue of the act 2 Geo. 4, cap. 20, are not liable to the Stamp Duty.

PORTSMOUTH, Jan. 8th.—From our own Correspondent.—The James Watt, steamer, Capt. Jamaison, put into this port on Tuesday, on her return from Santander, having had a very extraordinary quick passage from thence of only 60 hours. Capt. J. disembarked a considerable quantity of arms and ammunition at that place. He reports that the Carlists have succeeded in getting command of the entrance to the harbour of St. Sebastian, and had got guns upon the rocks to prevent vessels entering. The James Watt landed a few passengers at Portsmouth, and then went to London. The Royal Tar was hauled off the dockyard jetty on Monday, having had her machinery repaired; she is to proceed to Santander with limes and stores. The Pembroke, 74, has been hauled into the basin to have the housing removed, and she will then, as well as the Benbow, be fitted as a demonstration ship, similar to the St. Vincent, Princess Charlotte, Ganges, and Bellerophon, in this harbour. The Victory is to have the moorings of the Benbow, and Lt. J. Mottley to have charge of her. The Messenger, st.-ves., is daily expected to tow the Erebus to Hull. The caulkers of the dockyard have been removed from the Pique to work on the Meleager, orders having arrived to hurry her on getting ready for commission. It is understood that Capt. Douglas will hoist his pendant on 21st inst. Lieut. Matthias, late First Lieut. of the Caledonia, came passenger by the last Mediterranean packet. Capt. Martin and the First Lieut. of the Volage have joined the Rig-ship.—Ships in Port—Britannia, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Seaflower. The Cracker, tender to the latter, has sailed to cruise off the Isle of Wight.

MILFORD HAVEN, 6th Jan., 1836.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Orders have been received at our dockyard to build two sloops of war on the plans of Capt. Surveyor Symonds, similar to the Columbine. They will be commenced forthwith. If vessels are wanted in such hurry to meet any emergency, the false policy of former administrations, in reducing the strength of our naval arsenals by discharging so many of that useful class of mechanics, British shipwrights, will speedily become manifest. There was a time, and a brilliant era it was, when it only required the government to sound the tocsin of preparation, and any number of vessels was speedily ready for the reception of our brave tars, but "alas! those times are over." One of our post-office steam packets, the Vixen, on her passage hence to Waterford last week, fell in with the barque Bellerophon, of Konisburg, bound from Baltimore to Rotterdam, laden with tobacco, logwood, &c., in great distress, and, but for the efficient aid afforded her by taking her in tow, must have become a wreck. A line was floated to her by means of a cork fender, and a hawser thus attached, by which she was safely brought into Dunraven. The relief of Marines for the detachment doing duty at Pembroke will be given the ensuing year from the Chatham division. The following officers are on the roster for this duty—Capts. Moore and Steele; Lieuts. Hutton, Grey, Gasgoigne, and Deephatt. There was a splendid wedding up at the dockyard, on Monday last, between Capt. Mitchell, R.M., and Miss Bullen, niece of Sir Chas. Bullen. The happy pair, after the ceremony, set off in a post-chaise and four for the usual honeymoon excursion.

PLYMOUTH, 7th Jan.—The Stag, 46, was warped from her moorings on Tuesday, and docked the same evening. The Implacable and Kent were brought near the yard for repair, in lieu of the Firefly, on Friday. The Terror bomb sailed yesterday for Chatham, in charge of Mr. Walker, Assist.-Master Attendant of this dock-yard, manned by riggers and men from the ordinary, and accompanied by the Firefly steamer. The Magpie cutter, if found fit, is to be fitted as a tender to the flag ship. The following packets lying in ordinary are to be examined as to their fitness for sea service and reported on:—Hope, Magnet, Zephyr, and Swallow. The Royal Adelaide, bearing the flag of our Com.-in-Chief, Adm. Sir W. Hargood, will be removed to her moorings next week. In Hamoaze—Royal Adelaide, Swallow packet. In the Sound—Sir Charles Malcolm, freight ship.

WOOLWICH.—The Comet has left the basin, and is now lying in the river; she has had her steam up several times this week, and is expected to be commissioned. The S and Express, sloops built by contract, are both masted rigged, and will be ready for sea shortly. Spitfire Tartarus are expected to be paid six months' adva Rhadamanthus steamer is being again unrigged.

Yesterday, as Lieut. Russell, of H.M.S. Dee, was c versing with some brother officers at the door of Ha Hotel, he was suddenly seized by a strong convulsi (brought on by a coup de soleil), and fell insensible on stops. The most prompt assistance was rendered, end is now out of danger.—Jamaica Herald, Nov. 27.

Firefly steamer, Lieut. Baldock, has come round to W wich from Falmouth, and is lying off the dockyard. formation has been received from the Meteor steamer, Com. G. W. Smith, in the West Indies, that she has several of her hands, leaving only thirteen in an effec state.

The Circassian is taken up and fitting at Deptford to t convicts to N. S. Wales.

The Ranger, for Ascension, and the Stokesby, transp (b), taking in provisions for Ireland, and the Cathar Stewart, for Ireland and West Indies, are now fitting Deptford.

The following are the line of sempaphore (telegrap between London and Portsmouth, and are held by N Lieutenants under fifty years of age for five years:—A miralty, Lieut. Jay; Chelsea, Lieut. Amiel; Putney, D. O. B. Casey; Kingston, Lieut. Tribe; Esher, Li Donellan; Cobham, Lieut. Fabian; Guildford, Li Leary; Godalming, Lt. Chapman; Haslemere, Li Garrett; Midhurst, Lieut. Wilmot; Petersfield, Li Wibley; Bedhampton, Lieut. Williamson; Portsmo Lieut. Barnes (a).

ROYAL MARINES.—Private W. Leopard received lashes, pursuant to sentence of Court-martial, and was Wednesday "drummed out" for selling his "kit."

The Earl of Minto returned to his residence in the A miralty on Saturday from a visit to his noble colleague, Lord President of the Council, at Bowood. His lords has commenced a series of dinners to Flag Officers Captains of the Royal Navy.

In consequence of the great superiority which the Col bine has uniformly displayed in her trials with other vess orders have been issued that six sloops of war shall be i mediately laid down, to be built upon her lines, and in ev respect similar to that vessel. Two will be built at Chath to be called the Phantom and Arab, two at Portsmo called the Persian and Grecian, and two at Plymouth, be called the Acron and Pilot. We are glad to perc that the merits of the Columbine are at length duly app ciated, and we hope that every vessel of her class may h after be built upon so beautiful a model, which under ev circumstance of lee or foul weather has exhibited so markable a superiority over all competitors. We are a most happy to find that the reports of the qualities of t and every other vessel of Capt. Symonds' construction, c tinue to bear out our predictions and anticipations.

The period of the Castor's tour of service having exp since September last, some speculation exists as to the o cer who will be appointed to succeed Lord John Hay the delicate service which he has so ably performed to satisfaction of his own and the Spanish Government. the great preparations now making afford a reasonable h that this unnatural struggle may be speedily brought t close, we think it would be advantageous, instead of sup seding Lord John Hay, to keep the Castor some time lon in commission, and upon the present service.

At Toulon, the French are fitting out the following shi —Nestor, 74, Triton, 80, Scipio, 74, Duguesne, 84, T dent, 74, Tripoli, 80, Algesiras, 84, Ville de Marseil 120, Montebello, 120, and Suffren, 100. This fleet is be commanded by R.-Adm. Clairval, and to be strengthe by a further squadron, under Commodore De Lolaode, n at Smyrna, of one line of battle ship, two double-ban frigates, and two corvettes, in all fifteen sail.

The American squadron at present in the Mediterran consists of the Delaware, 64, John Adams, and Uni States, heavy frigates, three corvettes, and the schoo Shark, all under the orders of Commodore Patterson. Constitution, 60 gun frigate, with the broad pendant Commodore Elliot, was daily looked for from New Yo These ships were at Smyrna on the 22d of November.

The expedition for the relief of the ice-bound merch has sailed in the Cove, under the command of Capt. Ross, with Capt. Humphreys as sailing master. Mr. M pleton, late Master of the Arachne is appointed Maste that ship. The Erebus and Terror, fitting to follow Cove, will be placed under the command of Comman Belcher.

The Portland, 52, Capt. David Price, is ordered ho from the Mediterranean.

By the last accounts from Lisbon, the Hastings, Tw Pearl, Camelion, Viper, and Scorpion, were in the Tag The Russell was at Vigo; the Endymion at Corunna; Castor, Ringdove, Saracen, Royalist, and Phœnix, on North Coast. There was also the American frigate Peto lying in the Tagus; the officers of which, who are on v good terms with our squadron, have exchanged dinn ke., with the English officers. They (the Americans) were o give a dinner to Adm. Gage, on the 19th ult.

The annual promotion of Clerks to be Pursers will take place next week. It is intended in future, that, instead of promoting a stated number annually, the same course shall be adopted with these as with other officers, and that as soon as three deaths occur, one promotion shall immediately take place.

We are glad to perceive in the list of promotions this day the name of Mr. Egerton; he is the son of a General Officer, and the grandson of the gallant and lamented Adm. Sir Thomas Troubridge. The selection of the relatives of distinguished officers for promotion is no less gratifying to the service than it is honourable to the feelings of the First Lord of the Admiralty.

We do not attach any truth to the report that Adm. Sir Davidge Gould is to succeed Adm. Sir T. Williams, as Commander in Chief at Portsmouth.

4th—We lately inserted a paragraph from an Irish paper, stating that several privates of this regt. had absconded to the Bush Rangers, and the Lt. Infantry of the 17th regt. were in pursuit of them and some convicts who fled in their company. The facts, however, appear to be that four men of the regt. (young soldiers) had deserted into the Bush in the beginning of June, from the detachment stationed at Cox's River, in company with a tree constable and four convicts; that the mounted police (formed for the apprehension of runaway convicts), under the command of Capt. Williams (who is a Captain in the 4th, and many of the men also belong to the regt.), were immediately sent in pursuit of them, and succeeded in apprehending the whole of the deserters in the second week after their escape, and the four soldiers were to be brought to trial. Head-quarters and 2 cos. marched from Youghal on the 6th, to arrive at Fermoy on the 7th. The comps. at Dongarvon also marched to Fermoy, and the comp. to Rathcormac.

85th—Capts. Brockman and Power have gone on leave, as also Ens. Grey. The following officers have joined from leave:—Capts. Hunt and Hunter, Lieut. Knox, and Lieut. Dickson and Ens. Blackborne.

86th depot—Capt. J. Creagh commands the detachment at Fethard.

87th—An indictment was preferred against Charles Hall for persuading Patrick M'Govern, a soldier of this regt. to desert with — Bray, of the 97th, but the counsel for the prosecution having no further evidence than what was produced on the first trial, the prisoner was acquitted.

88th depot—The detachment at Bandon is commanded by Capt. Rutherford.—Capt. Ellis's comp., stationed in Bandon for the last three months, is relieved by Capt. Rutherford and his comp. from Kinsale.

W. rather sharp for going down Channel; she has had a good examination, and has been repaired, cleaned, and white-washed. She sailed on Wednesday in the forenoon; and was obliged to put back again shortly afterwards, the wind being westerly in the Channel.

91st depot—Capt. Forbes has gone on leave.

97th—At the Portsmouth Quarter Sessions held on the 4th inst., Chas. Hall, the occupier of a public-house called "The Neptune and Mars," was indicted for unlawfully persuading Edw. Bray, a soldier of this regt., to desert to the Spanish Legion. The evidence was clear as to this man and three others going from the house to a wherry, and then on board the Swiftsure hulk, and their capture the next day (29th July last) by the Adjutant of the regt.; but there was not sufficient proof that Hall was in the house at the time, and he was therefore acquitted.

99th—Maj. Macpherson is rapidly recovering from the effects of his late fall from his horse. Had not Mr. Mainwaring, of Bury Cross, the mother of Capt. George Mainwaring, of the R.A., who happened to see the accident, had him conveyed into the house, and administered to him cordials, &c., the case would have been more serious. Ensign Gurland left Haslar for Chatham to embark for New South Wales with the new corps the 28th. Assist.-Surg. Robert Primerose has joined from leave of absence.

Royal Artillery—A number of very fine young men have arrived from Norwich to join the corps. All the recruiting parties are particularly successful, even where Sergeants of the line have failed. Some troops of the horse brigade, exercised with blank cartridge on Wednesday last, to the entire satisfaction of Lieut.-Col. Whinyates, C.B.—The Hope transport, from Woolwich, with Capt. Wood's company for Bermuda, was compelled to put into Fayal the 7th of last month in distress, with loss of boats, bolwarks, &c. There is no truth in the report of the death of Col. Sir John Hay.

Royal Engineers—Lieut. Yorke, whose death was recently noticed, is not the officer of that name of this corps, his only brother. They are both sons of the late Captain Yorke, of the Rl. Artillery, a much esteemed and gallant officer, whose widow has now to mourn a second loss in her country's service. The gentleman alluded to was in the E.I.C.'s artillery. Three privates have been sentenced to various terms of imprisonment for riotous conduct in Woolwich Lieut. Hawkins, whose temporary rank has been altered in that of "permanent," was the gentlemen who was within one yard of his young friend, Cadet Bull, when he was killed by the diverging of a cannon ball (from the mortar battery) on Woolwich Common. Riding School Inisp—The Gentlemen Cadets being absent on leave, the men are being instructed in the system of equitation prescribed by the Master-General. Capt. Phillpotts is placed upon the retired list.

Militia—An army medical officer is expected in this town next week to inspect the state of the officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates, of the Royal Carmarthen Fusiliers. Those who will be found old and unfit for service are to be pensioned off, the remainder, including the medical officers, are to be sent to the garrison towns, to drill the various depots quartered there; this arrangement will effect a considerable saving to the country, with an efficient drill at the depots, as the militia officers and non-commissioned officers will not be subjected to embarkation and foreign service—Carmarthen Journal.

Repeated attempts have been made by those interested in military matters to improve the mode of attaching the knapsack to the back of the soldier, as that now in use in the British service is liable to considerable objections. Its principal defect is, that to prevent the slings from galling a man under the arm, a strap is buckled across the breast, which obstructs the expansion of the chest necessary to respiration, and totally unfits a man for a long continuance of violent exertion. We are happy to find that Lieut. Tinkler, of the Royal Marines, has submitted to Maj.-Gen. Sir J. Cockburn, a set of slings which, from their allowing the muscles of the chest full play, are likely to add much to the ease and comfort of our soldiers while on service. A few sets, fitted on the new plan, have been ordered to be issued in each of the divisions for the approval of the Commandants. We have not seen Lieut. Tinkler's pattern, but we understand that the alteration consists in having a loop in the end of each of the straps which pass from the top of the knapsack over the shoulders, and substituting for the two buckles now at the bottom of the pack, two straps with a buckle on the end of one of them. When the knapsack is to be put on, these latter straps are love through the loops in the shoulder-straps, and buckled in front of the man's body, nearly as low down as the waist, so that the pressure is below the ribs, where it is supposed it will not be inconvenient. We confidently hope that knapsacks on this plan will answer the desired end, as they also possess the advantage of being easily put on or taken off by the soldier, without halting or being assisted by a comrade.

Lieut. Mc Mahon is performing the duties of Major of Brigade to the South Western District, in the absence of Lieut.-Col. Cumwood.

Capt. Bowen has been appointed barrackmaster at the Bahamas, vice Bennett, deceased.

We regret to find that Lieut. Sibun is greatly delayed in the execution of that national trophy, the Waterloo model, by the want of certain information from Holland, for which, we believe, he applied to the Prince of Orange at the latter end of 1834, but has not yet succeeded in obtaining any reply, although several applications have since been made to H.R.H. from individuals of rank and influence, urging a compliance with the gallant and accomplished officer's request. Should any of our readers have military friends at the Hague, they might render an essential service by requesting them to call at the War Department there, and make inquiry as to the progress which has been made in replying to the queries on this subject.

The Deputy Adjutant Generalship of the Mauritius has been discontinued from the 1st of this month. We also hear that the Deputy Quartermaster Generalship will shortly follow, and that the duties of the two situations will be executed by a Major of Brigade, an arrangement which will produce a saving of 1500*l.* a year.

Maj.-Gen. Lord F. Somerset, as Military Secretary to the Com.-in-Chief, received officers on Tuesday. There were present—Col. Greville, Sir W. Johnstone, Major Hutchinson, Maj. Burne, Gen. Maitland, Sir John Hill, Adm. Hanyman, and about thirty other officers.

The Commander of the Forces in Nova Scotia, Maj.-Gen. Sir John Campbell, has appointed Capt. P. W. F. Campbell, of the Scots Fusilier-Guards, to be his Military Secretary, in the room of the late Hon. Capt. C. J. Norton, 52nd reg.

THE LATE CAPTAIN JAMES BLACK, R.N., C.B., K.M.T.

This officer entered the service in 1793, in which year he was in the Leviathan, at the siege and occupation of Toulon. In the following year he was in the same ship with Lord Hugh Seymour, in the memorable battle of the 1st of June with Earl Howe, and in 1795 he was again in Lord Hugh Seymour's flag ship, the Sans Pareil, in Lord Bridport's action. He was made a Lieutenant in 1799. In 1805 he was second Lieutenant of the Mars, in the glorious battle of Trafalgar, and early in the action became First Lieut., on the death of Capt. Duff of that ship: in this action Capt. Black was wounded. In 1806 he was First Lieut. of the Mars when that ship singly gave chase to four large French frigates, one of which, the Rhin, of 44 guns, was captured in the face of her three consorts. In September of the same year he was First Lieut. of the Mars, forming part of a squadron under Sir Samuel Hood, which chased and engaged a squadron of French frigates, four of which were captured, La Minerve, L'Armide, Indefatigable, and Gloire, the two latter taken by the Mars. In 1807 he was First Lieut. of the Mars at the bombardment of Copenhagen, and commanded one of the captured Danish line-of-battle ships on her passage to England; and, in a dreadful gale of wind, near Yarmouth, displayed great skill as an officer and seaman, in saving the ship and lives of 800 souls on board, by cutting away the masts, a measure if delayed five minutes longer the ship and all on board must have perished. In September, 1810, he was made Commander. In April, 1813, when commanding the Weasel, he chased a convoy of enemy's vessels, protected by 14 large gun boats, they having taken shelter under a battery at Boscayjour, on the Coast of Dalmatia, covered by a strong force of musketry on the neighbouring heights. In this situation he engaged them incessantly for 12 hours, and succeeded in sinking six of the gun boats, and burning 20 sail of the convoy. In this gallant affair, for which he was made Post Captain, the Weasel suffered a heavy loss in killed and wounded; amongst the latter, Capt. B. was shot through his right hand. In July of the same year, the Saracen and Weasel captured the Island of Mezzo, near Ragusa. The Island of Zara was also taken by the present Earl of Cadogan and Captain Black, who, when serving in the battery, was severely wounded by a spent shot, which caused him to fall across a gun below him, from the effects of which he never recovered, and which was ultimately the cause of his death. At the close of the war Captain Black was nominated a Companion of the Bath, and His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Austria, in return for his gallant services in the Adriatic, created him a Knight of Maria Theresa. The remote causes of Captain Black's death, were the internal injuries he received at the capture of Zara; and although his modesty would not allow him to seek any compensation for his wounds during the last 22 years, still, however, on application, his Majesty was graciously pleased to grant him a pension of 250*l.* a-year, commencing from the 1st Oct. 1835, the benefit of which he never received, having died two months afterwards. As an officer Capt. Black was an ornament to the Naval service, and died universally beloved by all who knew him.

THE LATE LIEUT.-GEN. ALEXANDER DYCE.

We recorded in our last number the demise of this veteran officer of the Madras Establishment, and we will attempt to do justice to his long and distinguished services. In 1776 he entered the Company's army as a Cadet: he served as an Ensign in the Madras European Inf., with the force under Maj.-Gen. Sir Hector Munro, which, in 1778, besieged and took Pondicherry, after a gallant defence by M. de Bellecombe, Marechal de Camp. In 1779 he marched with the last body of European troops (with the permission of the Rajah's government) that had ever entered the Travancore country, for the purpose of embarking at Anjengo in transports, to be conveyed to Tellicherry, where a force was assembling to reduce the French establishment at Mahé, which surrendered, after a short resistance, to Col. Brathwaite.

On the irruption of Hyder Ally into the Carnatic in 1780, Lieut Dyce joined a detachment assembled at Tanjore, under the orders of Lieut.-Col. Cosby, destined to reinforce the army under Sir H. Munro, and which, by a rapid march of 200 miles, succeeded in joining the wreck of that army at Chingleput, after a miraculous escape from the main body of Hyder's army, which had pursued that of Sir H. Munro, from Conjeveram. During the course of that march Lieut. D. was engaged in the attack of Chiltapet, which Lieut.-Col. Cosby attempted to carry by surprise; but the party were repulsed, with the loss of about 70 killed and wounded, in consequence of the failure of their ladders.

Lieut. Dyce was next appointed Adj. to a batt. of Native grenadiers (the only one in the army), and marched, on the opening of the campaign, in 1781, under the command of Lieut.-Gen. Sir Eyre Coote, to relieve the f of Wandiwash. During the occupation of the positi at Cudalore by Sir E. Coote, the advanced posts w frequently harassed by large bodies of the enemy's hor and, on one occasion, all the pickets in waiting, consi ing of half a company from each N. batt., with a sm party of N. Cav. and two six-pounders (in all about 4 men), under the orders of the late Lieut.-Col. Ow Field-officer of the day, having moved from the lines repel them, the Lieut.-Col. unfortunately allowed hi self to be cutted 5 or 6 miles from the camp, when was suddenly attacked by a very large body of horse a rocket men, under the personal command of Meer Sah which surrounded and threatened to charge the pickets all sides. Such was the imminent peril of the momen that the alternate files were ordered to present differe fronts to check their advance, when, at the same insta one of the six-pounders bursting, killed and wound several men, while the enemy's horse, giving a ding, huzza! and advancing within forty or fifty yards, occ sioned a well-grounded alarm. Still, however, the offic succeeded in reserving the fire of the line; and the hor having halted, orders were given to retreat to camp. this movement the enemy again showed an intention advancing, covered by a cloud of rockets, when t sepoys, wavering and greatly agitated, called out it w another "Baillie's massacre."

Lieut. Dyce, at this critical moment, when Lieut.-C Owen was in front of his company, apologising for h presumption, addressed him with the energy and convi tion of truth, urging that the troops would, in the pa of a retreat, under such circumstances, be inevitably c to pieces; and pointing out a village about 1000 yar in advance, suggested the expediency of an attempt gain it. This was adopted, and the troops, inspired the movement, succeeded, with some loss, in reaching t village, where, a few hours afterwards, a large force, und Sir Eyre Coote himself, appearing in sight, rescued t pickets. Sir Eyre Coote, after adverting to the impr dence which had compromised the safety of the picket congratulated Lieut.-Col. Owen on the decision whi had averted their destruction.*

In June of the same year, Lieut. D. was present the disastrous attack on Chillambram, where sever officers, and upwards of 300 men were killed a wounded, as also at the important battle of Porto-Nov on the 1st July, under Sir E. Coote, whose force, whi did not exceed 7000 firelocks, was opposed to and d feated the main army of Hyder Ally, estimated 100,000 men of all arms; producing a result which b been justly stated to have saved India.

On the junction of the Bengal troops under C Pearse, the army was re-organised and formed in brigades, when Lieut. D. received from Sir E. Coo the unsolicited appointment of Quart.-Mast. of Briga to the 5th Brigade, in which capacity he was prese in the general action with Hyder at Perambaucum, whe his Brigadier was mortally wounded, 27th Aug., and Sholingur, 27th Sept., 1781. After the latter action received the appointment of Maj. of Brigade to the 5 Brigade, and was present in all the subsequent servi that occurred until the retreat of the enemy's army fro the Carnatic.

M. de Bussy, with a large force from France, havi landed and taken possession of Cudalore, the gra army, reinforced by several King's regts. from Englan assembled before that place, on which occasion Lieut. was named Aide-de-Camp to the Hon. Maj.-Ge Bruce, of H. M.'s 100th reg., the second in comman and was present at the severe but successful attack the French lines before that place, 13th June, 178 where upwards of 40 officers and 1000 men were kill and wounded.

After the armistice with M. de Bussy, and the retu of the troops to Madras, it became necessary to form army of demonstration to accelerate the treaty th negociating with Tippoo Saib, and Lieut. Dyce w again named Maj. of Brigade; he was subsequently a pointed to command the batt. of Nelore Sebundees, co sisting of 1000 men, and on its reduction he was nam Dep.-Adj.-Gen. to the southern division of the arm commanded by Brig.-Gen. Horne. A change of syste having again taken place, that office was annulled, and was reappointed Maj. of Brigade, in which capacity, a that of Barrack-Master to the southern division, served until the year 1795, when his private affairs r quired his presence in England.

He resumed his duty in India in 1799, and was a pointed as Lieut.-Col. to raise the 2d batt. 16th N.

* When it is considered that the army at this juncture w greatly dispirited by the recent catastrophe of Col. Baillie defeat, and a variety of other causes, which their merely defe sive position at Cudalore sufficiently evinced, the preservation the pickets must indubitably appear to be a matter of high portance, not solely from their numerical amount, but from certain influence which their loss must have produced on feelings of every native corps in the army at that moment of pression.

with the command of the fortress of Madura. He afterwards was posted to the command of Palamcotah and the troops in the district of Tinnevelly, which situation he was obliged to quit, and again seek the restoration of his health in Europe in 1807. Being next appointed a Maj.-Gen. on the staff of the Madras army he again proceeded to his duty, and arrived at Madras in May, 1817. At this period the force from Madras, under the orders of Lieut.-Gen. Hislop, was preparing to co-operate with the troops from Bengal and Bombay, in the extirpation of the Pindarries, and which service, shortly after, involved hostilities with the Mahratta States. Lieut.-Gen. Hislop having assumed the personal command of the Madras troops ordered for field-service, Maj.-Gen. Dyce, being at that time the senior Maj.-Gen. on that establishment, was appointed by government to the charge of conducting the details of the army at the presidency, in his absence. He immediately remonstrated respectfully to government and the Court of Directors against being detained on that duty, however honourable and confidential, when the élite of the army had taken the field, and when several Colonels, having been appointed to act as B.-Gens., were occupying those situations in the army in the field, to which his seniority of rank and his special appointment to the Staff, fully entitled him to pretend. The remonstrance was unsuccessful, and Maj.-Gen. Dyce had the mortification of being kept in charge of the army within the frontier, with four Maj.-Gens. under his orders, pending those successful operations which conferred honour, distinction, and emolument on his juniors.

Whilst holding the command at the presidency (nearly one year), a variety of military arrangements, involving great responsibility, devolved on Maj.-Gen. Dyce, especially a plan for the defence and protection of a most extensive frontier, during the continuance of hostilities, which proved completely successful. The Com.-in-Chief, Lieut.-Gen. Hislop, having returned within the limits of the government of Fort St. George, the Gov. in Council published General Orders to the army, expressing his entire approbation of the zeal, ability, and regularity with which the Maj.-Gen. had discharged the duties of his appointment.

Maj.-Gen. Dyce now assumed the command of the southern division of the army, which he retained until his period of four years on the Staff was expired, when he returned to England. On the 27th May, 1825, he obtained the rank of Lieutenant-General.

THE FOREIGN PACKET QUESTION.

Sir,—It has been with much gratification that I have observed that your correspondent An Old Admiral has done me the honor to read with attention, as he states, my remarks on the subject of placing the Foreign Packets in a port of Ireland, and as this gallant officer puts a few questions to me on this point, I must beg permission to occupy a space in your valuable columns once again, in order to reply to these queries.

First, then, in answer to the Admiral's remark, that but one packet sails to the westward, whilst all the others strive to get to the southward, I will only refer him to any officer that has had experience in these vessels, when he will at once learn that ALL the sailing packets UNIFORMLY strive to get into the longitude of from 12 to 14 degs. west, before they think of making southing, and if An Old Admiral will look at a chart, he will observe that the packets bound to the Brazils, as well as to the West Indies and North America, all pass over this meridian, and that of the latitude from 46 to 47 degs. N. on their several routes. As the north winds on the coast of Portugal aiding the voyages of the packets going to North or South America, these winds, it is well known, never extend a hundred miles off the shore, and, besides, no Commander of a packet bound across the Atlantic ever dreams of keeping so near unto Finisterre, if he can possibly avoid it. In accordance with the suggestions of An Old Admiral, I could indeed much wish a packet to start from a port on the south-east of Ireland, and another at the same time from Falmouth, bound either to the West Indies or to the Brazils, and I am positive the advantage would be decidedly in favour of the Irish one, the difference of longitude far outweighing that of the difference of latitude.

How far Valentia Harbour may, as your correspondent presents, be objectionable for the packets, I will not at present stop to argue, but I will contend that BEARHAVEN, in BANTRY BAY, is unexceptionable, and on it lies eight or ten miles E.N.E. of the extreme south-west point of Ireland, and thereby not near so deeply embayed as Falmouth is within the Lizard, the egress and ingress of packets must at all times be easy, let the winds be as they may; whereas, from Valentia, it is too true, I fear, as has been observed, that with strong gales from the westward the packets would be exposed to a dangerous lee shore many leagues. Hence Bearhaven must indisputably be preferred, I should imagine.

It is, I will assure the gallant Admiral, principally, and with truth I might add wholly, that our money may be rendered acceptable to the unhappy Irish poor, that I have been led to advocate this question, for I have not the most remote connection with Ireland, or with any person inhabiting that kingdom. If the packets be stationed in Ireland, of course the means of replenishing their stores, and causing their necessary repairs, will be secured at the port where the establishment may be fixed.

Having yesterday had sent to me a pamphlet, written by the worthy officer whose opinions regarding Falmouth the Old Admiral has so warmly supported, I will beg to quote a few remarks from it in aid of my arguments that the prevailing winds in the channel are from the westward, I may say nine months in the year on the average, and consequently that a port in longitude ten degrees west must be far preferable to a packet station to one in longitude five degrees.

In Captain Manderson's pamphlet, I find it stated that in one year, which he names, the winds were as follows at Falmouth,—

|---|---|
| In the S.W. quarter | 152 days |
| In the N.W. quarter | 101 days |
| In the S.E. quarter | 30 days |
| From the north to the east quarters, which is fair from EVERY PORT in the United Kingdom | 82 days |
| | 365 |

And in another place, Captain Manderson observes that at a different period, out of 339 days, the winds blew from the western quarters 452 days; and of the remaining 186 days there was only eight days' south east wind.

These facts, from such an authority, the gallant Admiral will not, I am sure, dispute, and in conclusion I will only further remark, that I will cheerfully abide by his suggestion, and leave the points at issue to the opinion of the ADMIRALTY, or to that of any committee of experienced and impartial naval officers, who should decide whether, with the winds from north west to south west, a vessel from BEARHAVEN will not pass over the latitude and longitude I have before named, that of between 46 and 47 degs. N. and 12 to 14 degs. W., being the accustomed route across the Atlantic, many days earlier than one from FALMOUTH would do so, and that thereby she would make her voyage in considerably less time.

In reply to the observations of your correspondent from Galway, recommending a port in that part of Ireland for the packets, I will briefly remark, that vessels sailing from thence, with the constantly prevailing westerly winds, would be exposed to above a hundred miles of dangerous lee shore, which must at once render such a proposal unattainable.

Dec. 28th, 1835. A POST CAPTAIN.

Sir,—It appears to me that your correspondents, Impartial Observer and a Post Captain, have overlooked under what circumstances I first advocated the cause of Falmouth Harbour, and that it was in comparison with some other ports on the sea coasts of England; the S.W. of Ireland, if I remember truly, was never mentioned. The range of the universe, not own solar system, or even that of the British empire, I leave to Impartial Observer; what I have said was supported by experimental facts, not on theories, or assumption of probable circumstances in its favour, any of which, I need not now repeat; I therefore, Sir, pass on to make some observations on the letter of a Post Captain, respecting the S.W. coast of Ireland being preferable to Falmouth, in answer to that of An Old Admiral, which appeared in the Naval and Military Gazette of the 5th Dec., preferring Falmouth to Milford, or the S.W. coast of Ireland, as a station for the foreign packets.

The Post Captain says, he will take the Old Admiral's selected wind from N.N.W. for starting with; and afterwards adds, "allowing this wind will take his vessel clear of Ushant." Is there not some misapprehension here with respect to the bearings of Falmouth and Ushant, both being on the same meridian? therefore, a vessel from the former may shape her course in any point of the S.W. quarter of the compass she thinks most advantageous, as soon as the land trending south-westward to the Lizard will permit her. She certainly then may be permitted so to guide herself as to have run 100 miles in twelve hours, with the wind two points abaft the beam, and to have made good a true S.S.W. course, she would then be thirteen leagues west of Ushant. Allow her, then, to alter her course to W.S.W., with the wind on the beam, and to run 100 miles in the next twelve hours, she would then be in lat. 7 deg. 10 min. north, lon. 7 deg. 51 min. west.

But the Post Captain says, "a vessel from Ireland might steer S.W. by W." What is to prevent one from Falmouth doing the same? But taking it, as he has done, at a true S.S.W. course, 240 miles, she would then be, in twenty-four hours, in lat. 46 deg. 28 min. N., lon. 7 deg. 33 min. W.

In his calculation, nothing has been allowed for the mail arriving so much sooner at Falmouth than it possibly can on the S.W. of Ireland; taking the difference of time twenty-four hours (experience may prove it to be more), it is shown that with a N.N.W. wind (and it might be so with twenty more points of the compass) a vessel from that port might be forty-four leagues S.W. by W. of Ushant, and from Brayhead, on the island of Valentia, by E. ¾ E. ninety-five leagues, being then so much nearer to Lisbon and still the south of Europe, thirty-two leagues farther from New York, but nearer to the island of Barbadoes. There can be no IMPARTIAL unbiassed calculation, where the difference of time in the arrival of the mail at the two situations is not taken as a most important witness. I would ask, if the advocates for S.W. of Ireland suppose a packet sailing from Falmouth when they are ready, with the same mail, when she may be sixty, seventy or eighty leagues on her voyage, where is their impartiality?

"An indraught to the Bay of Biscay mentioned, whatever it may be nearer to Ushant I will not pretend to say, but it has been long known, that during strong south-westerly winds a current sets round Capes Finisterre and Ortegal into the southern extremity of the Bay, and vents itself near the northern by a N.W. by W. course. It is said that after a continuance of such gales for some time, it has been found to make sixty miles westing, and twelve and thirteen soothing, in twenty-four hours. It is recorded, so far back as 1787, that the Atlas Indiaman, outward bound, when about fifty leagues westward of Ushant, met with violent gales beginning at S., and for four days continued between that point and W. by S., the ship lying to with her head to the N. W.; on the fifth it moderated, but the wind was S.W. Stormy weather came on for nine days, blowing from all points between S. and W.S.W., but most violent from the latter and S.W. When the ship was enabled to proceed on her voyage, she found her longitude, by time-keepers, two DEGREES AND A QUARTER west of her dead reckoning.

It may be that near the northern edge of this current there may be a contrary motion, of which it is the course as is observable of fluids in motion, but this being ascertained and its limits defined might be avoided.

Sir, equally with the Post Captain and yourself, I have no interest to be gratified; I believe him to be sincere, and influenced by the same motive as myself—the interest of our country, however on some questions we may differ as to the means by which it is to be attained. And as he thinks me "mistaken in many of my views," without they be pointed out I can neither justify myself, nor confess my error. Where he thinks me "mistaken," others may be of a contrary opinion, and shall leave to all "facts to the unbiassed and disinterested part of the public to decide upon." But as he has supposed that with a strong "N.W. by W. wind a packet from Falmouth could not weather Ushant," and as this wind brings the S.W. of Ireland in the wind's eye of that port, it is but fair to examine all circumstances impartially, and ascertain whether it be so or not. But this must be done by a future communication.

Dec. 30th. J. MANDERSON.

DISTINCTIONS CONFERRED UPON REGIMENTS.

Sir,—Seeing in a late Gazette that a regiment has been permitted to bear on its colours and appointments the words "Cape of Good Hope," and knowing, as I do, that not long ago an application was made to the proper quarter for an old and distinguished regiment to be permitted to bear on its colours and appointments the word "Quebec," but which to the unutterable regret of the corps was refused, on the plea of Canada being a conquered colony. Query—is not Canada and the Cape of Good Hope similarly situated in that respect, with this difference, that the former was taken from the French, the latter from the Dutch, which of itself is a reason why there ought to be no reluctance in granting "Quebec?" Besides, why should there not be a testimonial in commemoration of that gallant hero and his brave army, who fought and fell in so glorious a victory as that of the Plains of Abraham, under the walls of certainly now one of the greatest fortresses in the world.

General Wolfe was supported after he received his wounds by four grenadiers belonging to the regiment, for which the application alluded to was made.

MEDICAL AND CLERICAL SERVICES OF INDIA.

Sir,—I have been much gratified at the perusal of the paragraph in your last week's number, announcing the intelligence of the new scale of pension for the Company's Military Officers. But you do not inform your readers of any corresponding arrangements* with a due regard to the interests of the Medical and Clerical Services of India. The former are a body of men in number equal to the Civil Service: the period of service required of them before they attain a pension equivalent to that of a Captain is 17 years, and no further increase is allowed till they reach the grade of Superintending Surgeon. Now, agreeable to the present list of Assistant Surgeons, all those who have received their appointments subsequent to the year 1825 cannot by possibility be promoted to the rank of Surgeon under 18 years' service; and unless he gets into the grade of a Surgeon, although he may have served the full period of 17 years, he could not retire on the pension equivalent to that of a Captain. The period of service required to reach the grade of Superintending Surgeon is beyond comprehension, for, during Lord Bentinck's Administration, two Superintending Surgeoncies have been abolished, and there are at this time only six situations of this kind remaining to the Bengal establishment. In consideration of the time required to perfect themselves for their profession, the period of five and eight years have been allowed by the government to their Medical and Clerical servants, to place them on a par with the Military officers,—the latter going to India at 16 years of age, Clergymen at 28 years of age, and young Surgeons at 22 years of age. The same consideration is paid to the Company's Engineer Officers. The eighteen months or two years they are at Chatham under Col. Paisley is allowed them in their period of service, and, instead of 22 years, the Engineer officers may retire after 20 years' actual service in India, now, of course, reduced to 18 years. I hope to hear from you that the Court of Directors and Board of Control have been just to the Clerical and Medical branches of their service.

TREATMENT OF THE NATIVE SOLDIERY OF INDIA.

Sir,—None of your numerous Correspondents ever seem to revert to the neglect with which our Sepoys are treated: they talk enough of their own hardships and overlooked interests, but no one stands forth in defence of their men's!—nobody advocates their cause. I do not think the officers have half so much reason to complain as the Native soldiery, for whom nothing good has been done for years and years, whilst their prospects have been annually darkening. It is known to all Indian officers that extensive reductions have been made in the Native army, by which a great portion of the non-commissioned officers in each regiment became supernumeraries, and had to be absorbed by casualties before others could be made. This was a great hardship, and blighted the hopes of many an aspiring and deserving young soldier, but was borne by all with becoming submission: the effect of it had hardly been recovered, when half the Jemedars of the Cavalry (Madras Presidency) are reduced. This at once stops the promotion to the rank of commissioned officer in that branch of the service for an indefinitely long period, although the men are taught to look up to its attainment as their only reward for good conduct and faithful service, but which is completely cut off from the present generation of non-commissioned officers, who, by their exemplary behaviour and acquirements, have rendered themselves worthy of the elevation, and consequently they reasonably calculated on its attainment; but before these supernumeraries are absorbed, they will, by old age and provoked disgust for the service, be no longer eligible. I say it is very hard indeed to snatch a promised reward from a good soldier on the plea of economy just as he has rendered himself worthy of it by his good conduct, Native officers, equivalent in number to the supernumeraries, should have been pensioned in the same order that made them so.

The old Sepoy (unlike soldiers of other armies) may have served his government faithfully two-thirds or three-fourths of his life, but he receives no more pay than the raw and untried recruit: the good and bad, old and young, are classed alike, and nothing is done to improve their condition or strengthen their attachment to us. It is a common saying with Sepoys that the "Coompănī jutcăn thē, up bondhā," which, unsignificantively speaking, means that they were formerly liberal and considerate, but are grown wary and avaricious. None of the measures urged by the old officers who were examined before the House of Commons' Committee having been adopted, just confirms what I now say, that the government are too indifferent to the interests of the Native soldiers. I only hope we shall not go too far; for although they are by nature submissive and patient to a degree, experience has told us that they can be driven by despair to overt acts in self-defence. Their pay should be increased with length of service. Native officers should be treated with more distinction on retiring from active service on their pensions, when if, instead of making them sink into insignificance and idleness—to sit with a long beard brooding over disappointed hopes at their native villages, their services were still retained, with the complimentary titles of Killadars of fortresses and garrisons, and Native Aides-de-Camp to Brigadiers, according to their respective claims, merits, and capacities, a very large portion of our pensioned Native officers would quit their regiments with a better feeling towards the government than many now do, and then influence would be secured in our favour.

Honorary distinctions of this sort (for they would value the consequence attached to these situations sufficiently to require but a mere nominal addition to their pension) would secure a continuance of their fidelity, a consideration of vast importance to our stability, when it is remembered that a great number of these pensioners reside in and near military cantonments, where, by withdrawal from regimental and garrison duties, they are of course more at leisure to mix with the inhabitants, which cannot fail to give them a correct and early insight into prevailing feeling or hearing of plots or conspiracies, which, if dignified with a situation of responsibility, and still considered a Company's officer, would they not feel a pride in reporting? If, on the contrary, they are permitted to remain idle and unnoticed on a pension which they perhaps consider disproportionate to their services, they are as likely, in the weakness of old age or bitterness of feeling, either to permit disaffection to take its course, or lend a secret aid in its concection.

Will any one tell me that none of the Native pensioners at Bangalore were aware of the Bangalore Conspiracy in 1832 long before it was discovered?

THE EXTRAORDINARY CASE OF MR. H. D. PERROTT, LATE LIEUTENANT R.N.

"What stronger breast-plate than a heart untainted!
Thrice is he arm'd that hath his quarrel just;
And he but naked, though locked up in steel,
Whose conscience with injustice is corrupted."

Sir,—A letter signed Observator, with some documents relative to the unfortunate Mr. Perrott, late a Lieutenant in the Royal Navy, was delivered to me, through your kindness, on the 29th Nov., "soliciting my attention to his case, and entreating me to weigh it in my mind, and, should I deem it worthy of support, to give a few lines on the subject to the public, through the Naval and Military Gazette."

Observator speaks most highly of your able statement of his case in your No. 138, to which I have referred, and find your heart as warm to serve him, as your judgment of his case is fair and impartial, the usual characteristics of my good fellow, Mr. Editor.

However difficult the task requested of me, I beg permission to use my endeavour to accomplish it,—that task is to give my opinion also upon this case, as unprecedented as it is apparently the hardest of the hard; not that I have the vanity to suppose I can better your opinion, but with a hope of assisting you in the laudable act of drawing public sympathy for the wounds, the services, and the losses of an officer who has submitted to the justice and gracious consideration of two monarchs, to successive Naval Administrations, and several times to the House of Commons, an order of the Court of King's Bench for his restoration to all that he had lost by the judgment given against him in a former trial, and also affidavits from respectable individuals some years after his full acquittal, which proved his innocence of the charge for which he was tried. To submit this case in all its bearings, lights, and shadows to public opinion, the whole must be explained, which I will do as briefly as the justice of the case will admit.

"Be it known, then, to all men" that Mr. Henry Dundas Perrott, formerly a Lieutenant R.N., was tried at the Maidstone Lent Assizes in 1812, "for obtaining money (as it was asserted), under the pretence of obtaining a protection for a man of the name of Bullen," was convicted of the offence, and his name instantly removed from the list of Lieutenants of the Royal Navy.

That this conviction was reversed in the King's Bench, "Wednesday, on the Octave of the Purification of the blessed Virgin Mary, in the 54th year of King George the Third."

"Kent. The King versus H. D. Perrott.—Upon hearing Counsel on both sides, it is considered and adjudged that the judgment given against the defendant in this prosecution be reversed, and that the said defendant be restored to all that he has lost thereby."

We have here before us all, fairly and squarely, what every Naval and Military officer must feel and consider no honourable acquittal by every high Court of Law, the King's Bench, of the crime of which he was at first arraigned and convicted by a very petty Court of Law, the Assizes. Not only is he fully acquitted, but is furthermore ordered by the Court of King's Bench "to be restored to all that he lost by the aforesaid conviction," not on any matter of informality, but on the merits of the case. Even Lord Ellenborough, who presided on the reversal, said—"That in justice and mercy he ought to have been acquitted;" and the Recorder of London, who argued the case, asserted "that he would have walked him out of Court."

Know ye all men, that I shall now haul on board my fore and main tacks of argumentation, and carry on with "honour's breeze" to beat up against spring tides, ebbing from undiscovered sources and under-currents, to the point—WHY this gentleman has not been restored to his rank in the Navy, and character in the world, conformably to the order of the said high Court of Law.

The documents printed and written before me, plainly exhibit that the Admiralty, from 1812 to this very day, firmly believe that forged certificates were found on Mr. Perrott's person, or in his desk, seized in his house when he was himself arrested, and incarcerated for trial. But why were they not produced against him at the trial, or by the Admiralty, after the order of restoration, to prove to him and the public, by the exhibition of damning papers (asserted to be forged by his own hand), that he was not worthy even of restoration to character in society, much more to honour as an officer, or to his rank in the British Navy? But not one document of that nature has ever been produced against him, though solicited by applications and petitions from himself, and by Members of the House of Commons, in the House, and privately in the Admiralty, which Board, when pressed by M. T. Attwood, M.P., to produce the said asserted forged documents, informed him that "they were lost." Had they existed, they should have been safely secured at the Admiralty to prevent his restoration; but as they are now said to be lost, at the "eleventh hour," a doubt must arise in the minds of all whether they ever did exist: at all events, by the admission of their loss there can be no document of that description in existence to appear against him, besides which he (Perrott) has solemnly made oath at the Mansion House, before Sir Peter Laurie, Lord Mayor, on the 27th July, 1833, "That he did not at any time procure, or attempt to procure money from any person or persons, on the pretence of obtaining for them protection against impressment; and that the specific charge advanced in the speech of Sir James Graham on Monday last, 22nd July, 1833, in the House of Commons, that is to say—'That on the apprehension of Mr. Henry Dundas Perrott, forged certificates in his handwriting were found on his person, or in his desk, are destitute of foundation.'" Independent of all this, I observe in Mr. P.'s address to the Members of the House of Commons these words—"Were I guilty, I could not—dare not appeal to your feeling on justice; but I challenge (as all has been done by Members in your honourable House, as well as privately) the production of any document asserted to be against me, and, with a conscious innocence, pledge myself to acquit myself of the shadow of crime, and stand or fall by your voice."

From the several naval administrations having publicly asserted that forged certificates were found in the desk of Mr. Perrott, when seized on his apprehension, is the sole cause of Mr. P. not having been restored to his rank and honour years ago; and, from these repeated assertions of gentlemen and gentlemen, I can but believe that such documents were so found, but I also believe, from Mr. Perrott's oath, that he neither forged them, nor connived at their forgery, nor knew of their being in his desk, but that they were the most diabolical fabrications of those concerned in the conspiracy against him, and deposited in the desk to give a certain appearance of his guilt. Vile acts of those who did not acknowledge their crimes until they were no their death-beds! This affidavit will prove the conspiracy, without the insertion of three others.—"Kent to wit. John Clarabut Gillbee, late Captain in the York Rangers, maketh oath that his nephew, Earl Gillbee, did inform this deponent that he, Earl Gillbee, did fill up a blank form of a protection from one he had, borrowed at the earnest request of Elizabeth Bullen, for the purpose of a protection for Robert Bullen, upon which fabricated protection Henry Dundas Perrott was convicted at Maidstone, in the year 1812. That this deponent considered it necessary to conceal this important fact, as he feared it might endanger the life of his nephew, Earl Gillbee. That this deponent is sixty-three years of age, and that he could not depart this life in peace with such an act unrevealed on his conscience.

"(Signed) John Clarabut Gillbee.

"Sworn before Mr. Dennet, Mayor, within the Corporation of Gravesend, Kent, 15th July, 1828."

By the statute law, the liberty, the person, and the property of an Englishman are his birthright,* by which I always was of opinion, until this case came before the public, that no man within this land of freedom and justice could be distressed to his utter ruin, "the villain, or bondman, not being subjected to the forfeiture of his implements of tillage;" yet this free-born Englishman, when apprehended in 1812, was forcibly deprived of his certificates of particular services; and even his Sea Journals (indispensably necessary to obtain his compensation-money) were torn from him also. Up to this day, not one of them has ever been restored to him, or compensation-money paid him. They are his sole property wheresoever found; they are unconnected with the alleged forged documents said to be found in his desk. They should have been instantly restored to him to prove at the trial his previous meritorious conduct, his faithful services, his severe wounds received in action with the enemy of his country, and his spotless character. The retainers of those documents, to him his invaluable property (be they who they may), have subjected themselves to heavy damages and the contempt of the world, if proved in a court of law, for an unwarrantable act of injustice, that of thus unlawfully distressing this proven innocent man, to his utter ruin since 1812, by the retention of those instruments by which only he could work his livelihood in any foreign or home employ; in fact, they are to him what the implements of tillage are to the villain or bondman, secured to him by Magna Charta.

My good fellow, Mr. Editor, as I cannot explain the whole facts of this singular case in one letter, with my remarks thereon, I will finish it by giving my opinion upon the great probability of Mr. Perrott (whether restored to his rank or not) recovering his compensation-money by a simple application to the Admiralty, accompanied with an affidavit of tha fact (as it happened) of the journals having been forcibly seized and unlawfully retained by some unknown authority for so many years, consequently as irrecoverably lost to him, as if they had been taken by the enemy or destroyed by fire or shipwreck.

If the Admiralty will not, under these circumstances of peculiar hardship to Mr. Perrott, direct the compensation-money to be paid him, without the production of these lost journals, then I will say that, even in this land of justice and equity,

"There is a wrong without a Remedy."

PANTALOON AND WATER WITCH.

Sir,—As you will, doubtless, be anxious to know the result of three days' trial of sailing, which we have just had with H.M. brig Water Witch, I avail myself of that vessel's return to port to inform you that our competition has been generally in light winds and with very trifling difference in our points of sailing, except in strong breezes, close hauled, when we have had a very decided advantage, as was apparent yesterday, when we got more than three miles to windward of her in three hours and a half—rate about eight and a half knots per hour. The advantage she has shown in light winds is very small, seldom more than a mile in a trial, and you will please to remember that (though of the same tonnage) she spreads about 600 yards more canvas than we do, and our stores, &c., are the heaviest by more than 13 tons; therefore this is to be accounted for. I send you these few particulars in great haste, as, doubtless, there will be many reports about this trial between crack vessels; you shall have further particulars upon our return to England. Pantaloon.

THE SENIOR MATES OF THE ROYAL NAVY.

Sir,—About twelve months since appeared, I believe in your excellent and impartial Gazette, the names of the following seniormates who had then passed their examinations for Lieutenants fifteen years, and were still unpromoted.

| | Entry in Navy. | Date of passing for Lieutenant. |
|---|---|---|
| Arthur Murphy . . . | 1811 | 1819 |
| William Robinson . . | 1811 | 1819 |
| Matthew Peppie . . . | 1812 | 1819 |
| William Markland . . | 1813 | 1819 |
| William Cummings . . | 1813 | 1819 |

I regret to say another year has elapsed without their having progressed one step, therefore they still occupy the same advanced post with the additional servitude of another year, increasing their passed time to sixteen, and their total servitude to twenty-two years. The causes of this protracted probation may be accounted for in the frequent changes of the Admiralty Board within these last five years; consequently, and naturally, private friends have first been provided for, without a sufficient time elapsing to bring forward those for services. It was the custom, in a former administration (Lord Melville's), to promote a few by seniority annually, which was a very fair way, and I believe the plan adopted by other navies with respect to their probationary grades. But in the case cited only a very few were promoted seniorly, compared with others, yet it was a satisfaction to the old ones to know that the time was arriving when they should be certain of their step too. Very different, however, has the case been since; they serve on, year after year, vainly appealing for justice to their claims, which are acknowledged in such ambiguous terms as to create a tantalising hope that their applications are regarded, but which cruelly ends in disappointment and neglect. Should, then, the small promotion be suspended, as is reported, what prospect have these unfortunate gentlemen before them, already heart-sick and spirit-broken from "hope long deferred?"—the last ray shut out, their case would indeed be forlorn! But I cannot believe the present Board could contemplate such injustice to these unfriended individuals, knowing the kind feeling which prevails with its members for old officers. It is hoped, then, that this report is ill-founded, and these veteran midshipmen still have a chance of being brought forward. Their entering the Navy during the war, and subsequent long service—the smallness of their pay, without any definite rank—certainly entitle them at length to consideration, either in an arrangement similar to that formerly, of promoting ten or a dozen annually from the top of the list, or by appointing a defined limit of servitude—say even eighteen or twenty years. Such a regulation would have the effect of advancing those who are not so fortunate as to possess interest without interfering with those who do, and at the same time lessen those numerous and worrying applications which pour in daily at the Admiralty.

Sir, by giving this insertion in your excellent paper you may be doing a service to the class alluded to, and oblige

NAVAL OFFICERS' WIDOW AND ORPHAN ASYLUM.

Sir,—There are few subjects which afford a better study of human nature and the motives by which human passions are influenced than the sympathies of the British public. If a charitable subscription be on foot, it is astonishing how magical is the effect of a printed list of donors, be it but headed by some leading personage, as such a display affords the gratification of seeing individual self set down as a contributor to such and such amount. If the infliction of punishment on the most worthless and incorrigible in the Army or Navy be the subject, again is British sympathy excited, with the additional charm that in this case it costs nothing, save unjust vituperation of the government which sanctions it, and the execration of the officers who are compelled by duty to award it. Nay, be it but told that privations wait upon those who, whether in the fulness of wealth, or the mite of misery, contemn and despise Englishmen with the rancour of religious hatred, the sympathies of the British public need but the incentive of a leader to be again roused in their behalf; but, without this spell, they remain dormant; else how is it that so considerable a portion of our fellow beings, and those the most helpless, are suffered to continue in known wretchedness and misery? and that too through no fault of their own, namely, the widows and orphans of Naval Officers! widows and orphans who are "to work unable, and ashamed to beg;" yet in their behalf the sympathy of the British public can no way be excited, and they are left to pine in abject penury. We are taught that "to clothe the naked, and feed the poor, to cherish the widow and protect the orphan," are the leading characteristics of Christian charity; and when we cannot but remember that these proscribed objects of charity—nay, of justice, are the widows and orphans of men who had devoted their youth, and spent their best blood in the service of their country, and, as in a recent instance, died of contagion, imbibed on the pestilential Coast of Africa, when in actual service, we may indeed oppose to this rule of Christian sympathy that "ingratitude is truly sharper than the serpent's sting." Marked, too, that this infliction has its origin in the ruthless and arbitrary alienation of a prescriptive right; a right thoroughly established, in that officers themselves contributed for ages to the fund for the payment of pensions to widows; whether such contributions were adequate or not, in no way vitiates the claim, which was acknowledged and responded to until the pseudo-patriots set up the idol "economy," before which the weakest alone are made to bow down. Is this a becoming source of husbanding that pittance of the national wealth, which, supposing the officers' contribution to have been inadequate of itself, was probably extended in justice and charity? Is such a fitting system of economy! when they ask you for bread, you do not even proffer a stone,—for there is not a house of refuge to which they can flee. Can the national honour be exalted by the abasement of its officers, the consignment of their widows to penury, and sending the fatherless children to wander as outcasts in the land which their fathers had defended? Will it be credited, in after times, that the two Houses of Parliament sanctioned the spoliation by which they have been beggared? or can the members be unconscious of the fact? yet there are among them individuals belonging to both Army and Navy, and they cannot plead ignorance. Arouse, then, fellow-countrymen! arouse your patriotism, arouse your charity, and direct it in this legitimate channel; and if the legislature will not restore the rights of the destitute, let it again tax the officers in aid of requisite funds; let subscriptions be raised; and if the helpless widow and child must become the marked objects of charity, erect alms-houses for their shelter; for though the Ethiop has had precedence in your sympathies, surely you will not let your country-women and kindred longer continue the houseless and penniless wanderers to which they are decreed by the fatal Order in Council of June, 1830.

HALF-PAY OF LIEUTENANTS OF THE ROYAL NAVY.

Sir,—Although there has been a good deal written on the subject of the half-pay of the Lieutenants of the Royal Navy, as effected by giving to a certain number of the senior officers of that class the rank of retired Commander, it appears to me that the question has not been reduced into that simple form which it might be; I therefore beg leave to submit to you, in a few words, the mode in which I think the question ought to be put, and which I consider absolutely settles it in favour of the claimants.

By the Order in Council of 1814, establishing the present rate of half-pay for the officers of the navy, it is provided that the 300 senior officers on the list of Lieutenants, when unemployed, shall have 7*s.* a day; the 700 next in seniority on the said list, when unemployed, 6*s.* per diem; and all the remainder, 5*s.* per diem. Now whatever may have been the intention of the Board of Admiralty when the Order in Council of 1st Nov., 1830, was obtained for giving the rank of Retired Commander to a certain number of the senior Lieutenants of the fleet, (and I will even admit that it might not have been their intention to incur a greater annual charge than previously existed) yet I contend, that by the wording of that Order in Council, and their lordships' own proceedings thereon, it is clearly established that the officers retired under that Order in Council are no longer "Lieutenants," for in the printed official Navy List, dated "Admiralty Office, 1st Jan., 1835," these officers are classed by themselves as "Retired Commanders;" hence it is evident that their lordships have considered that they have ceased to be Lieutenants, and consequently it follows that the 300 officers who now stand first in seniority on the list of Lieutenants, and are numbered on the official list as such, are, under the general establishment of half-pay of 1814 before adverted to, entitled to 7*s.* per diem, and the next 700 to 6*s.* per diem half-pay. This is as clear as the day, and no official ingenuity or quibbling can construe the Order in Council otherwise.

But, Sir, after all, what is the amount of the boon (if it is to be looked at in that light) which is sought for in discussion? And who are the persons that would benefit by it? It would add the mighty sum of 1*s.* a day to the half-pay of about 184 Lieutenants now on the 6*s.* a day list, and 1*s.* a day to the same number who are now on the 5*s.* list; that is—368 Lieuts. at 1*s.* a day, increase 67*l.* per annum; and this sum divided amongst that number of officers, the senior of whom has been 32 years, and the junior upwards of 22 years on the list of Lieutenants, besides their previous service as Petty Officers, who are barely able to exist on the paltry pittance they receive, their prospects of promotion blighted, and their spirits sunk by the neglect of their country, which all of them have so long and, many of them, so nobly served.

The liberality of the country, however, ought not to be here, and, on a future occasion, I shall trouble you with some observations upon the justice of increasing generally the rate of half-pay of the Lieutenants of the Royal Navy.

X. Y.

[Our Correspondent coincides with the view we have frequently taken of this matter. When his second letter appeared we shall have a few words of comment.—Ed.]

"Three British Cheers"—And One more.—While cruising off Toulon in the fleet under Lord Nelson in the early part of 1804, with light airs from the N.W., the Niger's (armed en flute) signal was made to chase and examine a strange sail to the S.W., then just discernible from the mast-head; during the chase it fell calm, and it was not until the next day that she was able to get her by light and variable breezes; when within two miles of her it again fell a dead calm; the Niger hoisted her colours and fired a gun, which the stranger took no notice of; the six oared cutter was then lowered down and despatched with a crew of seven men, a Lieutenant and a Midshipman, to examine her, when within musket shot, she opened a heavy and incessant firing from her guns and muskets, by which means the Lieutenant (whose name at the present moment I do not recollect) was shot through the heart. The boat's crew, then undressing themselves to Mr. Hillyar, the Mid., "What is best to be done, Sir?" "Board and revenge your country's loss," was the instant reply. Without a moment's hesitation the boat was alongside with "Three British Cheers," which so panic-struck the enemy that she was boarded and carried, the crew retreating below and keeping up a heavy firing from the hatches. One seaman was killed and another wounded before the hatches were closed upon them; several of their crew lying dead upon the deck. A light breeze springing up at this critical moment, enabled the Niger to be alongside of her; she proved to be a Greek pirate, mounting six guns and musketry, with a crew of forty men. For this heroic deed Lord Nelson gave Mr. Hillyar, who was only twelve years of age, a dispensing order, appointing him Lieutenant to the Niger in the death vacancy, and promoted Captain Hillyar, who commanded the Niger, brother to the Midshipman, Post-Captain in the same ship, once more making her a frigate.—From Unpublished Naval Recollections.

Fortunate Tiff.—One of the richest men in England is the Rev. Mr. Hughes, formerly a poor clergyman, and now said to possess a revenue of between 70,000*l.* and 80,000*l.* a year. Some years ago he was in part proprietor of a barren piece of land, for which Lord Anglesea was then in treaty. The purchase money (a very small sum) was agreed upon, but the nobleman not keeping his appointment, one day, to finish the business, the commoner, in a tiff, would not give him another meeting. On the above-mentioned barren piece of ground were subsequently discovered the rich Anglesea copper mines, from which Mr. Hughes drews his enormous income.

At the Kensington Petty Sessions, on Saturday, the magistrates decided that the act requires pawnbrokers to keep accounts of the sale of articles pledged with them for sums under 10*s.*, in order to hand over the balance to the pledgers. It was hitherto supposed to apply only to sums above that amount.

*If "A Constant Reader" refers to our back Numbers, will find the case of the "Masters" fully advocated.—We have not time to attempt to decipher letters written in the fashion of the cross readings of Boarding-school Misses.—We cannot insert the letter of "A Staff Officer:" we dislike personalities, and his communication would be considered by every one as offensive to Colonel G. Erratum.—In the note to the letter (p. 846) of "An Old Sailor" on Naval Transports, there is a misprint of 25l. per ton per month instead of 25s. per ton for coppered ships, and 20s. for ships not coppered. These ships were hired for six months certain.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 9, 1836.

THE valuable opinions of one of our correspondents, who addressed us under the signature of an Old Sailor in our number of the 26th ultimo, on the subject of the hire of merchant vessels as Transports, will, we trust, have met the attention of those in authority, for his remarks were well worthy public regard. Most true it is, as this able writer has observed, that the late lamentable shipwrecks of the GEORGE THE THIRD and NEVA convict ships would teach the distinction between improper expenditure and over-strained economy. The desire to hire ships as transports at the lowest possible rate, without due regard to their efficiency in every point, has we fear in too many instances caused the sacrifice of the lives of all who have been embarked in them. Instead of continuing this objectionable system of conveying troops, or convicts, over sea in hired transports, we fully concur in opinion with our correspondent, that it would be far better to employ ships of war, with reduced masts and yards, and reduced crews, on these duties. Numerous advantages would accrue from this regulation, and at the least of which would be, that of thus having a couple of thousand, or more, seamen, with a proportion of active officers, constantly in actual service, on whom we could always put our hands to man a squadron of ships of the line in the event of an emergency.

In addition to this important consideration, the troops or convicts, embarked in these ships, fitted as flûte, would be far more comfortable and healthy than in merchant vessels; and, above all, their lives would be far more protected from danger of every kind. In proof that merchant vessels are very frequently not so sea-worthy, or so thoroughly examined, previous to a voyage, as ships of war always are, we have just seen an instance of this in a hired transport repairing at Plymouth, on board of which were embarked the chief part of a regiment destined for the East Indies; in this vessel a dangerous leak was most fortunately discovered previous to her sailing for her destination. This ship we find is one of the coal-box construction, admeasuring but nine hundred tons, whilst she carries eighteen hundred.

Knowing as we well do, that a vessel of this build must be exposed to far greater risks at sea than one of proper form and shape, and particularly if caught on a lee-shore, we do not hesitate to declare that, if the present system of employing transports be continued, no ship should be hired by Government to carry either men or stores henceforward that is of this objectionable construction, but that they should be in every way equal to meet the dangers to which vessels are liable to be exposed. This alone would be a great safeguard to the lives of our fellow-subjects, and it would also tend in a great degree to cause better ships to be built.

As regards the loss of the last convict ship, the Neva, when above two hundred people were drowned, we must add a few further observations to those which we have already made on this subject.

Having read the report of the inquiry held at Van Diemen's Land, into the causes which led to the unfortunate wreck of this vessel, we learn by it;—first, that at noon on the preceding day, they judged themselves to be ninety miles from the land; that they continued their course, steering E.N.E., running at the rate of about five to six knots an hour as it would appear, the wind being at W.N.W. That at 2 A.M., having then run about eighty miles from the preceding noon, they saw the land right a-head, distant, as they supposed, from their dead reckoning, about nine miles only. That they at once hauled the ship to the wind on the LARBOARD tack, under double-reefed topsails, it then blowing fresh, in order to clear the shoal called the Harbinger Reef, on which danger we believe it was that they afterwards struck, at about four A. M., that is just two hours after making the land.

Now, it occurs to us, that instead of hauling the ship upon the larboard tack upon seeing the land, bearing E N.E., with her head no higher than north, and with a heavy sea, that they indisputably ought, under all the circumstances of the case, to wore her round the moment they discovered the land, and brought her by the wind on the STARBOARD tack, with her head S. W., off shore till daylight. Even in a ship of war, well manned, and thereby far more ready to act at the instant upon seeing a danger, we should have done this under similar circumstances, and therefore we are compelled, unhesitatingly, to say, that here we deem the chief fault to lie, and which at best amounts to a serious error in judgment on the part of the person in whose hands the charge of this ship then was, and which we doubt not, but that on reflection the Captain will himself readily admit. To guard, then, against a recurrence of such fatal disasters, we would henceforward, as we have already observed, always send, even our convicted felons, as well as our troops, in ships of war, conducted by thoroughly experienced Officers, instead of placing so many hundreds of lives at the mercy, as it were, of any man who has never undergone any sort of examination or inquiry, touching his qualifications as a seamen and a navigator.

THE Governorships of Cork and of Duncannon Fort, which have become vacant by the recent deaths of Lieutenant-Generals Sir William Inglis and Sir John Hamilton, are not, we understand, to be filled up, but that, in lieu of these sinecure appointments, pensions will be bestowed on meritorious officers of all grades, we hope, who have deserved rewards from their country, out of the sum voted by Parliament for this purpose. Some of these pensions have, we believe, been already granted to several MILITARY Officers, and we trust that in like manner we shall see at an early period similar grants made to NAVAL Officers, and to those of different ranks likewise, who have been distinguished in the service, and who at this moment have nothing from the Government but their small stipend of half-pay,—a wholly insufficient allowance wherewith to keep up the rank, and honours also in many cases, that they have acquired by their conduct in war.

Whenever a Naval promotion takes place the four Colonelcies of Marines will fall vacant, and as these appointments are not to be renewed, several thousands per annum out of the Pension Fund, to be appropriated to the Navy, will be at once at the disposal of the Crown; and in a few years, on the deaths of the old Admirals, now filling the remaining sinecure situations of General and Lieutenant-General of Marines, &c., the whole of the 20,000*l.* a-year, to be given to the Navy, will become available. Of this grant we hope to see about the half of it distributed in pensions of from 200*l.* to 300*l.* a-year, amongst from thirty to forty superior Officers, that is to say, to Admirals and the senior Captains, and the remainder in lesser proportions, of from 50*l.* to 100*l.* per annum, amongst a hundred and fifty other Officers of junior and inferior ranks, to be recommended by the Admiralty for a share of this national reward, for services against the enemy, as shown by the records of the Admiralty Office; an arrangement of this kind will be far more just and satisfactory than the present partial system, under which the Naval sinecures are confined to about eight or nine individuals only, and these, in former times, have too often been bestowed for Parliamentary services instead of services at SEA.

Since the above observations were in type, the Governorship of Prince Edward's Island has fallen vacant by the demise of Sir William Young, on the 1st ultimo, after a long and lingering illness. We have frequently had occasion to comment upon the partiality with which Military Governments have been distributed, and pointed out the fact, that of late years the Navy has been deprived of the small portion of them which its Officers formerly enjoyed. We know of no Government where the talents of a Naval Officer would be more useful than that of Prince Edward's Island, which, situated in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, frequently affords the means of shelter and assistance to vessels in distress, trading to or from the Canadas, and we trust that, in selecting a successor to Sir William Young, Lord Glenelg will keep this important point in view, and bestow the Government upon some meritorious and intelligent officer of the Navy.

THE claims of old and meritorious Officers of the MARINES we have repeatedly called attention to in our columns, and, in doing this, we have as often impressed on the consideration of the different Boards of Admiralty the justice of bestowing on the sons of those gallant men commissions in this distinguished corps. It was, then, with real pleasure that we last week announced that the First Lord of the Admiralty had, with that liberality which belongs to his Lordship's character, bestowed on the son of the late Captain Timpson, who died at Portsmouth a week or two since, a Second Lieutenant nmission; and, as tha lamented father of this oung man was beloved and respected by all who new him, so we are assured the son will, in close nitation of his worthy parent's conduct through fe, prova himself well deserving of the protection hich has been so generously bestowed upon him y the EARL OF MINTO.

In confirmation of the correctness of the sug-estions which we have offered from time to time, elative to the better mode of suppressing smug-ling, wherein we strongly recommended the aeping several of the fastest sailing of our re-enue cruisers mid-channel or thereabouts, instead f hovering, as they now generally ALL do, along ur awn shores, where they only act as beacons too ften for the smugglers to be guided by; we have een, within the last fortnight, that one of these ruisers, tha Royal George, whilst acting as we had dvised, has fallen in with a large smuggling cut-er in mid-channel, and compelled her to throw er cargo overboard. Another was met off Port-and by tha Eagle revenue cruiser, but escaped, fter sacrificing her boat with eighty-three kags. f soma of thosa vessels, appointed to protect tha evenue in tho Channel, were to lie by day a-hull, ith their sails lowered down, at the distance of hree to five leagues north and south of each other, nd at night to cruise in these situations, they ould constantly get the smugglers between them, ad thus prevent the possibility of their escape; he pursuer making signals with guns, &c., during he chace. We shall recur to this subject on an arly occasion.

We have many times had occasion to notice the ery unfair manner in which journals, vaunting of heir impartiality, &c., seize upon circumstances, whether probable or remote, which can by possi-ility be construed into detraction of the merits or erformances of the ships constructed by tha present Surveyar of tha Navy. On most occasions their aboured effusions (which from their absurd style, s regards relation of seamanship, cannot deceive Naval Officers) emanata from a source which, were t worth our while, we could expose; but it will be ufficient in this respect to state that they are the roductions of two or three disappointed projec-ors, who are labouring at a point which, with tha xperience of tha past before the eyes of the Go-ernment, we think it is highly improbable they vill ever obtain. Enough of this. Our present urpose is to question the statement which appeared n a contemporary, for whom we have always en-ertained the highest respect, namely, the Hamp-hire Telegraph, a journal, wa cheerfully acknow-odge, seldom biassed and perfectly independent n its line of argument. We alluda to a report, ourporting to have been written on board the Barham, giving a detail day by day and hour by hour of the trials between that ship, Vernon, Re-enge, and Columbine. Now, we are in possession f statements which vary in a remarkable degree rom those, but wa did not think ourselves justified n publishing them last week, or even now, be-cause, although they satisfy us that in strong reezes the Vernon was greatly superior in weather-ng and stability, the essentials of a man of war, till as the ships had been ordered by the Admiral o undertake a further competition, and to remain t sea until they experienced rough weather, it ppeared, to us that no definitive result had been obtained by the trials already made. We might, however, find matter in the detailed report (which we suspect has been imposed upon our contempo-rary) to satisfy all impartial persons, that the Vernon is in every respect the best ship. All the Officers of the fleet (Barham included) acknowledge that ship was never in better trim, whilst, on the other hand, the general opinion is that the Vernon, from whatever cause, never performed worse. This is apparent from the Revenge now keeping her position in company, whereas it is notorious (and the Parliamentary Report confirms it) that the Vernon in every former case beat the Revenge on all points of sailing, at the rate of one or two miles per hour. The fact is, the squadron has been cruising about amongst baffling winds and contrary currents, and in some cases a shift of wind has brought the Barham, when nearly two miles on the lee-beam of the Vernon, the same dis-tance a-head of that ship, and hence it is that Captain Elliott has been unable to report any de-cisive advantage obtained by either ship, and we join in the opinion of the Officers at Malta, that no satisfactory superiority can be gained and main-tained upon such cruising ground as that selected for the trial. We trust, then, the ships now fitting, together with the Rodney, Vanguard, Vernon, Barham, Pique, and others, may be formed into a squadron of observation in the spring of the year, and sent to cruise for a couple of months off the Western Islands, under the command of some di-stinguished Officer, who has the ability to judge and tha honesty to report impartially of the qua-lities of the ships under his command, as to ca-pacity, stability, and speed, and that whichever ship possesses the combinations of these three essentials in the greatest degree (and to form a perfect man of war they must be combined) should be fairly entitled to bear the palm.

Two letters have lately appeared in the Times journal upon the subject of Sea Apprentices, wherein it is asserted that when Merchant ships are unemployed in London and other ports, the boys are boarded out in low lodging-houses, and exposed to every temptation of vice, whereby their morals are ruined, and they grow up into seamen devoid of all feeling of patriotism, caring not whom they serve; country, friends, &c. being to them of no account, with many more in the same strain. The letters are signed by a Com-mander in the Navy, evidently an enthusiast in making out his case; but the opprobrious terms which it has pleased him to heap wholesale upon British Seamen we look upon to be wholly unde-served. In some rare cases, it is true, apprentices are disposed of in the manner asserted, when their ships are under repair, or unemployed, but we will venture to say that, under such circumstances, three-fourths of them are lodged and boarded in tha houses of their Masters or Owners, and their morals better cared for than when on actual ser-vice. Neither will we admit that Seamen are the brutal, selfish, disloyal beings represented; but that, on the contrary, they have always displayed opposite qualities; that no men have endured more or performed more for their King and country; and that when driven to disloyal acts, or into the service of foreign States, it has been by the unbearable oppression exercised over them at home, in coercing their service, and assigning them a quarter the value they could obtain for it elsewhere, not for temporary or sudden emer-gencies, but as long as they were capable of work. We would recommend a Commander in the Navy before he again treats upon the subject he has com-menced, to take pains to acquire the information he is now evidently in want of, and to judge more leniently of the Seaman's conduct, which, however thoughtless it may appear to the casual observer is second to none for loyalty to his King, patri-otism to his country, fidelity to his friend, or in affection to his kindred. The idea of establish-ing a school where apprentices could be boarded and instructed when their ships were unemployed is a good one, but we think it might have been suggested without the unnecessary accompani-ment of an undeserved libel upon the British Tar the more severe when the author assumes to be one of their own cloth.

A highly respectable meeting was held at the Egyptian Hall, Mansion House, on Tuesday last, for the purpose of adopting the most effectual measures for the relief of the unfortunate crews of the whalers now ice-bound in the Arctic Seas. There were present the Lord Mayor who presided; Mr. G. F. Young, M.P., Mr. G. Ro-binson, M.P., Alderman Thompson, M.P., Mr. Hardy M.P., Mr. A. Chapman, M.P., Mr. Lyall, M.P., Mr. Hill, Capt. Barber, besides a number of the leading ship-owners and merchants, and several excellent speeches were delivered by the above gentlemen. Some letters were read from the Secretary of the Admiralty, Mr. Wood, and Capt. J. C. Ross, R.N., by which it appears that the Admiralty have promptly afforded every assis-ance in their power; that Capt. Ross sailed on Tuesday last from Hull, in the Cove, with a supply of provisions &c., and would be shortly followed by the two ships now preparing with all expedition to be placed under the com-mand of Com. Belcher, by the aid of which he intended to penetrate the ice, and take such measures as appeared to him best adapted to relieve the unfortunate sufferers. Capt. Ross has accompanied every expedition which has been dispatched to the North Pole; he may, in fact, be truly called a Polar sailor, all his time from Midshipman to Captain having been passed in that service. He promptly volunteered to perform the hazardous duty that is now upon; and it is impossible that any officer, pos-sessing greater ability, skill, or determination, could have been selected. The relatives of the sufferers, and those who will subscribe in aid of this humane undertaking may therefore be assured that no effort which human means can perform will be left unattempted for the rescue of our unfortunate countrymen. The meeting was not so fully attended as we had hoped and expected, but we doubt not that considerable funds will be subscribed in dif-ferent parts of the kingdom. We cannot wholly acquit the owners of these vessels in not storing them with sufficient provisions to meet such a contingency as the present, which may be expected to occur, and must trust that, in future voyages, they will take care to fur-nish sufficient supplies to avoid the dreadful calamity which must arise from the want of them in these inhos-pitable regions.

All speculation upon the event of a war between France and America is put an end to by the former country receiving the message of General Jackson in a friendly spirit; and should any difficulties arise in the way of finally adjusting the affair, they can be easily re-moved by the friendly intervention which our Govern-ment, much to its credit, has thought proper to adopt.

Grand Naval Ball.—The Admirals and Captains of the Navy resident in Brighton and its vicinity gave a ball and supper, on Tuesday night, at the Old Ship Hotel, on a scale of magnificence exceeding, if possible, in the splendour of the arrangements, the grand military ball lately given here. Four hundred invitations were issued, and the Company, when assembled, amounted to nearly that number. Shortly after ten o'clock the dance commenced to Kirchner's spirited band, and was continued till one o'clock, when supper was announced. Symbolical trophies of war, decorating ships of war made of pastry, and an immense raised pie in the form of a hulk, which was sent from the King's kitchen, adorned the head of the table, and had a very imposing and beautiful effect. Admiral Sir Davidge Gould, the senior Admiral, took the chair, and was supported on his right by Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, and on his left by Sir Edward Codrington. Admirals Sir R. Otway, Sir C. Rowley, and Sir J. Rodd sat on either side, and the Naval Captains occupied the centre table. The following toasts were given by the Chairman:—The King, God bless him—The Queen, God bless her—The Princess Victoria, and the Royal Family—The Army. General Sir R. M'Farlane gave—The Navy. After supper the company resumed the dance, and it was nearly six in the morning before they separated.

East India Company's Maritime Service.—A meeting of the Commanders and other officers of the E. I. Co's Maritime Service, excluded from the scale of compensation, took place on Thursday at Carolina Coffee-house, Birchin-lane, for the purpose of receiving the report from the committee appointed to promote the claims of the parties just noticed. Capt. J. Barker took the chair. The report stated that the committee were deeply sensible of the great trust reposed in them, and deemed it expedient to learn officially from the Court of Directors whether it was desirable that fresh documents should be sent in repecting the individual grounds of claim for compensation. In answer, the Court had, with great promptness and attention, stated they did not require additional statements from those officers whose claims had been previously made; that the committee, for the further satisfaction of the meeting, addressed letter No. 2, to which they had not yet received an answer. This letter was then read by the Chairman. It asked if the Court of Directors intended to make a report to the proprietors previous to their next general court on the subject of Mr. Swert's resolution, and if so, that the committee ought to be informed at about what period such intelligence would be given. A list of applicants for compensation was enclosed in this letter. The report further stated, that it appeared to be advisable for those persons who may have hitherto neglected sending in an official claim to do so now, if they have just ground to hope that their case can be one within the meaning and spirit of the 7th clause of the India Bill, and the intention of the proprietors, as set forth by their resolution in August, 1834; that the committee had received from the included officers' committee the balance of the funds which remained surplus on the winding up of the accounts, which, added to their own stock, and about 90*l.* still due from the excluded, would render any further subscription unnecessary; that the committee thought that they had clearly shown that the important trust confided to them had been guarded with zeal and an honest endeavour to fulfil their duties. Capt. Smith thought if they succeeded it would be chiefly owing to the exertions of Mr. Scatcherd. He moved that the report be adopted. Capt. Aldham seconded the motion, which was carried. A list of the Commanders and other excluded officers who claimed compensation, amounting to 140, was then read by the chairman. Mr. Scatcherd said only one additional claim had been received since the 16th ult. (Hear.) The thanks of the meeting were then returned to Mr. Scatcherd for his exertions, and to the committee. Subscriptions were then entered into for both objects, and thanks having been returned to the chairman, the meeting adjourned.

Theatres.

DRURY-LANE.—Mr. Bunn's version of Aubet's opera Le Cheval de Bronze, was produced at this theatre on Tuesday evening, and rather favourably received. The opera is called The Bronze Horse. It is altogether badly constructed, and does not possess any situations of either culiar striking interest: there is from first to last a ight and gloom about the piece, which not even the endid scenery, gorgeous dresses, and well executed cing could remove. The poetry of the piece (as it is led) is remarkable for nothing except, indeed, that it is rthy of being classed with the Fitzball-school of lyrics. e music, by Amber, does not equal any of his former positions. It is of a light and agreeable character, and the embodiation of the orchestral accompaniments the poser has evinced considerable skill. That portion of opera with which we felt most satisfied was two airs rusted to Mr. Templeton; they are of a light and asing character, full of sweet melody, and to which . Templeton did the most ample justice. We have said ore that The Bronze Horse was "rather favourably ived," and we are not a little inclined to think that its ourable reception was owing to the grotesque umbrella ce, with which the opera terminated. This dance was hly ridiculed, and very skilfully managed; but it is saying le for the success of an OPERA that it was saved by a NCE! The house was well attended, and the opera announced for repetition with some disapprobation, which was n drowned in the applause.

COVENT GARDEN.—In our critical capacity, we know of greater pleasure than that we feel, when enabled to etch forth a friendly hand to assist in the advancement youthful talent in any profession; and doubly pleasing the task when the object it seeks to elevate is woman!—, young and lovely woman. Such was our task on esday evening, on which occasion a Miss Helen aucit made her debut before a London audience in the eresting character of Julia, in Knowles's play of e Hunchback. From the numerous preparatory puffs ich had appeared in the newspapers of the day, exing this young lady's talents, we are free to confess at we entered the theatre with considerable fear lest e would not realise the expectations thus prematurely raised. We hate the puff preparatory—and for this mple reason, that it seldom serves the party on whom it lavished. In this instance, however, the word of promise has not been broken; for, notwithstanding the disadntages necessarily attendant upon a first appearance beore so awful a tribunal as a London audience, Miss Faucit may be said to have made as favourable a first appearance any lady within our recollection; an appearance which s fully equalled the most sanguine expectations of her ends and the profession. In person Miss Faucit is rather ove the middle stature, her features, though not decidedly autiful are pleasing, her countenance is intelligent and pressive, her voice sweet and musical, her action easy, sceful, and natural, and her figure formed in nature's rfect mould. Her first entry was marked by extreme idity and fear; she, however, soon acquired perfect self-ossession, and convinced the audience, by her admirable presentation of Julia, that she possessed a mind illumined genius, polished by education, and strengthened by a tural love for the profession in which she has embarked. notwithstanding the impression made by Mrs Kemble in is part, we freely own that the pleasure we experienced in e performance of Tuesday evening, was quite as great as hen we first witnessed the original representative of the ely Julia. Without the slightest attempt at imitation, iss Faucit exhibited the most perfect and just conception her character, adding throughout the play many original d striking beauties. In scenes of tenderness she surpasses r predecessor, and when time and practice (for she is arcely 18) shall have ripened her to maturity, she will, e are much mistaken, tower far above her present comers. We strongly advise her to study diligently, and not to e led away by her present success from a proper attention her profession. To all passages requiring rapidity of deivery, she must pay particular attention; at present she is e hurried to be sufficiently distinct, and it will be her own elt, if she is not, ere long, the leading tragic actress of n day. Miss Faucit's acting is of that description which ill always please the judgment, and not unfrequently mble the imagination; and which, taking nature for its andard, scorns to violate her principles, by resorting to ose tricks which, though they please the vulgar, make e critic laugh. We never remember to have seen a more owded theatre in every part. Miss Faucit was loudly lled for at the termination of the play, and received with thusiasm.

QUEEN'S.—A new burletta, translated from the French, d entitled One Too Many, was played at this theatre on londay for the first time, and proved successful. The ion is, we understand, from the pen of Mr. C. Broad, and does him great credit, for it is smartly written throughout. he plot will afford a useful and amusing lesson to legacy xpectants, persons anxiously looking out for dead men's oes. The piece was extremely well acted, particularly y Messrs. Brooks, Aylilffe, Perry, and Mrs. Brindall. We think it might be shortened to the earlier part with adntage; it was well received, and will, we should say, ave a fair run. Mr. Jones appeared as Puff, in The ritic, and acquitted himself very much to the satisfaction his audience, but NOVELTY should be the order of the ay. Is she a Woman? continues to delight the numerous visitors; this is not to be wondered at, for it is splendidly acted by all parties, particularly the part of the lox hunting lady by Mrs. Nisbett. The houses have been crowded during the week. A new burletta, called Little Sins, and Pretty Sinners, is in rehearsal.

ADELPHI.—The new two act drama, produced at this theatre on Monday evening, is entitled The Ghost Story, and is a remarkably dull and uninteresting affair from beginning to end. The piece is very badly constructed throughout; the situations are absurd, and the comic portion of the dialogue is witless and worthless; the serious portion of the drama is better written; we should be inclined to think it is the first dramatic attempt of the author. Miss Clifford would we are certain, sustain the part of Catherine better than Mrs. Stirling, whom the proprietors of this theatre have ruined by their vile puffs, from which the public were induced to expect a FIRST RATE ARTIST, and they have found about a FIFTH. The Ghost Story was announced for repetition amidst disapprobation and applause, the latter predominating.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—The Duke de Broglie has forwarded a despatch to Lord Palmerston, in which he announces that the French Government is entirely satisfied with the President's Message, and quite ready to pay the indemnity.

SPAIN.—The Barcelona Journals of 27th Dec. announce the arrival of the Rodney, 92 guns, with a supply of arms for the Queen's troops. It is stated to have brought 15,000 muskets, and 26 tons of cartridges. Another English ship, with a similar cargo was expected. The same journals report the arrival in Catalonia of 3000 men, part of the Andalusian division of troops, under the orders of General Espinosa. The Moderado papers give a proclamation addressed by General Evans to the inhabitants of the province of Alava, inviting them to form a company of Guides, to be officered by Spaniards, and to act under his command.—Some soldiers of the Chapelgorris having stolen, at La Bastide, a pyx, and killed the rector, Espartero commanded the whole battalion to be disarmed. He then gave orders for the entire division to muster on a plain. The Chapelgorris, who were placed in the centre, had learned that they were going to be decimated. The sentence, in fact, was partially carried into execution, for out of sixty men, upon whom the lot fell, eleven were shot. This act of barbarity created a most painful sensation among the troops.—Galignani.

PORTUGAL.—The London Merchant steamer has arrived in the Tagus with the contract for the marriage of Donna Maria, which it was intended to celebrate by proxy on the 5th Jan. (Tuesday last). An ambassador will be immediately accredited from Austria to the Court of Lisbon.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—We have papers to the 30th Oct. A proclamation had been issued, calling in that portion of the paper currency of the colony which has a red circular mark, with a view of withdrawing it altogether from circulation. The late war had left the colonists in a very embarrassed situation, many of them having been completely plundered by the Caffres.

NEW YORK.—Disastrous Conflagration.—We received last night a file of New York papers to the 22nd ult., brought by the London line-of-packet ship Toronto, Capt. Grissold, which arrived at Portsmouth after a short passage of 15 days. These papers contain the most painful details of an appalling conflagration, which broke out in New York on the 15th ult., and which destroyed in the fifteen hours during which it raged, with the most tremendous fury, upwards of six hundred houses and property, stated by some accounts to be worth nearly thirty millions of dollars. The Exchange, the Post-office, and an immense number of stores, have been totally consumed; even the shipping along the line of wharfs took fire, and several vessels are stated to have been destroyed.

THE BRITISH ARMY.

THE "pressure from without" has been so strong upon the higher powers, that they have given way to clamour, and an attempt has for some years been in progress to govern the army without having recourse to the strong measures which our predecessors thought absolutely necessary. I am not going now to rake up the ashes of any of the "crambe repetita" arguments upon the subject of corporal punishment; that is a question still sub judice, and therefore the only remark I shall make upon the subject is to observe that, while the system of acting has been radically changed, the material to be acted on has been pertinaciously kept the same—I mean that no earthly effort has ever been made to do what, to a plain man, would have appeared the very first steps in an alteration of the kind, namely, rendering the qualification of character necessary to the enlistment of the soldier, and making some endeavours to facilitate, or at least not throwing obstacles in the way of, the discharge of men of notoriously bad character. It is a fact well known in the army that crime has very greatly increased in its ranks, since the removal of what may be called the "preventive checks;" and it has been in the attempt to conceal the failure of the plan of trying to govern without them, that the system has originated, which it is the object of this letter to expose. The system I allude to is technically known in the army by the name of the "SCREENING SYSTEM." When the change was first made, many officers, both in the ranks of Generals and Commanders of regiments—some to secure employment, others sincerely believing in the practicability of the theory—put themselves forward to carry it into execution. Each adopted a plan of conciliation—some to a great extent, some in a lesser degree; but years rolled on, and the plan failed. The mass of the soldiery were and are uneducated men, without families or connexions to employ their leisure hours, and whose only ideas of enjoyment centred in the pothouse and the brothel. The mass knew no better; but there are in the army men of another stamp, men of education, but whose characters are too bad to afford any hope of advancement; and these men have been quick to point out to their less observant comrades, that the authority of their officers was diminished, and that there existed among the higher branches of the service an inclination to support the soldier against his superior—in fact, to try and prove the officer in the wrong, as it was not in accordance with the system to punish the soldier for his offence—"for crime may be concealed, but punishment cannot." In these few words is contained the secret of much of the evils at present pervading the army.

Such was the system that has been pursued for some years, and, as I said before, it has failed. But that was a fact which it would not answer to have generally known; it must be concealed at any risk, and, as it could not be prevented, it must be screened. It was soon perceived that the General Officer whose return of Courts-Martial was the smallest, and the Commanding Officer whose defaulter's list was nearest to a blank return, were most favourably received by their respective superiors. It was much easier to accomplish this by overlooking crime than by checking it: and I do not hesitate to accuse many officers whose regiments and districts now stand highest, of having obtained that pre-eminence by putting their names to returns that would not bear investigation. This is a grave accusation, but it is true; and that it is so the officers commanding regiments who persist in obeying the letter of their instructions know to their cost.

It is natural that General Officers should wish to make a favourable return of the conduct of the men in their districts, and that any officer who, by obstinately telling the truth, makes a blot upon their escutcheon, should not be looked on with very favourable eyes. It is not, however, to be supposed that men, honourable in every other relation of life, should adopt a system which is not only dishonourable as far as they themselves are concerned, but which is, indirectly, the cause of heavy censure being cast upon men who are too upright and conscientious to pursue a similar plan; I say, it is not to be supposed that they can come all at once to this, without some of those subtile reasonings by which a man is led, step by step, to the commission of actions which he would originally have shuddered at, could he have foreseen whither his system would lead him. Let us see how this comes about.

I need hardly, Mr. Editor, to a practical soldier like yourself, premise that, in the British army, drunkenness is the origin, either directly or in its consequences, of three-fourths of the crime committed. It follows, therefore, that the first step, usually taken in this downward path, is in winking at this vice, or at least adopting a definition of it, something like that of the sailor who considers no man drunk "while he can lie on the deck without holding on by the ring bolts to prevent his falling upwards." Men, however, who act strictly up to the spirit of their instructions, hold that a man is drunk "when, by the use of strong drink, he incapacitates himself from doing the duty he is paid for, and which he may be called on at any hour of the day or night to perform." Many officers commence by considering the rules of the service with regard to this vice as too severe; and at length in their regiments it becomes a rule, that a man drunk at tattoo is allowed to pass unnoticed, if he do not force attention by the commission of some outrageous breach of discipline.

This practice cuts two ways, in reducing the apparent crime of a regiment, for a soldier is quite sufficiently awake to his own interests to observe, that there is a period of the twenty-four hours when he may indulge in his favourite vice with impunity; he therefore keeps his time. It follows as a natural consequence that drunkenness, as a crime, disappears almost entirely from the defaulter's book of that regiment. No man who is aware that he has only to wait a few hours for the time when he can drink without apprehension, will expose himself to punishment by appearing intoxicated at a season when it cannot be overlooked, as on parade, on the line of march, or on duty. No, he reserves himself for the time when he can drink without fear.

On the contrary, to the soldier who knows that his punishment is equally certain, if not equally severe, at whatever hour of the day or night he may be detected, time and place become matters of comparatively minor importance, and drunkenness on duty becomes a frequent crime." We are all aware also of the recklessness of men of this class. Many a man, who knows that he will be allowed to go to his bed, if he is capable of so doing, will return to his barracks comparatively sober, while the soldier who looks forward to being put through his facings and punished if found unsteady, argues with himself, "in for a penny in for a pound," reduces himself to a state of senseless drunkenness, is robbed, and consequently brought to a Court-Martial for selling his necessaries.

I have said that the system of screening was two-edged! one I think I have shown; let us try the other, and see how it acts, in its early stage, in reducing the number of crimes of greater importance, and for this purpose we will suppose a case, unhappily but too common, and which will show better than any abstract reasoning how this system produces effects far beyond what were originally contemplated by those who introduced it.

Let us take as a supposition that two regiments, conducted upon different principles, are in garrison together: the men form acquaintances, and the soldier who is kept under strict discipline contrasts his own case with the free and easy life of those who, according to his ideas, are so much better off than himself, being apparently at liberty to do just as they like. Perhaps two men of these different corps may pass an evening together drinking, and return home both tolerably intoxicated; one goes off to his bed singing, and probably laughing at his companion, who is certain to be strictly examined, to pass his night in the guard-room, and be brought up for punishment next morning. The other goes to his tattoo parade, thinking himself aggrieved, and exasperated at being subjected to so strict a discipline while others escape; and when ordered into confinement probably, in his irritation, abuses or perhaps strikes a non-commissioned officer, and so gives cause for a Court-Martial for insubordination and violence, a crime which he most probably would never have been guilty of, had the discipline of the other corps been properly carried on.

It will naturally occur to you, Mr. Editor, to make one or two inquiries under the score of the statements I have laid before you; the first probably would be, how can I be acquainted with the interior economy of any other regiment than that to which I may happen to belong? There are many modes of acquiring this knowledge, but it will be sufficient to mention one or two of the most obvious.

1st. In garrison, every military man is competent to observe the conduct of the soldiers of the different corps belonging to the brigade, and if he perceives that the men of a particular regiment are very disorderly in the streets, and knows, as he must do, when on garrison duty, that numerous escorts belonging to that corps are obliged to parade the streets at night in search of men who may have absented themselves, and that he sees non-commissioned officers and men belonging to that corps return in crowds drunk at tattoo, while he cannot discover that these offenders are punished by drill (which must be public), and the General of the district holds up that battalion as an example of good conduct, and that their Court-martial return is blank; while, on the other hand, a regiment, to all appearance much better conducted, has numerous defaulters at drill, and a long list of Courts-martial, it cannot fail to strike him, that crime scrupulously punished in the one corps and is carefully screened in the other.

Again, crimes are occasionally committed that defy concealment, and per force the offender is brought before a garrison Court-martial; the Adjutant of the corps is called to give the prisoner a character; "nothing can be worse; he has frequently before committed acts of theft and insubordination." The president calls for the "previous convictions" of this notorious offender, and, to the amazement of all, the Court-martial return is "blank!" The man who has acquired for himself this pre-eminently bad character "has never been tried before." This is an imaginary case.

3rdly. It seldom happens that one corps takes up the detachments of another, without hearing from the inhabitants the character borne amongst them by the corps that preceded them. I well remember the account given, by residents in a small town, of the soldiers of a corps no longer serving in Ireland, but which when there was instantly proposed as a model to the army, and in which no Courts-martial had been held for years; it was, that "so disorderly were they that, during their occupation of the town, the respectable inhabitants were obliged to shut up their houses before sunset for fear of their violence."

In the same corps, and nearly at the same period, an occurrence took place, which, but for the superior tact of their commanding officer, might have seriously compromised the actors. A quarrel took place between some of the soldiers and the police * stationed in a village where they had a detachment. How it commenced, I know not; but, finally, the police barrack was attacked, the windows broken in, and nothing saved those inside, but the prompt interference of the officers. This, in the present state of Ireland, would have been held a most serious crime at head-quarters; but the Lieutenant-Colonel, wisely considering that a blot was no blot till it was hit, and that he would not be justified in allowing the high character of his regiment to be sacrificed by the drunken excesses of a few men (on detachment), the fray was not reported, the men were not punished, and the regiment left Ireland with its high character unimpeached—to its own great advantage, and the extreme injury of any foolishly candid commanding officer, who might be placed in the same circumstances; as the constant answer to an officer mentioning the difficulties of his situation was—"Col. ——— has been so many years in Ireland without a Court-martial, why cannot you do likewise?"

These, Mr. Editor, are but a few of the examples of the pernicious effects of this wide-spreading system,—a system which, if not checked, and that soon, will produce the most disastrous consequences, from the discontent of one part of the army, and the license of the other. One of the worst effects it has yet produced is, the lowering of commanding officers in the eyes of their men, and rendering them, as it were, in a degree, accomplices: for, after a time, the Colonel who commences by overlooking instances of drunkenness, acquires a reputation for his regiment; and, when he is from under the immediate eye of a superior, and that serious crimes occur, he feels that to bring them forward is to expose himself to lose the high character he has acquired, and which he values the more from the sacrifice of honour by which it was attained; the temptation, backed by the fear of disgrace, is too strong for him, and he finally places himself in the power of his subordinates, by passing over crimes that he cannot punish without risking the exposure of the system that led to them. So far for your first question. I will fancy your second to be—"To what extent are the higher authorities of the army involved in the charge?" I sincerely believe that the very highest are ignorant of the facts I have stated; for it is notoriously difficult for the highest powers to learn what they cannot know from personal observation, and what it is the interest of the parties more immediately concerned to conceal. But I can by no means extend the same absolution to the Generals commanding districts; they, from their situations,—particularly those in command of large garrisons—must, in a certain degree, be aware of it, and must answer to their consciences for their connivance. Their motives it may not be so easy to unmask; but I believe we should not be far wrong were we to attribute them, in some cases, to the wish to stand high as successful disciplinarians; and in others, to the fact of their being, to a certain degree, involved, from having practised the same delusion when themselves in command of regiments.

I do not know that I should have troubled either you or your readers with this detail, had it not been that, within the last few months, occurrences have been forced on my observation, in which, through the fears of Commanding Officers, offences of the most aggravated mutiny have passed unnoticed, under an apprehension that the characters of their regiments might suffer. The excuses, under colour of which this has taken place, would absolutely excite laughter, were it not for the mischievous effects produced. One instance will be sufficient, and that one is susceptible of proof, should it be necessary.

It was this: a case of "direct mutiny" occurred some months since in a regiment, then and now considered as a model. It took place on detachment, and was reported to head-quarters. The officer received instructions to release the man, and let him return to his duty, as no soldier of the ——th could have behaved as described, unless he were under the influence of temporary insanity!!

* I am happy to take this opportunity to give my testimony to the character of this fine body of men; I have been engaged in all kinds of service with them, and can safely assert that a better organised, better conducted, or more useful corps, does not exist in the world.

THE SECRETARYSHIP OF THE PRIZE COMMITTEE.

To the Editor of the Madras "Standard."

Sir,—The appointment which appeared in last Saturday's Gazette, of Secretary to the General Prize Committee, appears to me deserving of a little comment. The Deputy Adjutant General was, I understand, a rival candidate for the situation. Let us then compare his claims to consideration with those of his more fortunate competitor.

Captain B., the newly-appointed Secretary, was with his corps, which was engaged in the latter part of the Burmese war, and he was employed on the Staff of General Foulis (who honourably mentioned him in his despatches) during the late Coorg Campaign. He has lost no opportunity of distinguishing himself, and is, indisputably, an officer of considerable merit. Capt. B. is a widower, without family, and stands in the gradation list as a Cadet of 1817.

Major H—— served from the beginning to the end of the Burmese war, always in a high Staff situation, and latterly as chief of the Staff of the Madras division of the army. For his conduct throughout he was honourably noticed by the Government, and particularly mentioned in the despatches of the Court of Directors. Major H—— has since for a considerable period acted as Adjutant-General of the Army, and discharged the functions of that office with zeal and ability. Major H—— stands in the gradation list as a Cadet of 1806. He is understood to be living in retirement for the praiseworthy purpose of laying by sufficient to educate a large and growing family.

The patronage of the Prize-Secretaryship is undoubtedly the gift of pleasure of his Excellency the Governor. I write this letter to show how absolute the right is, and that merit is a choice quality not at all necessary for the success of a claimant; for if merit gave a right, the men of most merit would have the first right. His Excellency might, if he had pleased, have given the Prize-Secretaryship to one of the Pluguds—I wonder he did not. It is true, indeed, that in the exertion of all his patronage our unprofessing Commander-in-Chief weighs the pretensions of claimants, prefers the old officer to the young one, and occasionally allows the infirmity of his nature to be worked upon by an honourable man with a family struggling against adversity, provided, however, that he possesses equal rights and equal ability with the bachelor for the performance of his duties.

After all, "let every man do as he likes with his own." Why should not the Governor and Chief severally use their rights as they please? I doubt whether the latter ever showed his subordinates the tender courtesy with which Major H—— was treated. So delicately fearful was superior authority of wounding his feelings by a negative, that I am credibly informed no answer was returned to his application for the Secretaryship of the Prize Committee.

Your obedient Servant,

(Signed) OLD COCKER.

Literary Notices.

Historical Conversations for Young Persons. By Mrs. Markham. John Murray.

MRS. MARKHAM has turned her attention to Malta and Poland; and, in a series of simple conversations, affords considerable information respecting portions of the ancient history of these countries. At the same time we must confess that her sketch of the order of Malta is very meagre, and shows but a slight acquaintance with that ancient institution, and more especially with its present character and position in Europe.

The Romance of History—India. By the Rev. Hobart Caunter, B.D. 3 vols. Edward Churton.

THESE volumes contain a series of tales founded on the historical annals from the tenth to the seventeenth centuries. They consequently commence with the Mahommedan invasion of India, and embrace many of the most stirring incidents in the history of that peninsula, and are written with great spirit and knowledge of the Native character. An historical summary is given of the events of each century, and this of itself is a valuable performance.

Life of Prince Talleyrand. Vols. 3 and 4. Edward Churton.

WE noticed the first and second volumes at the time of their publication; those before us are equally entertaining, though we have our doubts of the accuracy of many of the statements. The narrative concludes with Talleyrand's dismissal from the Ministry of Louis XVIII. in 1815; and from numerous anecdotes we select the following, as fair specimens of the materials of which the work is composed:—

"When the empress received the fatal bulletin which announced the disasters of the Russian campaign, she ordered all the dignitaries of the empire to wait upon her, and M. de Talleyrand, as vice-grand-elector, attended with the rest. The consternation was dreadful at the Tuileries, and the utmost anxiety prevailed to receive the particulars of calamities so little expected some months previously. All that was then known was that the whole army was destroyed, and every thing—men, horses, and baggage, lost. Soon after, the arrival of the Duke of Bassano was announced to the empress. 'Only see how they exaggerate,' said M. de Talleyrand; 'here is Maret returned, and they said that all the baggage was lost.' * * *

"After the glorious defeat at Leipsic, the native foreigners, as they have been so aptly denominated, took fresh courage, though they were obliged still to confine themselves to secret manœuvres, after the warning they had received from the emperor's reproaches to M. de Talleyrand.

ther still more violent scene took place between Napo- and his prime-minister, after Napoleon's return from ence. M. de Talleyrand, as usual, appeared at the e. No sooner had Napoleon's eye caught his figure he addressed him thus:—'What do you come here —to exhibit your ingratitude? I have covered you honours, that people might not see you were the most icable wretch in my empire. You affect to be of the osition! You think that if I failed you would be at the l of the council of regency! If I were dangerously ill, demnly declare to you that you should die before I did.' h all the grace and gentleness of a courtier receiving favours, the prince thus replied to his irritated master: I did not need this warning to address my most ardent es to Heaven for the preservation of your Majesty's .'"

Memoirs of Mirabeau. Vols. 3 and 4. Churton.

E noticed at the time of publication the two former mes of these singular memoirs, and those now before re not less extraordinary or valuable. Mirabeau's was one of particular vicissitude, and its events, as as those of his family, are worked up in these pages very considerable talent. As connected with the ory of the times, and the state of society in France ng the early part of the last century, these piquant oirs will be read with interest: they abound in dote, personal and historical, and may take their on with the most attractive of this publishing on.

examining this beautiful volume we are surprised the attempt to illustrate the festive season of Christ- has not been before made. We have here all popular observances and peculiar revels, ceremonies, traditions pleasantly narrated, and the embellish- ts are humorous and clever to a degree. Nothing be more characteristic than the "Baronial Hall," "Mummers," "Boys coming from School," welfth Night," and the "Mistletoe Bough."

HE Calcutta papers mention that Lord W. Bentinck recommended to the Court of Directors a reduction e army to the extent of thirty regiments, which the rt wisely rejected. pt. D. L. Richardson, Editor of the Calcutta Lite- Gazette, has been appointed principal Professor of rature to the Hindoo College.

he Madras Courier publishes a memorial of Captain Smith, 2nd Madras Light Cavalry, who has been ended by the Governor under circumstances rather ordinary. Capt. Smith is suspended by a Minute e Governor-in-Council, and though the offence is d to be in part an abuse of military power, it is in for a breach of ordinary law, which, in the judgment e Governor, rendered him liable to a prosecution e Supreme Court, that Capt. Smith is suspended. re can be no doubt that, in reason and morality, ain Smith has committed no offence, or at least a venial one, in having caused a thief caught in fla- e delicto to be flogged, he not being specifically nomi- , ex-officio, head of the police. Let us suppose that dividual happened to catch a thief in the exercise of pocutton, and was to give him a sound flogging;—no t the infliction would be illegal, but we incline to that, if the fellow prosecuted, any magistrate or would be disposed to lay the very lightest penalty he offence. Yet in Capt. Smith's case an officer bears a high character in the service is, as he justly rks, degraded in the eyes of the native soldiery for a r offence against technical law. The actual pro- ng adopted is not merely indefensible for its un- ured severity, but, as respects its effects upon the who will not understand the nice distinction which suspends a Commandant for justly punishing a thief, in virtue of a power commonly vested in officers filling that station. There was no necessity for any such severity. To check the practice, it would have been quite sufficient to have signified to Capt. Smith the government's disapprobation of it.

A letter from Berhampore mentions that four companies of the 4th N.I., under the command of a Captain, had been ordered out at an hour's notice, and supplied with sixty rounds of ball cartridge, and every necessary for immediate service. Conjecture was of course afloat as to the cause of this sudden movement, and some apprehensions were entertained that another European had fallen a sacrifice to native hatred or revenge.—Madras Courier, Aug. 4.

During Mr. Campbell's residence at Algiers, he accompanied the British Consul and Vice-Consul on a visit to the Governor, Count d'Erlon, who held an important command in the Imperial armies during the Peninsular war. "Ah! what brave men" he exclaimed, "are the British soldiers, and how loyal their officers, and what courtesy, nay, brotherly love, subsisted between the combatants!" In short, he could not express the tenderness with which the French and English cut each others' throats during the Peninsular campaigns. "What has become," he said, "of your famous General Bel? I have had many parleys with that gallant man." "Bel," I thought to myself, "that is a military fish I never heard of," but Mr. St. John at once enlightened my mind by saying to the Count, "General Lord Hill is now Commander-in-Chief of the British forces."—New Monthly.

The Prevailing Use of Tea in Russia.—Izhitrie is a substitute for tea; and consists of pot-herbs, ginger, pepper, and honey, boiled up together, and drunk like tea, which it much resembles in colour. It is a very ancient Russian beverage, and was formerly used by all classes; now, its use is restricted to the common people, and it is sold in the streets of Moscow and Petersburgh by the itzhitenshiki, who carry it about boiling hot, and deal it out in tumblers as the people require it. This is a refreshing warm drink, which is very appropriate to the condition of the poor peasantry coming to market in severe frosts and stormy weather. Tea was first introduced into Russia in the middle of the seventeenth century. The conquest of Siberia brought the Russians into contact with the Chinese; and the transports of tea over land from China to Europe soon became a very important article of commerce, which continues, to a great extent, to the present day. The use of it is becoming more and more general among the people, who are now frequently seen on market days sitting in the coffee-houses, in groups, in their sheep-skin coats, drinking tea. As this predilection gains ground among them, it will, no doubt, serve to moderate the use of spirituous liquors, the state of their finances putting it out of their power to indulge in both.—Alexander's East India Magazine.

The attention of the members of the Naval and Military professions is called to the following copy of a letter, which has been transmitted to Mr. George Franks, Surgeon, 96, Blackfriar's-road, the proprietor of "Franks' Specific Solution of Copaiba," from R. W. Meade, Esq., late Colonel com. Rifle Brigade Columbian Service, and formerly Capt. in H.M.'s 13th Lt. Dragoons:—"Sir,—Having retired from active life, I feel a strong repugnance against appearing before the public in any character, but my reluctance has been overcome by a sense of the duty I owe to my fellow beings, and the gratitude I feel towards you. Having served many years in H. M.'s army in India, and subsequently in the Columbian Forces, under the gallant but ill-requited Bolivar, I contracted in those hot climates a disease, which has for years inflicted on me the most poignant sufferings; since, however, I have been fortunate enough to obtain an introduction to you, and having used your "Solution of Copaiba" a few times, I have been relieved beyond my most sanguine expectations, and am now entirely free from pain, or the obstructions to which I was so many years a victim.

RHEUMATISM. — His Majesty's Royal Letters Patent have recently been granted to Mr. Coles for a Medicated Band, which positively cures Rheumatism, Lumbago, Cramp, &c. &c. The Band is worn near the part affected, and may be removed at pleasure. A great public functionary, connected with one of our London Hospitals, whose case, to use his own expression, had baffled every medicine that was quack, and every medicine that was not quack, has sent Mr. Coles his written testimonial, which may be seen at No. 8, Charing Cross, wherein he admits that Mr. Coles's Rheumatic Bands have completely subdued his disease, and he declared that there was not a man upon the face of the earth who had more reason to be grateful to another than he had to Mr. Coles. Mr. ——, Secretary to the Duke of ——, has likewise worn Coles's Bands, and, although his sufferings were severe and of long standing, the relief was almost instantaneous. Lord Skelmersdale had a coachman suffering a martyrdom to this complaint, who declared (when he paid Mr. Coles) ere he had worn the Rheumatic Bands five days, he was more free from pain than he had been during the preceding five years. The Duchess of Sutherland's gardener, Mr. John Saar, could not walk from West Hill, Surrey, to order the Rheumatic Bands, but he was able to walk that distance (twelve miles) to pay for them, and back again; and he begged Mr. Coles would let the world know that.

"To Mr. Coles.—Sir,—Having been afflicted with Rheumatism thirty years, and severely so for the last nineteen months, two months of which I was in St. George's Hospital, and I have since been confined to my bed six weeks together, under surgical treatment, during which time I was bled fourteen times, besides blistered and cupped, and employing other remedies said to be infallible for its cure; but all in no purpose, as I could scarcely rise from my chair or walk the length of my room. Whilst in this state of suffering, a friend procured your Patent Rheumatic Band, and I can truly say that it has afforded me a hundred times greater relief during the five weeks I have worn it than all the other remedies put together, and I am now able to resume my business, to the great astonishment of all who know me. I am, sir, your obedient servant,

"Joseph Holden Fairbairn."

"Harefield-on-the-Hill, 25th April, 1835."

Mr. T.—, grazier, of Kilworth, Leicestershire, in a letter dated 27th June, 1835, says that he has been a great sufferer, at times, for many years past, and severely so about a month since, when a friend procured him Coles's Patent Band, which relieved his sufferings in two days, and in less than three weeks entirely removed the complaint.

Benjamin Cole, footman to Sir Robert Peel, in a note dated 20th June, 1835, says, that he has suffered the most excruciating pain in his back and loins from Rheumatism for six weeks, and, finding no relief from surgical treatment, had recourse to Coles's Rheumatic Band, which afforded him almost instantaneous relief, and in three weeks entirely removed the complaint.

Joseph Clay, Esq., of Arden Mills, Denton, near Manchester, in a letter dated 2d July, says, I have received the Rheumatic Bands, the whole of which I have worn since May last, and I have the pleasure to state that they have relieved my sufferings in my shoulders, wrist, knees, and hip. I still feel weak in my ankles, but on the whole I think that, by persevering with them, they will make me young again.

The Rev. Mr Willier, of Carlton Rectory, near Newmarket, in a note dated 20th Oct., says, that he has suffered very severely from Sciatica for more than two years; that about three weeks since he obtained one of Coles's Medicated Bands, and the pain has, during the short time he has worn it, nearly, if not entirely, left him, he had tried many supposed remedies without receiving any benefit.—Read Coles on Rheumatism, published at No. 8, Charing Cross, and sold by Sherwood & Co.—and William Strange, also in French, by Galignani, 18, Rue Vivienne a Paris; and by M. De la Porte, Burlington Arcade, price One Penny.—It will also be found in the "Dublin Directory," in the London Directories, in the "Royal Blue Book," and in "Boyle's Court Guide," for 1836.

To persons afflicted with that dangerous and painful disease, hernia, the Trusses of Mr. Coles's invention are the best, 8, Charing Cross, Truss-maker to his Majesty's forces. From the numerous testimonials borne to the excellence and simplicity of his Patent Truss by the first practitioners in surgery, including many cases of actual cure published in Coles's Gazette, it is gratifying to learn that the victims of this distressing malady are thus rescued from their sufferings.

* Read the case of W. Cobbett, Esq., M. P., in "Boyle's Court Guide;" Coles's Gazette, on Rupture; published and sold by Sherwood and Co., and William Strange, London. Each One Penny, or Sixpence per dozen; published also in French as above.

An Institution having for its object the protection of families from the vicissitudes of fortune, by enabling parents, at a small comparative outlay, to secure to their children a certain provision on their attaining a given age, must be considered a benefit to the community, and deserving of being placed in the first rank of provident and philanthropic institutions. Such is the object of the Family Endowment Society, which will provide for all the children of a family at a period when a provision becomes always serviceable, and frequently indispensable.

To accomplish an object so desirable, this Society will, at or after the time of marriage, endow every future child of such marriage, payable on each child's completing any agreed year of age from 14 to 21; endow every future male child or every future female child; endow children actually born previously to the date of the contract; and, if preferred, endow such actually born children, at an increased rate of premium, which shall be returnable if the child does not attain the age of endowment.

In order to afford every facility to the public, the premium may be paid, at the option of the parties, either in one sum at the time of contracting, or by annual sums, payable during any term of years not exceeding the age of endowment, dependent on the life of the husband only, or of the wife only, or on the joint lives of the husband and wife.

The Tables are calculated for all ages, and for every combination of age, and the following extracts will sufficiently illustrate the subject:—

Example.—A couple, of the ages of 31 and 25, have 8 children who complete their 14th year; the Society will have to pay them £800; the whole amount of the annual payments cannot exceed £243. 2s. 6d.; and in case of the husband's previous death, this sum might be considerably less.

The necessary tables have been constructed from calculations which have been examined and approved by an Eminent mathematician. They have been so formed as to yield an adequate profit, of which it is proposed to divide four-fifths amongst the parents or parties effecting endowments on unborn children, in proportion to the amount of their respective contributions.

The following extracts from the tables will show the premiums for the endowment of existing children.

Annual Premiums for assuring the sum of £100 to an actually born child, payable on completing its 14th or 21st year, the whole of such annual premiums being returnable should the child die under the age of endowment:—

| Age of Child. | On completing 14 years. Annual Premium to the Age of Endowment. £ s. d. | Age of Child. | On completing 21 years. Annual Premium to the Age of Endowment. £ s. d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 | 6 4 4 | 1 | 3 12 4 |
| 2 | 6 16 10 | 2 | 3 17 4 |
| 3 | 7 10 4 | 3 | 4 3 0 |
| 4 | 8 9 6 | 4 | 4 9 3 |
| 5 | 9 11 3 | 5 | 4 16 4 |
| 6 | 10 18 5 | 6 | 5 4 5 |

Annual Premiums for assuring the sum of £100 to an actually born child, payable on completing its 14th or 21st year, no part of such premium being returnable:—

| Age of Child. | On completing 14 years. Annual Premium until the Age of Endowment. £ s. d. | Age of Child. | On completing 21 years. Annual Premium until the Age of Endowment £ s. d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 | 5 12 6 | 1 | 3 8 5 |
| 2 | 6 7 8 | 2 | 3 11 3 |
| 3 | 7 4 2 | 3 | 3 17 10 |
| 4 | 8 3 7 | 4 | 4 4 4 |
| 5 | 9 6 1 | 5 | 4 11 0 |
| 6 | 10 12 8 | 6 | 4 18 10 |

Should the parties contracting with the Society, after having paid at least five annual premiums, be unable to continue the payments, such premiums shall not be considered as forfeited, but the Society will, notwithstanding, pay an equitable proportion of the endowment to the children then born on their attaining the given age.

This Society offers advantages worthy the attention of every class of the community.

To the nobility and the possessors of entailed estates the opportunity of providing for the younger branches of their families.

To clergymen, officers of the army and navy, professional men, and, indeed, to all persons dependent on income, the means of ensuring a provision for their families on terms most advantageous to them.

TO SPORTSMEN, TRAVELLERS, MERCHANTS, and CAPTAINS of SHIPS.—THORN'S POTTED YARMOUTH BLOATERS. Now in high perfection.

The increasing demand for this most delicious preparation proves, beyond all doubt, it is far superior to any thing of the kind ever yet offered to the public for Sandwiches, Toast, Biscuits, &c., and as an excellent relish for Wine. In Pots, 1s. and 2s. each. Warranted in all climates.

"In this preparation the flavour of the Herring is preserved unimpaired, if not improved; the prime parts of the fish are concentrated in a substance about the consistency of butter, and which may be used in the same way; and, being put up in neat and portable pots, a treat may be enjoyed at any time, without the unpleasant smell and other inconveniences which attend the dressing and partaking of herrings in the ordinary way."—Watchman.

THORN'S TALLY-HO! SAUCE, for Fish, Game, Steaks, Chops, Cutlets, made Dishes, and all general purposes, is the richest and most economical Sauce now in use, imparting a zest not otherwise acquired. In Bottles, 2s. and 4s. Warranted in all climates.

"We have tried (crede experto) Thorn's Tally-Ho Sauce, and can pronounce it exquisite. We know nothing of the ingredients, that we have to such as are more 'curious in their sauce' than we are, but we can speak to the richness of its flavour, which, to our thinking, would create an appetite under the ribs of death."—Satirist.

MESSRS. DELCROIX AND CO., Perfumers to their Majesties and the Royal Family, 158, New Bond-street, beg leave to caution the Nobility, Gentry, and the Trade in general, against the many spurious and vile imitations of their celebrated Perfumery by persons who would be least suspected, who have imitated their bottles and labels, but have not gone so far as to forge their seal, the Lamb and Flag, with their address around the same; to the following long admired articles they will in future add their signature:—ESPRIT DE LAVANDE AUX MILLEFLEURS, VEGETABLE EXTRACT, BOUQUET SEMILLANT, BOUQUET DU ROI, BOUQUET DE LA REINE. The Trade are recommended to be particular in purchasing Messrs D. and Co's. Perfumery through the most respectable houses.

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.

FAMILIES in want of really good Servants of every description, both Male and Female, will decidedly find their interest better consulted, and their object much sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, No. 131, Oxford-market, near Holles-street, established in 1830, than through the adoption of any other method whatever; as Domestics, with good characters, are in waiting to be hired from 10 to 6 o'clock.

Many persons are prejudiced against an Establishment for Hiring Servants; but if the Servant possess a good character, it certainly is perfect nonsense to suppose that it is injured by the readiest method having been taken to procure a Situation.

N.B. It will be particularly advantageous to send for a Prospectus.

PRINTED FLANNELS.—Messrs. Tunnicliffe and Co. respectfully announce their NEW PATTERNS of the above article NEVER BEFORE PRINTED with an extensive assortment of Welch, Cashmere, and other Flannels, are on Sale at 199, Strand, next door to Somerset House.

N.B.—The only Establishment for Thresher's Elastic Silk and Cotton Stockings.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now acknowledged as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Hashes, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 6, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherburn and Son, Howes, Mayfair, Piccadilly, Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SPICE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., which is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

FISTULÆ, PILES, ABSCESSES, STRICTURES, &c.—Mr. S. J. VAN BUTCHELL, Accoucheur and Surgeon, for the cure of the above complaints without cutting, caustic, or confinement in the most dangerous cases, exemplified in a long practice, offers his professional aid to those who may be afflicted, with the fullest confidence of speedily restoring them to health, by his peculiarly successful and expeditious method of eradicating these disorders, even where the usual mode of treatment has failed of remedy or alleviation. Consulted till one daily at his residence, No. 15, Fenton-street, Bedford-square.—Persons afflicted may obtain a prospectus gratis, containing a few out of the many cures effected by him on applying to Mr. Cradock, Chemist and Druggist, No. 6, Store-street, Bedford-square.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY IN MEDICINE.—LEFAY'S GRAND POMMADE.—This extraordinary preparation cures, by two or three external applications, Tic Douloureux, Gout, Rheumatism, Lumbago, and Sciatica, and all painful Affections of the Nerves, giving instantaneous relief in the most severe paroxysms. It has been extensively employed in the public and private practice of several French physicians, who have declared that in no case have they found it to fail in curing those formidable and tormenting maladies. Since its introduction into England, it has in every case fully maintained the high character its unrivalled success has obtained for it on the Continent. Patients, who had for years drawn on a miserable existence, and many who had lost the use of their limbs by rheumatism and paralysis, have, by a few applications, been restored to health, strength, and comfort, after electricity, galvanism, blistering, veratrine, morphine, colchicum, and all the usual remedies had been found useless. Its astonishing and almost miraculous effects have also been experienced in the cure of nervous and rheumatic pains of the head and face, paralytic affections, contracted and stiff joints, glandular swellings, pains of the chest and bones, chronic rheumatism, palpitation of the heart, &c. The way of using it is by rubbing. It requires no internal medicine to restrain it in any kind.

Sold, by appointment of J. Lefay, by Stirling, 86, High-street, Whitechapel, in Pots at 4s. 6d. each, and may be had of Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Butler, 81, Paul's, Barclay, Farringdon-street; Harvey, 81, Great Surrey-street, Blackfriars-road; Sanger and Co., New Churchyard, Strand; Royal Exchange; Newbery and Co., Chemists, Blackfriars-road; and most of the principal Medicine Venders. Observe, the genuine has the name of J. Lefay, Stirling engraved on the stamp, who will attend to any communication or inquiries respecting it. All Letters must be post paid.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN AND BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and totally eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:—"36, Upper Gun-street, Spitalfields.—Sir, Being troubled dreadfully with Corns for some years, and at times unable to walk without assistance, when I heard of your Corn Solvent, and, extraordinary to relate, after using one half a bottle, my Corns were entirely removed, and have never troubled me since, which is now nearly (illegible) years. I shall be happy to inform any fellow sufferer of its wonderful efficacy. Yours, &c. ANN SMITH."

Prepared and sold by J. A. Sharwood, 55, Bolsingate-street, Without, in Bottles, 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.; and by every Medicine Vendor. Ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as there is a spurious imitation.

YOLAND'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION is the most wonderful Medicine ever discovered by man, for the cure of GONORRHŒA, GLEETS, STRICTURES, WIOT Pains in the Loins, Affections of the Kidneys, Gravel, Irritation of the Urethra or Bladder, and for all Urinary Diseases in both sexes.—This Medicine is patronised, prescribed, recommended and sanctioned by the Most Eminent of the Faculty, not only in England but on the Continent; and stated by them, from experience, to be the only Medicine that can be relied on for the cure of those complaints, and they invariably resort to it when their own remedies fail.

YOLAND'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION cures both sexes at all times sooner than any other known remedy, with the most triumphant success, after every Medicine of the present day has proved ineffectual, so that this justly celebrated specific has arrived at a acme of perfection, surpassing every thing of the kind that ever bore the name of medicine, frequently curing some of these obstinate diseases in a few hours. Those who have suffered from any of the above disease for many years (such as strictures, &c.) will find upon taking this medicine for a short time, that, if not entirely cured, they will no longer feel inconvenience from the trifling complaint that remains.

References to respectable Surgeons, who are in the habit of prescribing this medicine extensively, will be given on application to the Proprietor's Agents.

Sold in Sealed Packets, with full directions, so that any one may cure themselves with perfect safety and secrecy, and sent to any part of the world by HANNAY and Co., 63, Oxford-street, the corner of Wells-street, London, to whom dealers in the country are requested to forward their orders direct; and may be had by all respectable Medicine Venders. Price 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 7s. 11s. Country Order, Orders for the Continent, and shipping Orders to any extent, executed as usual on the day of arrival.

William R. Whereas we have deemed it expedient to improve the advantages of Paymasters of Regiments, and of Recruiting Districts—Our will and pleasure is that the pay of the said officers shall be respectively as follows, viz.:—Twelve shillings and sixpence a day on first appointment to this commission. Fifteen shillings a day after the completion of five years' service on full pay in that rank. Seventeen shillings and sixpence a day after the completion of fifteen years' service on full pay in that rank. Twenty shillings a day after the completion of twenty years' service on full pay in that rank, or after the completion of twenty-five years' service on full pay as commissioned officers, not less than fifteen years of which shall have been as Regimental or District Paymaster. Twenty-two shillings and sixpence a day after the completion of twenty-five years' service on full pay in that rank, or after the completion of thirty years' service on full pay as commissioned officers, not less than fifteen years of which shall have been as Regimental or District Paymaster.

Provided nevertheless that all Paymasters already appointed, who may now be in receipt of higher pay than twelve shillings and sixpence a day, shall not, though of less than five years' service in that rank, be reduced to the said rate in consequence of the new regulations of this warrant. And provided also, that our Secretary at War shall be satisfied with the manner in which any Paymaster who shall be recommended to us for any higher rate of pay than that of twelve shillings and sixpence a day has performed his duties. Given at our Court at Brighton, this 24th day of Dec. 1835, in the sixth year of our reign. By his Majesty's command, Howick.

| If of more than 5 years', and less than 10 years' actual service as Paymaster | 6s. a day, or the half-pay of their former commissions. |
| If of more than 10 years' and less than 15 years' actual service as Paymaster | 7s. 6d. a day. |
| If of more than 15 years' and less than 20 years' actual service as Paymaster | 10s. a day. |
| If of more than 20 years' actual service as Paymaster | 12s. 6d. a day. |

Previous service of ten years' duration or upwards, full-pay in other ranks, as a commissioned officer, after Paymaster shall have completed 15 years' actual service such, to reckon as equivalent to 5 years' service as P master. Provided always that our Secretary at War sh be satisfied with the manner in which the Paymaster to recommended to us for such half-pay shall have perfor his duties. An officer on half-pay who may have ser less than 5 years as Paymaster will be eligible for re ployment on full-pay, either in that situation or in former rank; and if restored to full-pay as Paymaster, previous service will be allowed to reckon. An officer may have served more than 5 years and less than 20 y as Paymaster, and shall be receiving the half-pay of commission, viz. 6s., 7s. 6d., or 10s. a day, will be li to be recalled to full-pay in that appointment if his he shall be found sufficiently good to enable him to resume duties; and in case he shall decline the appointment shall be liable to revert to the half-pay of the commis which he held before he was appointed Paymaster. PORTSMOUTH, Jan. 15th.—From our own Correspondent.—The naval movements at this port during the last week are all comprised in the arrival of the Bristol, hired transport, on Tuesday, to take on board about 400 tons of naval stores for Malta, for which purpose she has been hauled alongside the dock-yard jetty. The Bristol has detachments of the 5th and 60th regs. on board, for a passage to join the service cos. The Erebus has been unrigged, and it is expected her services will be dispensed with. The dock-yard artificers, after coppering the Melville, will be sent on board the Pique again; she is expected to be completed the first week in Feb. The Britannia is rigged, and has commenced painting: that ship, the Excellent, Royal George yacht, Seaflower, and Rose revenue cutter, are the only vessels in port. The Pembroke is still in the basin, and the Benbow alongside the jetty. The Royal Tar started a few days ago, but met with an impediment before she had got to the Motherbank; a chisel got into the shaft of one of the engines and broke short off, and she was compelled to return to have the accident rectified. Capt. Lord W. Paget's horses, and about forty others, have been embarked in the Nautilus, hired brig, for a passage to Santander.

STEARNESS, Jan. 15.—(From our own Correspondent.)—8th—H.M.S. Vestal came up the harbour and was taken into dock immediately. 9th—H.M. steamer Firefly arrived with the Terror bomb, and proceeded to Chatham. 10th—H.M. steam-vessel Messenger arrived from the westward. 11th—H.M. brig Racer went out of the basin. 12th—Diligence transport left Chatham for Plymouth, with Mr. Walker, Assistant Master Attendant, and the riggers that brought the Terror round. 13th—Court-Martial assembled on board H.M.S. Ocean to try Capt. Jones and Mr. Yule, Master of H.M.S. Vestal, for running her aground. Both fully acquitted. 14—H.M.S. Vestal hauled out of dock into the basin, and will sail in a few days for the West Indies. The only damage sustained in getting ashore was the loss of her false keel. H.M.S. Racer will sail for Portsmouth and West Indies as soon as the weather moderates.

PLYMOUTH, 13th Jan.—The Alban steamer, under the command of Mr. Brown, Act. Lieut., which arrived here yesterday morning, obtained pratique in the course of the day, and proceeded up the harbour. The Alban left Malta on the 17th Dec. with despatches for the Secretary of State from Lord Ponsonby, the Ambassador at Constantinople. Two days after leaving Malta, she experienced a heavy gale of wind from the westward, with thick hazy weather. They then disconnected the machinery, and hove to, the gale continuing for upwards of 5 days. In consequence of the bad weather, the fuel ran short, which obliged the Alban to go to Algiers to procure a supply of coals. The authorities at that place behaved with great civility; they are at present employed enlarging the mole. After obtaining a supply of coal, the Alban proceeded to Gibraltar, and filled up the coal boxes there. The garrison and town was very healthy. After leaving Gibraltar the Alban experienced a heavy gale from the S.E., and in consequence of the vessel stowing only 4 days' coals in her bunkers, she was obliged to take 4 days' coals on deck, which weight being high, made her roll very heavily and ship nearly every sea, and thus placed the crew in great danger. The Commander was obliged to throw 240 bags of coal overboard, and was in consequence compelled to make for Lisbon for a fresh supply of fuel. The Alban left in the Tagus, H.M.S. Hastings, Cameleon, Espoir, Lark, Viper, with the American steamer Potomac, John Adams, and another corvette, and a French brig of war. The Alban brought home a very valuable snuff box as a present from the Grand Sultan to his Britannic Majesty, its estimated value is no less than 6,000*l.* sterling, which was yesterday deposited in our Custom House, and will be forwarded to his Majesty immediately on the arrival of a Treasury minute to that effect. Mr. Galloway the engineer, who is in the service of the Pacha of Egypt, and is distinguished in that country as a Bashaw of three tails, an honour never before enjoyed by an Englishman, is to be allowed to inspect this dockyard, when he will proceed to take drawings of the requisite machinery for constructing a dry dock, and freeing it of water, at Alexandria. The Royal Adelaide was removed to her moorings on Monday, and the Implacable brought to the dockyard for repair. The Camel lighter sailed on Saturday for Falmouth with stores and Marines. The Tortoise lighter arrived on Tuesday from Pembroke, having experienced heavy weather at sea. The Diligence transport it is expected will bring the party back again who navigated the Terror bomb to the Medway from this port. The Swallow packet is to be paid off this week. The Zephyr and Swallow are to be prepared to be sold out of the service. The Hope and Magnet packets are to be prepared for sea; they were both brought to the yard on Tuesday. The Wellesley and Agincourt, which are in dock repairing, are also to be fitted forthwith.

DEVONPORT.—On Tuesday sailed the Elphinstone and Bristol, to embark convicts for New S. Wales, Ranger for Ascension, and Clarendon for Malta. The Stokesby is loading for Bermuda, and the Catherine Stewart for Malta.

ROYAL MARINES (Woolwich).—A Corporal of this division attempted suicide by hanging himself, but was fortunately discovered ere life was extinct, and was recovered. It is asserted the "softer passion" dethroned the seat of reason.

The crew of the Lightning steam-vessel having forwarded a charge of continual intoxication against the Master, an investigation was ordered before the Capt. Superintendent of Woolwich dockyard, in the course of which it was proved that the Master, at the period stated by the crew, was not inebriated, but that the crew were in a mutinous state at the time a diplomatic personage was on board. The result has been, upon the report, that the Master and Mate have been both dismissed, and the crew discharged; the former ostensibly for allowing the men to be in such a state.

Firefly STEAM-VESSEL.—An extensive seizure of tobacco took place on board, upon the confession of a waterman, who had some of the contraband "weed" in his boat, and has been sentenced to 6 months' imprisonment. This was at Falmouth.

The Boscawen, 70, and Trafalgar, 120, are both being brought forward with much celerity at Woolwich. Upwards of 120 feet of the new wall of this yard next the water side has been already completed, and, when finished, it will not only be a decided improvement in the appearance of the yard from the water, but the utility will be equally apparent. A bunch of small keys have been found, of a very suspicious nature, by one of the police, but all inquiry as to the owner is fruitless.

The Comet steam-vessel is being brought forward for service with all possible despatch, under the command of Mr. Wright, Second Master, R.N. This vessel, it may be remembered, was experimentally tried with the supposed method of a propelling power being obtained by quicksilver, which failed so far (when off Lisbon) in May last year, that she was obliged to return to England by the use of her sails only.

Firebrand and Tartarus steam-vessels were "paid down" twelve months, six months remaining in hand. The crews obtained leave "ashore" from Saturday until Monday.

The following statement shows the number of years it has required to become the senior officer of each grade in the Royal Marine corps, corrected up to the present time:—Senior Second Lieutenant, eight years; do. First Lieutenant, twenty-nine years; do. Captain, thirty-nine years; do. Major, forty years; do. Lieutenant-Colonel, forty-three years; Colonel-Commandant, fifty-eight years.

The pension of 5,000*l.* enjoyed by the late Earl Nelson has not expired, but it is permanently annexed to the Earldom. The present youthful Earl and his brothers and sisters assume the name of Nelson instead of Bolton, pursuant to an Act of Parliament passed in 1806.

JAMAICA, Nov. 27.—The Wasp, 18, arrived from Nassau on the 7th, and the Champion, 18, left on the same day for New Providence. The Forte frigate moved from Kingston to Port Royal Harbour on the 6th. The Rainbow, 28, left for Bermuda on the 17th. The Flamer steamer arrived here on the 16th, and the Meteor steamer on the 25th, from Barbadoes. The many idle stories of the loss of the Scylla sloop-of-war, on the Bahama Keys, happily turned to be untrue; she arrived here on the 15th with treasure from the Havannah, and sails for Carthagena to-morrow. The Comus, 16, having arrived from that quarter on the 22nd. The Skipjack schooner left for Chagres on the 18th, and the Pike schooner came in from Maracaybo on the 26th. [The report of the loss of H.M.S. Scylla was current more than three weeks ago, but we refrained from mentioning it until we were able to contradict it in our paper of the 2nd inst.—ED.]

Captain Lord W. Paget, R.N., has sailed for Santander. Captain Arbuthnot, R.N., is also in the Queen of Spain's Artillery service, with the rank of Lieut.-Col.

The last accounts from Malta state the Russian Navy force in the Levant to consist of six sail of the line, mounting 88 guns each; four frigates of 56 guns each, and two brigs. The Turkish fleet, effective for sea, amounts to eight powerful two deckers and five heavy frigates, which were lying in the Bosphorus, quite ready for active service, on 27th November.

The Scout, 16, will proceed in a few days direct from Sheerness for the West Indies, without calling at Spithead.

At a meeting of the Winterton Branch of the Norfolk Shipwreck Association, on 31st Dec. 1835, Vice-Admiral Stopheos in the Chair, it was resolved to return the thanks of the Committee to Lieut. Gahan, R.N., Chief Officer of the Coast Guard Station at Winterton, for his exertions, in conjunction with the Coast Guardmen and Beachmen, in saving the lives of the Master and crew of the sloop Ann and Mary, of Poole, which was driven on shore on that part of the coast, in the gale of the 19th of that month. It was also resolved to award the sums of 2*l.* 10*s.* to the Coast Guardmen, and 10*l.* to the Beachmen for their praiseworthy conduct on that occasion.

H. M.'s brig Childers was at Barcelona on the 21st Dec.

NEW ROSS, Dec. 18.—"Arrived at the Quay of Ross yesterday, the barque Tottenham, from Quebec. Fell in with and spoke, on the 27th ult., in lat. 42. 44. N., long. 36. 41. W., the British man-of-war, Star, a complete wreck, having lost masts, bowsprit, bulwarks, boats, and apparently every article, fore and aft, from her deck. Captain Thomas attempted to near her and take her in tow, but owing to the distressed state of his own vessel, having struck on Barrett's Ledge, and making much water, found it impossible to do so. After repeated ineffectual efforts to render him assistance, wore off the Tottenham, having hoisted a small square sail on the stump of his fore-mast, and steered S.S.E. There seemed to be from 15 to 20 men on her deck." Other accounts describe the vessel in distress to be H. M. S. Spey: it is supposed she must have encountered an iceberg, or been run foul of in the very boisterous weather which has prevailed on the Coast of Newfoundland.

Since writing the above we have received the following: The London Merchant steam-vessel is arrived here to-day from Lisbon, bringing letters from the Star, brought there by a vessel that had fallen in with her at sea in latitude 39, longitude 34. We have seen a letter written by the Surgeon, Mr. Lambert. It is without date, and states that on the 21st Nov. in a heavy gale of wind, the vessel was struck by a sea and thrown on her beam ends—that she soon righted with but little damage to the vessel, but one man had been washed away, one had an arm, and another a leg broken. The gale continued to the 24th, when, at about o'clock in the afternoon, the vessel was again thrown on her beam ends, and afterwards rose again with the loss of her masts, boats, and every thing on deck. The Commander, Lieut. Bioney, Mr. Brown, the Master, and two men and a boy were washed away, and were all lost with the exception of Mr. Brown, who providentially regained the vessel in a most exhausted state. This disaster happened in lat. 45. 58. N. long. 38. 21. W., and when the letter left her she was steering for Antigua. Mr. Brown had taken the command, being the chief surviving officer. We have seen another letter from the vessel dated 5th Dec. brought by the same conveyance.—Falmouth Cornubian.

The following vessels will be put up for sale at Somerset House on 21st inst.:—the Captivity, 74; Elk, Carnation and Bracouth brigs, and Breakwater, light vessel, lying at this port; the Merlin sloop, Rifleman brig, and Duchess of York tender, at Portsmouth; Dover, 42, at Deptford; Martial brig, and Surly lighter, at Chatham; Dispatch brig, and Mercury tender, at Sheerness.

ASCENSION, Nov. 24.—The Lyra returned a few days before to refit, having carried away the head of the main-mast. Rolla arrived on the 20th from the coast of Africa, left the squadron all well. Charbydis and Britomart had each taken a slave vessel. The garrison of Ascension all well.

The Hon. Capt. Spencer and Hon. Capt. Maude, R.N., have obtained his Majesty's permission to wear the Order of the Redeemer of Greece, for their services at the Battle of Navarino.

We have several letters by the Alban from the Mediterranean fleet, dated 16th ult. The Vernon and Barham returned to Malta on the 14th Dec. The trial between these ships had altogether lasted twenty-eight days, and the result may be summed up in a few words. For although the baffling winds they had encountered rendered it impossible to report a decisive advantage, the weathermost ship sometimes becoming the lee one, owing to a sudden shift of wind, the general opinion was, that in light winds and going free the Barham had the advantage, and this was accounted for by her being more than 300 tons less measurement, and 130 tons less displacement than the Vernon, at the same time that she spreads an equal extent of canvas. Every one was loud in praise of Capt. Cory's admirable management of his ship, as he invariably superintended every operation himself. Whenever the breeze was too much to carry royals, the Vernon had a decided advantage; and the more wind and sea, the more her superiority was apparent. Thus has the result, although by no means a decisive one, come off contrary to the opinions of those who supposed the Vernon would only perform in smooth water. We shall give some further particulars in our next.

The ships at Malta were Caledonia, Edinburgh, Thunderer, Campus, Revenge, Vernon, Barham, Orestes and Hind cutter, all well.

Lieuts. Matthias, of Caledonia, and Bedford, of Jaseur, came home in the last Mediterranean packet; Lieut. Sidney, of Caledonia, Lieut. Abbott, of Thunderer, Lieuts. Finling and Hankey, of Orestes, and Mr. Hayne, Master of Caledonia, have invalided.

East India Intelligence.

The Madras Courier gives a report of the Calcutta Jury Meeting, which is represented as being one of the largest witnessed in Calcutta. The following principles have been agreed to as the basis of an act to be drafted for submission to the legislative council. "Juries in civil cases to be summoned at the desire of either plaintiff or defendant, or of the judge, but not otherwise. Ordinary civil juries to consist of four members, whose verdict to be that of a majority (that is, three jurymen), but given by the foreman as the verdict of the whole jury. Full juries to consist of twelve. Their verdict to be that of a majority in the same proportion as above, namely, nine; but if so large a number cannot agree after two hours deliberation, then the verdict may be given by a simple majority. The judge, plaintiff, or defendant, to have the option of summoning an ordinary or a full jury. Jurymen to receive four rupees per diem on each cause." We believe it is intended to call another public meeting for the approval of the draft when ready, and for the purpose of laying before the public the answer which shall have been received from government to the petition.

The Indian Law Commissioners have been requested to frame a complete criminal code for all parts of the British Indian empire and for every class of people, of whatsoever religion or nation, resident within its limits.

Eager to shout their battle cry,
And prompt to war for Britain and for God!
And when the earthquake's signal shock
Gave angry summons to advance,
And firm and stern as planted rock—
Each hero braved the hostile lance.

Remember, soldier, nothing could uphold
This warrior spirit like the hope of heaven;
And would'st thou bear thyself with front as bold, Believe in Him in whom thy sin's forgiven.

When nature's universal wreck is seen,

DISTRIBUTION OF PRIZE MONEY.

Sir,—In the proclamation of 1834, which regulates the distribution of prize money to the Royal Navy, I observe that Field Officers of the corps of Royal Marines, while embarked, share only in the class with Senior Lieutenants of rom first to fifth rates inclusive, Commanders acting as irst Lieutenants, and Lieutenants in command of small vessels; thus giving to Commanders of sloops who hold the nferior rank of Majors a larger share than is given to a olonel, or Lieut.-Colonel, while borne on the books of a hip.

As I cannot imagine that this principle will be acted on n calculating the shares for the army in joint expeditions, he injustice of the arrangement will be particularly apparent hen our Naval and Military forces co-operate; for the ield Officer who is so unfortunate as to do duty with the leet will be less favoured in the distribution of prize money than officers of the same rank, and possibly of the ame corps, who are serving under the military authorities; nd as I have yet to learn on what occasions the officers of Royal Marines, in contests with the enemy, have merited hat this distinction should be made, I trust that the Lords f the Admiralty will suggest to his Majesty the propriety f putting them, while embarked, on a footing with other fficers of their rank in the service, that they may no longer ave reason to consider their liability to serve with the Navy s a misfortune.

When men of different habits and feelings are so closely onnected as the officers of the Royal Navy and Marines re, while on board ship, it cannot but happen that occaional differences of opinion will occur; but it will be a ubject of future regret if the government, by regulations hich foster discontent and jealousy, should cause among he officers of Marines those feelings of dislike to the Naval, nd preference of the Military system, which have been said lready to exist by some of our Naval officers.

EMPLOYMENT OF CONVICTS IN THE DOCK-YARDS.

Sir,—In consequence of your observations respecting the emoval of the convicts from our dockyards, I am led to make a few remarks, in the hope that you will give them a lace in your columns. Am I to understand, Mr. Editor, hat the convicts are to be removed from our dockyards, in rder that free labourers be employed therein? if so, there must be a considerable expense incurred, an expense which he country, in these times of economy and retrenchment, is ot prepared to meet. The convict, whether at home or broad, must be kept, and it becomes an economical governent to do this at the least possible expense, and I know of n other way to effect this than by employing them as a national good" in our dockyards.

I have ever considered from observation, and which has een borne out by the opinion of others conversant with onvict labour, that five convicts are equal to four free abourers in the current service of our dockyards, and, in many individual cases, the convict is fully equal to the free labourer, and it is to be regretted that in the half-yearly return from the Home Office, to the House of Commons, a higher valuation on their labour is not shown. I believe in this return convict labourers are estimated at 1*s.* per diem, a sum in no way adequate to their general usefulness, and is calculated to mislead honourable members as to the efficiency of these unfortunate men in a saving point of view.

I am told the convicts were employed a short time ago in clearing a mast pond of mud in Chatham yard, this, doubtless, would take there some time. Now let our 'affectionate friends' at the Admiralty inquire into the expense contingent on this clearing, and contrast the expense of so doing by free labourers, and they will at once see the saving arising from the employment of convicts, and, from this simple fact, exert their influence to prevent the convicts' removal from our dockyards.

It has been said that confinement in the hulks does not tend to reclaim the offenders, and that contamination exists to a fearful extent, which is the primary cause of their removal, in order that more salutary measures might be adopted. This is all very well as far as theory is concerned, but my opinion is, that the best mode of punishment is hard labour and separate confinement during the hours of meals and rest, and, although I would strongly recommend this, I am aware that separate confinement in the hulks cannot be effected under the present plan, unless a considerable reduction take place, and then I think it could be done, and the convicts' punishment rendered salutary.

As regards the silent system, which is at present in full cry, reformation can never be effected by it; the mechanical adaptation of the prisoner's habits to certain regulations, constitute the whole scheme. This punishment does not operate by eliciting reflection, or by inducing a healthier activity of mind, or by diverting the attention from evil, and directing it to that which is good, but by quenching the natural energy of the mind altogether. The use of that faculty by which it is kept principally in motion is denied, and the man sinks into the condition of an automaton, trained without an object in view, but to change its position or posture at the command of a keeper.

Much more remains to be said on this subject, and, if agreeable, at a future day, I will do myself the honour of again addressing you, and, in the mean time, make myself better acquainted with the advantages of convict labour, more particularly the saving accruing therefrom, relying on your powerful aid to place this matter in its proper light.

THE GUARD ROOM, CHATHAM DOCK YARD.

Sir,—There is a spot at the farthest northern extremity of the Chatham Dock-yard, almost, except to a few, as much a terra incognita as the immediate environs of the North Pole. The sight-seers, who gape through the yard, tire ere they reach it; tours of inspection stop short of its latitude; improvement has not touched, nor reform changed it; it lies near the road to No Man's Land, and is, in short, a desolate uninviting spot;—yet to it, such as it is, I would fain introduce my reader. And to do so, en règle, pray enter with me the gates of Chatham Dock-yard: you will not object to write your name, &c. in the Warder's book, so doing and my company will be sufficient introduction. So allons, you admire the gateway, the chapel, the neatness of the newly-made gardens, and, as we pass the houses of the residents of the yard, you are struck with the air of respectability, of stability, and cleanliness, as far as regards the outward appearance which they present—not a post or a shutter in want of paint, but all looking as new and as glossy as a citizen's Sunday coat. "Happy clerks!" you exclaim, "to be employed by those who so effectually provide for your comforts." Here are vessels at all stages of completion; we can board any of them, but suppose we pay a visit to that smaller-sized one fitting up for a government packet. We are no judges of rigging, so let us descend into her cabins: here we see mouldings and carved work of all shapes, mahogany settees, patent scuttles to admit light and air, and a patent stove to afford heat—everything of the best material and most approved form. "Well!" you again exclaim, "lucky officers to belong to such a ship, and lucky passengers, whoever you may be, who may hereafter voyage in her!" If we inspect the quarters of the New Police, you will perceive that they, too, have every comfort. Supposing we walk on board the Prison Hulk, even here you see timber and paint have not been spared, and in all things the comforts of the convicts have been attended to, as far as found compatible with their safety, and far beyond their deserts. "But surely," you say, "you do not object to these comfort-promoting things you have pointed out to me. Recollect, Sir, comfort is a thing only known in England—a sort of national characteristic; and why, when not found incompatible with the due performance of the public service, should the servants of government be deprived of the little accessaries to its enjoyment?"—"Why, indeed,—but we have now arrived at the spot to which I promised to conduct you." Now look to your front, you perceive a miserable, low, tiled-roof building, a sort of bone old Time has long been gnawing: it has the merit of being the only building in the yard that can in the slightest degree lay claim to the picturesque, all the others are in too good repair, their walls too upright, and wanting that curve of beauty perceptible in the one before us. You shall now see the interior; there is no difficulty in opening the door, although much in shutting it. "Heavens!" you exclaim, glancing around at the discoloured, damp-stained walls, at the miserable fire-place, ricketty table, and washing-stand, containing a metal basin that would make even a Mussulman forego his ablutions, and break an article of his faith—"Heavens!" you exclaim, perhaps shuddering at the cold breeze which sweeps in through the badly set window-frames, "what wretched hole is this?" "This, Sir, is my guard-room, and I, Sir, am the officer of the Tower Dock Guard on this day, and very much at your service. Pardon, Sir, but before we part would you like to look in on my men; they are in the next room, and we can take a capital bird's-eye view of them through one of the many holes in the roof." Now, Sir,

THE HUM BREVET OF AN IRISH NEWSPAPER.

Sir,—We feel much interest about the Brevet, but it is feared that we shall be disappointed. It is much to be regretted that some plan has not been adopted for selecting in the several ranks the officers who are really entitled to promotion,—those who have the least claim are generally the greatest growlers,—very many there are of the three branches of the service, Engineers in particular, Artillery, and of the Line, who held during the whole of the war lucrative commands and employ, who certainly had it in their power, if they had had the inclination, to be employed in the field, but who kept out of the way. The Order, or Companionship, of the Bath has been conferred on many officers who have any great claim, and it may be seen by the Army List how many are without that, or any mark of distinction. The Guelphic Order must not be taken into account, that has in many instances been conferred without claim, and in a few cases even the Companionship of the Bath, and some officers have had the honour of Knighthood conferred who never saw any field service. I wish, Mr. Editor, you would give a key to find out for what service the several honours have been conferred on the several individuals. This is submitted by one of

Your Constant Reader.

[The report of a Brevet, and a fabricated list of the officers to be included, were put in circulation by a most contemptible Irish print, whose mal-practices were recently exposed by the Limerick Chronicle. The abortion of a newspaper alluded to has the audacity, week after week, to steal from us, and, we believe, from another contemporary, original letters and leading articles without the slightest acknowledgment. We have advised our friends in Dublin, who originally patronized, and, in fact, set on foot, this disgrace to the press, to have nothing further to do with so dishonest a publication, and we apprise the Clerk in the Quarter-Master General's office in Dublin, that we will, if he does not, put a speedy termination to such base fraud. Our paper is published on Saturday, and the publication referred to has announced on Monday evening, as latest news from its CORRESPONDENT IN LONDON, the intelligence given in our leaders. We advise the parties not to provoke us to some further exposures. With regard to the Brevet we believe we may assure the army that this question was settled negatively many months since between an economist and a noble lord, and, owing to such settlement, the extension of unattached pay to General Officers was decided upon.—Ed.]

HALF-PAY OF LIEUTENANTS, R.N.

Sir,—In my last communication I stated that I should take the liberty of submitting for insertion in your valuable paper some observations on the rate of half-pay generally of the Lieutenants of the Royal Navy, and I now proceed to fulfil my promise, in the hope that the attention of the Admiralty may be drawn to the subject, in which case I cannot but entertain an expectation that their Lordships will be induced to see the justice of submitting the strong claims of this class of officers to the consideration and favour of their most gracious sovereign.

Sir, I am quite aware that some favourable argument for an increase to the half-pay of this class of officers might be deduced from a comparison of the rates allowed to them and to officers of the same comparative rank in his Majesty's land forces, and even in the corps of Royal Marines, with which they are more closely connected. But such comparisons, I conceive, are never attended with any benefit, and, in fact, are not, strictly speaking, to be made with justice or propriety. The nature of the two services, with all their relative advantages and prospects, are so totally dissimilar, as to preclude, in my opinion, any very strong reasons for maintaining in their respective grades an exact similarity and equality of pay or half-pay. I shall therefore rest the claims which I conceive this meritorious class of naval officers have on the bounty of their soverign for an increase to their present allowance on other grounds, which, to me at least, appear more forcible and just.

The total number of Lieutenants on the last quarter's Navy List was 3065, viz., 115 on 7*s.* per diem, or 127*l.* 15 per ann.; 700 on 6*s.*, or 109*l.* 10*s.* per. ano.; 2260 on 5*s.*, or 91*l.* 5*s.* per ann. Of the first class there ought to be, as I contended in my last letter, 300, and, as I am certain that point must be carried, I shall argue this question (although less favorable to my view) as if it had been, and the number, in that case, will then stand as follows,—300 at 7*s.* a day, 700 at 6*s.*, 2065 at 5*s.* The number on the 7*s.* list, therefore, would bear the proportion of 1 to 9 of the whole number, and those on the 6*s.* list of 1 in between 4 and 5; and the average daily rate of half-pay of each of the Lieutenants of the whole list is 5*s.* 5*d.*

The youngest officer of the 300 on the 7*s.* list would be of the standing of 1807, or 28 years, and the junior of those on the 6*s.* list of the standing of 1813, or 22 years; and by far the majority of the remainder of upwards of 20 years' standing. Each of these officers must have previously served his Majesty at sea for 6 years, but, on an average, it may be fairly stated that they respectively served upwards of 10 years before they attained their present rank.

Now, Sir, I would candidly ask whether, with reference to the length of service of these officers, the importance to the country of their past and present services, and the future demands which the country must have to make upon them, without dwelling upon the station they fill, and the blighted hopes of many a gallant spirit among them, it can be deemed that 5*s.* 5*d.* a day is a just remuneration for their past, or a sufficient retainer for their future, service? Is it liberal in a country who has used these gallant men so long, who has not rewarded them by high rank, and who may, and will, yet again require their services in their present rank, to keep them upon a stipend less than the daily pay of a mechanic? But, I would also ask, is it wise in a country whose wealth and greatness are derived from its trade and commerce, and the foundation of that trade and commerce laid upon, and maintained by, its maritime superiority, to be so mean and niggardly to the great proportion of its naval officers? The total number of Admirals, Captains, Commanders, and superannuated Commanders, is 2066, while the total number of Lieutenants is 3062, being as 3 to 2 of the whole number of commissioned officers.

Hence it is evident that the larger proportion of the Lieutenants never could obtain advancement in the service, even if the numbers in the superior ranks were maintained, but under the present restrictions in promotion, by which only one vacancy is filled up out of three which occur, it is perfectly clear that all but a very few of these officers must be content to continue in their present rank, and on their miserable allotted pittance, during the remainder of their lives. Good God! is it possible that the nation can have so little regard for men who have devoted their lives and shed their blood in their cause, as to leave them in so wretched a case. The least that can be done, is either to promote a certain number by seniority annually, or to increase the half-pay of the whole. Justice and policy equally require it.

There is another view I wish to take of this subject. The remuneration, in the way of half-pay, given to Lieutenants, is positively less than that enjoyed by a class of officers inferior to them in rank, though I admit equally meritorious,—I mean the Masters of the Navy. To encourage that class of valuable men is in the highest degree proper. My argument is not that they have too much; on the contrary, I would rejoice to see them have more; but I contend that the Lieutenants who rank above them ought not to have a less rate of half-pay than they, the Masters, enjoy, which I will show to be the case at present.

There are on the list of Masters from 450 to 460. Of these, 100 have 7*s.* a day; 200 have 6*s.*; 150 have 5*s.* So that while one Lieutenant in nine has 7*s.* a day, two Masters in nine have that rate of half-pay; and while one Lieutenant in between four and five has 6*s.* a day, a greater number of Masters have 6*s.* than 5*s.* a day. In fact, while the number of Lieutenants on the 5*s.* list is as two to one of those on the higher rates, the number of Masters on the lower rate is as one to two of those on the higher. The result of the whole is that the Masters, one with another, have an average rate of half-pay of 5*s.* 10½*d.* per day, while, as I have before shown, the Lieutenants have on the average 5*s.* 5*d.* per day, and this only if the calculation be made on the supposition that the 7*s.* a day list should be extended to 300 bonâ fide Lieutenants instead of 115, to which it is at this time limited by the continuance of 185 retired Commanders on half-pay as Lieutenants.

On all these considerations, then, I would humbly suggest that an increase should be granted to the half-pay of Naval Lieutenants, according to the following scale; and as all Captains of the army and marines have 7*s.* a day while on half-pay, besides the advantage of their progressing rank, and Masters are at present better off than the Lieutenants, I cannot suppose that the bounty of the crown being so applied could possibly bring forward any comparative claims.

I would propose than, 1st, that the establishment of retired Commanders under the order in council of 1816, which is at present limited to 100, be extended to 300, so as to include the 185 officers retired on this rank, under the order in council of 1st Nov., 1830.

2ndly. That the 500 senior Lieutenants on the list when unemployed be allowed 7*s.* 6*d.* per day.

3rdly. That the 1000 next in seniority be so allowed 7*s.* per day.

4thly. That the remaining 1565 be allowed 6*s.* per day.

This would give the Lieutenants of the fleet an average rate of about 6*s.* 6*d.* per diem, being still less by 6*d.* per diem than the rate of half-pay enjoyed by Captains of the line and Marines.

The additional expense to the country of this measure, after allowing for the Lieutenants, at present employed, would be somewhere about 60,000*l.* per annum, a sum of no national importance, when appropriated in payment of a debt of gratitude and justice to our own officers.

I must now apologise for the length to which my letter has extended, but the interest of the subject to a large portion of your readers will, I trust, plead my apology.

ON THE OATHS REQUIRED OF OFFICERS ON HALF PAY.

Sir,—Even at the risk of incurring your disapprobation (for I know you favour the proposal I intend opposing), I send you the following observations on the subject of the Oaths required of Half-pay Officers, for insertion at your earliest convenience, in the pages of your independent and widely-circulated Gazette.

Why, Sir, I would ask, should these individuals, though truly gallant and respected, be exempt from that to which all other classes of the community, from the prince to the peasant, are liable? There is not a branch, even of the oldest aristocratic family, however highly connected, or however honourably esteemed, that legally is believed on his mere ipse dixit.—Why, then, should they claim such a privilege? 'Tis preposterous to hope such a thing; and as there can be no disgrace in being subjected to what all civilians are liable, these gallant defenders of our coasts ought not to expect such indulgences—indulgences refused to their fellow-citizens, if not companions in arms.

Seeing that it is necessary in almost all the transactions of life—at least in all those of a legal nature—to "confirm our assertions with an oath," I cannot imagine what objection can be raised by officers to appear before one of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace for such a purpose. Had they to make the attestation before "one of low esteem," there might have been some plea for its omission; but as a magistrate must, by the tenure of his office, be one of rank and property, I again repeat there can be no "just cause why" the present system should be discontinued. I am, &c.

24*th Dec.* 1835. Philotheonus.

[Our Correspondent is in error: we claim for the Officers of the Army and Navy what is allowed to civil and superannuated servants of the State. The abolition of oaths does not decrease the personal inconvenience of Officers on half-pay, many having to travel a considerable distance and wait the pleasure of Magistrates before they can make their declaration.—Ed.]

CARTRIDGE MAKING IN THE ROYAL ARSENAL.

Sir,—How many of your numerous readers, who are in the constant habit of receiving ammunition, are yet unacquainted with the means of supply! time or opportunity not having allowed them to visit the above splendid emporium of war, or they would have seen the little urchins working away in the "tents," and the ingenious machine invented by Mr. Caffin, a storekeeper (a model of which is in the laboratory room), somewhat in resemblance to a coffee-mill, and, like most useful inventions, simple in its construction and operation. One set of boys make the cartridge cases, by rolling the paper round a piece of wood adapted to the proper size for the bore of the musket, and put a bullet against the top thereof, stopping it with a clove hitch, then a certain number are put into a stand, "top'd and nnd," and passed over to be filled, and from thence to the "chokers;" after which they are made up into so many packages of so many "rounds." But the point to which I have to bring your attention is this; the lads employed to fill the cartridge cases not merely complain of, but are visibly affected with, a drowsiness, which prevents their strict attention to their labour, as well as being injurious to their health; this is only to be ascribed to the minute particles of nitre employed in the manufacture of the powder, which finds its way up the nostrils and into the eyes, at the same time frequently giving a suffocating sensation. Now, might not a few masks be distributed among them, similar to those used by labourers employed on works where the steel filings are found so prejudicial. Observator.

CURRENCY.

Sir,—As the great body of the officers of the British Army and Navy are drawn from the middle classes of society, but more particularly from that link in the chain connected with agriculture and our inland commerce, I trust you will consider this letter worthy your attention. Through the arch of truth we must make a grand countermarch from our errors of finance, and in place of sending learned men to France to teach us how to keep our public accounts we ought to keep open and distinct accounts in all our public departments, be they of state or parish affairs. By doing we should soon arrive at the truth, and the cause of our immense expenditure. So to the point. The money-mongers of Europe are now fattening on the vitals of British industry, and laughing at us for being such "fools as attempting to pay them 92*l.* in gold, for 52*l.* lent us in paper. But the bubble must soon burst, for with our national debt we cannot keep on with a gold currency. The national debt is public confidence in each other, and as this public confidence is a mortgage on the labour of children yet unborn, it is expedient for us to release our home trade from the heartless grasp of the money-mongers of Europe, and this can only be done by the treasury issuing several millions in small notes to meet the wants of the retail trade of the kingdom. Our gold currency is at the mercy of the money-mongers, who are daily doing their utmost to destroy our home trade. "Look to it you of the press." Though part of the press is paid high by the money-mongers, I hope your journal will ever be open to protect "Britain's Industry." For be assured the welfare and well-doing of our Army and Navy entirely depend on the productive classes of the people being in a prosperous state. It is the main brace that secures our social compact, and demands the attention of his Majesty's ministers. As the agricultural population are the real strength of Britain spread over the face of the kingdom; by their moral conduct and numerical strength they secure us peace at home and command the respect and confidence of other nations. Be it remembered when farming flourishes commerce never fails. A small note treasury currency could not by imprudent extended discounts inundate the kingdom with false capital; it would be part of the national debt, and equally valid.

INTELLIGENCE FROM THE COAST OF AFRICA.

Sir,—Having observed, under the head of "Intelligence from the Coast of Africa," in your Gazette of the 23rd May last, a letter embracing a variety of subjects connected with the several places at which its author had touched, in his course from England towards the Cape of Good Hope, the fourth paragraph in which speaks, in no very flattering terms, of the "men" of Bathurst, on the River Gambia, cannot refrain from addressing you, as briefly as the subject will admit of, in the hope of removing from the minds of those readers of your candid, independent, and impartial Journal the unfavourable impressions respecting the British residents at Bathurst, which are almost inseparable from your correspondent's account of their habits, and the tone in which he makes mention of them, generally.

The Thalia, on board of which frigate your gallant correspondent visited the Gambia, arrived there in the course of a very few days after I had taken leave of that Settlement; and unless within those few days the manners and habits of the gentlemen there have undergone a total revolution, I boldly assert they could not have merited the harshness and severity of the statements before me. In a small community such as that, which is composed of the English merchants residing at Bathurst, where each individual must necessarily be known to his neighbour, a few days would suffice to put even a visiter in possession of a history of the peculiarities, "ways," and habits of each member of the little circle. I had the good fortune to be on shore at Bathurst during a period of nearly six weeks; had daily opportunities of mixing in the society of the place; and in the course of our sojourn among them met, I believe, all the "good men" in it; and I am happy that my knowledge of them has enabled me now with truth to affirm, that I never once, any hour of the "afternoon," or night, saw any one of the men in the state described by your correspondent.

Certain peculiar circumstances under which I arrived at the Gambia, must have placed me in a dilemma the most painful and uncomfortable, had it not been for the generous kindnesses of the British settlers, and the polite and kind offices of their worthy Lieutenant-Governor, Mr. Rendall. Their united efforts were exerted to render my stay among them comfortable and agreeable, each vieing with the other in proffers of winning attentions and services to a stranger whose situation, they imagined, gave him a claim upon their liberal hospitality. Of that hospitality, for which the Gambia has become proverbial, I could adduce very many instances. I have been led away into this digression by the grateful recollection of personal kindnesses (though I may never hope ever again to meet upon their own soil those who have claims upon my sensibility I can never forget); and, with respect to the "men" of Bathurst, I shall crave permission only to add, that in no way am I connected with them save by those strong ties of gratitude, which their kindness have wound too closely round the best feelings of my heart ever to be loosened. In standing up in their defence, and in opposition to the calumny given, as it has been, to the world, through the medium of your interesting paper, upon the authority of a gentleman and a soldier; when it is to be hoped, has written, not from any alleged observations of his own, but owing, perhaps, to his having yielded a too-ready dence to the ipse dixit of one of those inalnuatieg, plau-le, and aocommodnting gentlemen, whom travellers will et almost everywhere—agaiest whose reports I would njure all travellers to be especially cautious, eod ooe of om has, no dunbt, found his way to Bathurst, possibly oee of the establishmeet of St. Mary's; who, io the use of his conversations with the eoterprising visiter may ve snatched the opportunity of censuring, to "a chiel lang them, tokin' notes," the habits of the residents, whe l perhaps discovered, before the visit nf Captain —— the Gambia, that his informant wae no acquisition to eir society.

To conclude my remarks, Mr. Editor, upon the aforesaid ragraph, the fourth of your friend's communication, the Englishmen" of Bathurst, maugre the statemeots he has t forth, which, I em aure, must heve been the offspring misconceptions of which he inoocently got possession, s "good, proper men," and so woeld you yourself pro-ounce, had you the good fortune to know them, or had you d the misfortune to have been pont up for seven weeks, as me folks known to me heve beee, in a crazy tub, licensed carry human beings across the Atlantic, and called a sel—confined to a portion of thet tub, measuring six feet foug, ycleped a "cabin," subjected to everythiog that is iserablo aed wretched, and had found so agreeable a sting-place as Bathurst—had met the warm, generous ceptioe which, in that kindly spot, elways greets the ragar;—were you an officer or a Middy on board one nf e ctuizers on thet part nf the Africao statioe, and on tting in there foued a lodging, nay, a very home in every use—an unostentatious, generous welcome wherever you nt, and, in sickuess, the experienced hand of a coentry-ao to minister to your waots—the sound of a kiod aed aious voice to relieve the fevered heed and distracted ear,
-then would you pronounce the "mee" of Bathurst whet have (somewhat too pleyfully for the subject) termed em, "good ond proper men." And such, as I have thus ghly sketched, are the offices performed hy the residents Bathurst to their straeger visiters. No sooner do you t your foot on their shore than they endeavour to render it much yoor heme as theirs; their houses, their tables, eir fleet ponies, carriages, and every luxury they themilves possess, you are made to consider yoers—forced upon u, in a certain way, that seems designed to take from em the merit of obligations; their civilities and attentioos
-a way which, hy the bye, they seemed to me to have rned more perfectly than the inhabitants of any other rt of the world, and, on such a subject I may be permitted offer an opinion, for in and through all that world I ave "well nigh" been.

Among us, of the "tag," or at least among such of us have been grilled in and upon the burning mounts and tles of the West Indie Islands, "as hnspitable as a Vest Indian" is a proverbial simile well understood. But nee my visit to the Western Coast of Africa, had my deree ie aueh important matters been absolute, I should have ada a transfer of the proverb to the River Gambia, and oupled it with the "men" of Bathurst! This is offered, owever, without meaniog to detract from the well-known haracter for hospitality of the West Indian, which I could ot do but at the sacrifice of gratitude, truth, and justice; ut West Indian hospitality is of a different stamp from hat which one meets at the Gambia: it is in most instances sort of generous Irish welcome, which, though its ien-ulse is no less kind aed good, its unseasoned object seldom artakes of without incurring a "rattling fever," whilst onr reception among the more temperate men of Bathurst
—I would not say marked with more genuine kiedness—ut certainly is tempered with more rationality, and is far etter adapted to their most undoubtedly "infernal climate," nd consequently more friendly to their visiters.

I admire—I honour the motives which have led your dventurous correspondent to sacrifice home (for a man's genuine is always his home, wherever it may be), his health, od his comforts, for the benefit of his fellow men; and I ish him, from my heart, all the success he so well deserves!
e may, perhaps, revisit the River Gambia, when, I hope, s well for his own sake as for theirs, that he will know the entlemen of Bathurst more and better; that he will exerise his own good judgmeot respecting them, and, my life
r it, he will tell you yet that they are all "good men."

In the paragraph succeeding neat but one to that which have referred to, I fied equal reason to correct your corespondent, although his statements therein heve little tenency to do any mischief. In speaking of the Forts and ettlements of Cape Coast, Dix Cove, Anamaboe, and Accra, e pronounces them, indiscriminately, in excellent order nder Mr. M'Leao, late a Lieutenant of the 78th Highlanders. Mr. M'Lean, the President of the Council f Government at Cape Coast Castle, never was attached to he said Highland regiment; his early service was in the 'st, but he belonged, during the chief part of his service n full pay, to the very "debeeched" corps (which, by the ay, I never before heard was a debauched corps), but hich, in three lines further on, has come so severely under he lash of their author. This implied defamee of the Royal Africans, which is inclosed within my last parenthesis, may ttach to me, by supposition, the honour of having my name nrolled among them; but believe me, dear Mr. Editor, this is eot the fect. I have been "e soldier from my youth," and do still belong to that species of my race; but in no sable corps have I ever served his Majesty for a single hour. This, however, is nothing to the point.

The Forts of Cape Coast Castle and Accra are in fair ordor, that is, for peaceable times like the present, when it is of little consequence whether the guns mounted on the batteries are honeycombed or not; but, as regards the "efficiency" of Cape Coast Castle as a Fort, your correspondent has been oot a little mistaken or misinformed; for, in point of fact, unless it were garrisoned by a very strong force, it would be untenable—and few of its guns, if any, are, strictly speaking, serviceable. There is neither an armoury, nor arms and accoutrements, with which to fit up nee, within its walls; and, six months ago, there was not literally one serviceable round of ball-cartridge in its magazines—so much for its munitions! And so perfectly versed in the art of gunnery were some of the instructors of the native corps by which it is at present guarded, that on one occasion, about two years ago, when turned out for "mortar practice," their Commander, with a view to give them confidence in themselves, by showing the terrible effects of this destructive arm of their defence, actually put a loaded shell into the mortar, fuse downwards, which, consequently, burst in the mortar; and fortunate was it that it exploded so soon, for the delay of half a second would, in all probability, have put an end to the practice on this stage of all who were near the platform. On another occasion, the telling off of the various numbers at one of the garrison guns was so perfect, that the man performing the duty usually allotted to No. 5, and thought not to have been at a greater distance than one pace from the breech of his gun, contrived to get so far out of his place as (with the lighted portfire in his hand) to reach a portable magazine, containing the ammunition, which he had the sagacity to blow up, achieving a tremendous explosion; scorching and wounding himself and some of his comrades, and almost effecting, by this mode of unceremonious expulsion, the clearance from the battery of certain amateurs and Johnny Raws, who, previous to this exposé, had looked upon the instructor of the drill as second to none but the great Millar himself, and who, with speechless satisfaction and delight, had looked upon the efficiency of their garrison artillery as being perfect to a degree, at which the blue-coats of Woolwich could never by any possibility arrive. Respecting the "excellent order" also in which the writer of this letter describes the Forts at Dix Cove and Anamaboe, he is quite in error; and this I say, without meaning to tax him with an intentional deviation from veracity—for here, too, he has written upon the report of a second party, as he never visited either one or other of these forts himself: nor, in denying the correctness of his statement on this point, would I have it supposed that I wish to detract from the compliment he pays to Mr. M'Lean's good management—which, with the very limited means he has at his disposal, is indeed "excellent." The last mentioned Forts are not, strictly speaking, included in Mr. M'Lean's charge; at all events, there is not any grant of money appropriated to their maintenance, and the sum allowed by Government for the establishments at Cape Coast and Accra, is infinitely too small even to cover the expenses incurred in keeping them from tumbling to pieces; and, consequently, could not admit of a transfer being made of any portion of it for the benefit of the other two. They are each at present occupied by a resident British merchant, who, by white-washing them occasionally, and attending to the repairs of his apartments and stores at his own expense, gives to the former a respectable and imposing appearance from seaward, and renders the latter habitable and weather-proof. Some of the guns upon their walls are mounted, and might, in case of necessity, be of more use than the wooden "quakers" of a merchantman; but there is not one of them safe or serviceable. There is a total deficiency of warlike "matériaux" in all its branches; and, in point of men, those Forts are quite unprovided with the means of defence. These points in dispute considered, it is then to be hoped that the gallant traveller will, in his future progress, judge for himself of those matters upon which he may venture to write, and not fall, through the errors of others, into similar mistakes to those he has betrayed on the heels I have pointed out, and upon which he has so incorrectly and so very illiberally touched. I had not the pleasure of meeting him here, but I have been present in different parts of the world when gentlemen of the pencil and quill have visited such places with the object of obtaining matter for some projected book, yet in detached embryo, in their portmanteaus; and often have I been aroused by the various tricks that have been put in practice to win the favourable impressions of the "traveller;" on whose account dinner-parties, "maroon" excursions, and every variety of amusement, has been "got up." A certain set, too, invariably contrived to secure the whole ear of the stranger—who never was allowed time to divest himself of the impression which these very obliging, and, of course, purely disinterested persons desired to fix in his mind. And seldom have I known these tricks to fail of success, for, by and bye, out came the book; its account of statistics, manners and customs, &c., as incorrect as it well could be; but, n'importe, views precisely similar too, sentiments exactly corresponding with those of the polite and hospitable friends and entertainers of the author, had appeared in the book of an accomplished and enterprising traveller; the beneficial management, excellent measures, good government, &c., of those answerable, perhaps, for these various qualities, had been extolled by a purely disinterested and able discriminator—and who would doubt a report coming from so authentic a source? Pray, do let us enjoin all travellers to be very cautious upon whose authority they give their statements to the public, and it would not be a bad rule for their guidance in general, to seek the opinions of those who may seem least desirous of offering them; for, in nine cases out of ten, wherein certain parties are so kind as to accommodate him with memorandums of any remarkable local events, "authentic anecdotes," statements respecting commerce, and all the other points essential to be known respecting such "outlandish" places as this, for instance, there is some sinister view which, were the hours of the traveller not wholly devoted to one coterie, he would, in most cases, discover; and it is to be lamented how little do some travellers suspect the plans and objects, for the accomplishment of which they are, though the effusions from their pens, made the innocent tools. In the book of one author of no very ancient date, I recently observed a passage of some twenty or thirty pages favourable to a certain person whom I know, which passage, as nearly as my memory could carry me through it, was word for word given by that person himself! for I saw it, with the usual corrections and alterations of a studied composition, in his own hand-writing. Of such chicanery your correspondent has not been the only dupe other African travellers, and other writers upon Africa, have been similarly misled and imposed upon; and it is too absurd and ridiculous to see the egregious errors into which some of them have thus been led, and which have, through them, been retailed to the public, respecting this part of the African continent. One of these gentlemen, among other things equally extravagant, tells his readers that cowries, which are, in fact, a species of the circulating medium at Accra, and are imported at considerable expence by the English merchants, are to be picked up in abundance upon the sea-beach! and, although unfortunately deprived of sight, tells us that he has "seen" things which no man ever could have seen here. This is not told ill-naturedly but merely to show how travellers are imposed upon. This error of the afflicted author was the result of a mischievous hoax, practised upon him by an English resident merchant since dead.

I wish the gentlemen of the Gambia (in whose defence I have thus weakly wielded an implement, not included in the nature of arms and accoutrements requisite for a soldier and to which I have been little accustomed), a more able eulogist. I wish for the gallant traveller through these burning regions all success.

SALAMANDER.

Vice-Admiral Count Henry de Rigny was born at Toul, 2d Feb. 1783, and entered the Naval Service at the age of fourteen. He became a Lieutenant at 20, and was promoted to the rank of First Lieut. in 1809. In 1811 he was appointed Captain of a frigate in which capacity he took the command of the Railleur and was charged with the conduct from Boulogne to Cherbourg of a division of Artillery (he had to escape the English cruisers, which were then keeping a sharp look out), a mission which he accomplished with great dexterity. In 1813 he commanded the Eugene frigate and in 1816 he was promoted to the rank of Captain. In this capacity he remained in the Mediterranean for a considerable time. In 1822, De Rigny was appointed Com.-in-Chief of the Levant station, and hoisted his pennant on board the Medea. His conduct, whilst on this station, appears to have been the theme of universal commendation, and the services he rendered the unfortunate Greeks were manifold and important. These services secured him the brevet rank of Vice-Admiral with insignia of various orders and decorations. In the interval between the battle of Navarin and March, 1829, he returned to Toulon. In May, 1829, he became Maritime Prefect of the fifth arrondissement, and was directed, almost at the same moment, to take the command of the French Marine in the Levant. He had scarcely arrived at his post and hoisted his flag ere he was appointed Minister of Marine. He, however, refused to join the Polignac Administration. He returned to Toulon in the latter part of 1830, fatigued with the term of service he had undergone, and lost his seat at the Admiralty Board. On 18th March, 1831, the portefeuille of the Minister of Marine was committed to his charge, but, at the end of three months, De Rigny resigned this post for that of Minister of the Interior. On his return from a visit to Italy, he was seized with the illness of which he died in Nov. last. He was a highly gallant and amiable man. His funeral obsequies were celebrated with great pomp, and the President of the Council of Ministers delivered an eulogium over his corpse. De Rigny entertained a high respect for the gallantry of our own blue jackets; indeed they had taught him, on several occasions, of what "stuff" they were made.

To Readers and Correspondents.

The subject of "Marcus's" second letter is a momentous one we admit; but having already appropriated some hundreds of columns to its discussion, we think it would be an act of injustice to a great majority of our Subscribers to enter upon a repetition. The suggestions of "Marcus" for forming a reserve of seamen, to be called "King's men," has been already proposed in the very words as also employing seamen in the Dock-yards, &c. Would it not be well for "Marcus" to ascertain what has been already written, lest he be accused of appropriating the ideas of others? As for an invasion of England by Russia, we look upon it as a mere chimera, which the most errantick Sailorman could never seriously contemplate. We shall be glad to hear from "Marcus" on some original subject.—We agree with "Discipline," and have taken the best course to meet his views.—We hope to hear further from him.—Many thanks to "R. N."—If the "Portuguese Cross" has been given for service in the field, and the party has not infringed the Foreign Enlistment Act, permission may easily be obtained through the Horse Guards to wear it.—We report all Civilian Appointments, Naval as well as Military.—To "H. D.": we think the letter appeared some weeks since. "A Bengal Officer," who dates from the Oriental Club, has our warmest thanks: we are glad to receive such approbation, and will be happy to see him on Wednesday.—The "Cross Readings" referred to in our last did not apply to the letter of "Amelia;" we would not willingly offend the fair.—We may take an opportunity of noticing Col. Rolt's paper in the United Service Journal; but "Senex's" animadversions are too personal for our Gazette.—Several communications and papers are postponed till next week.—"A. C." has our best thanks.

Naval and Military Gazette.

THE prevalence of the serious Military crime of selling necessaries caused us in some of our former papers to propose, that an alteration be made in the mode of classing our troops, by giving an increase of pay to the good men and depriving the notoriously bad of the usual emoluments of the Service. We also suggested that the necessaries of those convicted before a Court-Martial of selling their clothes, should be so marked as to prevent a repetition of an offence which, though not criminal in civil life, strikes at the very root of Military discipline; we then dwelt much upon the treatment of men determinedly bad, but, as those who make laws for the government of mankind perform but half their task when they restrain the vicious, we will now point out some alterations in our system, which we think would encourage the steady soldier, and be conducive to the good of our non-commissioned officers in particular, and the service in general.

It must be obvious to those, who have even the most limited acquaintance with our Military Service, that serious and important duties devolve upon our Serjeants; placed in a rank between that of the commissioned officer and the private, it is from them we naturally seek to learn the private characters of men requiring either indulgence or promotion; to them is intrusted the instruction of the recruit, and from them we expect an example of soldierlike conduct and sobriety; to a man, who by diligence and exemplary conduct has qualified himself for the discharge of these momentous and confidential duties, we give the insufficient pay of one shilling and elevenpence halfpenny per day, and by thus limiting his income expose him to those temptations to which the needy are particularly liable. We may be told that the Serjeant has other advantages from the service which enable him to live with ease and respectability, but we should consider whether corps, who grant indulgences in their non-commissioned officers, are not by so doing encroaching on the legitimate comforts of the men. One of the privileges, which we have known to be granted to a married Serjeant or his wife, is the washing of from fifteen to thirty man belonging to the barrack-room, of which he is superintendent, and in which he is allowed to reside with his wife and family; the cries of a sick child, or the tongue of an angry woman, will sometimes tire even the patience of a father and husband; how, then, can we be surprised if, among so many single men, some be found who consider the presence of the superintendent's family as a grievance; now, although an intemperate expression addressed by any of the men to the wife would not probably be immediately resented by the Serjeant, still, weak and prone to evil as human nature is, we cannot suppose it would be forgotten; surely it would be better for the Service that we should, by paying our non-commissioned officers liberally, enable them to support their wives and families out of barracks, and thus remove a cause so likely to produce feeling of dislike between them and the private soldiers.

The knowledge that the situation of Serjeant of Infantry is not sufficiently good to induce young men of character to enter the Service, has caused some of our correspondents to propose that a certain number of commissions in our Army should be bestowed on deserving non-commissioned officers, as an incentive to good conduct to the lower grades of the Service, and as a reward to those individuals who may be thought worthy of such advancement; and it was plausibly suggested by one of them, that the West India regiments should be officered from this source; but, without attempting to deny that we have many men from the ranks of our Army deserving of promotion, we may we trust be allowed to object to any plan which shall give us an assemblage of Officers possessing less education than we already find in the Service, for by so doing we not only deprive ourselves of the services of men, valuable in their present situation, but we risk the discipline and efficiency of those corps which shall be placed under Officers who have been long subject to restraints which prevent their real characters from being known, and on being released from which we may expect to find them inferior to those who, even without equal natural abilities, have by education qualified themselves for command. Indeed, the superiority of properly educated Officers over those promoted from the ranks, united to political reasons, has rendered such promotion so rare, that we may consider the stations of Serjeant-Majors and Serjeants as the best likely to be attained by man who enlist;—we should therefore take care that these ranks be not only filled by deserving and properly qualified individuals, but that the pay of these men be sufficient to place them in easy circumstances, and also to prevent the probability of their being influenced in the public discharge of their duty by private or unworthy motives. We leave it to our readers to consider whether the difference between one shilling and threepence (the present pay and beer money of the first class private) and one shilling and elevenpence halfpenny that of the Serjeant be sufficient for this purpose. We frankly state that (making due allowance for the greater expenses to which the latter are necessarily put, from the superior quality of their necessaries) we think it is not, for, although we entertain the greatest respect for the Non-Commissioned Officers of the Service, still our experience tells us that occasional instances do occur of their so far forgetting themselves as to advance money on interest to the men, and commit other similar acts of irregularity, of a tendency equally injurious to the Service.

We think the best remedy for these evils is to increase the pay, and thus place the Serjeant as much above the Private, in a pecuniary point of view, as he is already in regard to command and rank. It would, we conceive, be sufficient if we gave to Serjeants of Infantry 2*s.* 6*d.* a-day, and 6*d.* a-day additional to Colour and Company Serjeants, and make the pay of Quartermaster-Serjeants and Serjeant-Majors 5*s.* a-day; we should thereby enabling them to support their families out of barracks in a way suitable to their conditions; put a stop to many abuses in the Service, and thus add more to the comfort and respectability of the majority of our Non-Commissioned Officers and Privates, than we should by giving a portion of them commissions, removing them from a situation, to which they have been always accustomed, and placing them in one they are not qualified either to adorn or enjoy.

WHEN, a few weeks since, we submitted some remarks on the advantages which would arise to the south-west division of Ireland, by the placing our Foreign Packet Establishment in either BEARHAVEN or VALENTIA HARBOUR, and urged the adoption of this measure on the ground also, that the transmission of the mails would, in our belief, be greatly accelerated by this arrangement; we had not then seen the Report of the Poor Law Commissioners, setting forth the extreme wretchedness of the lower classes of our fellow-subjects in that part of the United Kingdom.

This document is before us, and if we were previously interested in the accomplishment of any means by which to benefit the Irish people, we now find ten-fold reasons for recommending any and every measure to be tried, that may be likely to produce this much-desired object.

The facts, shown by this Report, must awake public sympathy in behalf of the unhappy poor of the sister island, and Ministers will, we are sure, hasten to carry into effect every possible measure for ameliorating the condition of these unfortunate people.

The introduction of Poor Laws into Ireland will, we doubt not, be one of the first questions brought before Parliament in the approaching Session, but this alone, without the finding of employment for the male population, will evidently be insufficient. The great object, then, to be attained is, to cause a constant intercourse between the east and west sides of the island, as this will at once produce vast employment in the making of roads alone, and will eventually cause increased cultivation to the lands throughout every part of these lines of communication. That the poor of Ireland are now sadly neglected by the richer part of their countryman we fear is too true, as the evidence produced before the Commissioners again and again confirms this lamentable fact. In looking over this evidence, we find that one farmer states in his examination, that "it would be a rare thing to see the rich doing any thing for the poor in the country, and," he added, "what could the gentleman, who has almost all the parish, know about it? He has no house here, and it would be difficult member when we saw his face.". Another witness observes,—"the rich do not know any thing about the poor, the gentlemen who own property live away, and leave all us poor people in distress." And further, a man, named Philip O'Brien, an old worn-out labourer, stated that "he has two sons, willing as any in the parish to support him, they have each six children, though they are both still young, and if they could but get eight months' work in the year, at only eightpence per day, they would be as happy as princes, and make me as comfortable as I could wish." This, it should be remembered is said in a country containing millions of half-cultivated, and millions of unreclaimed acres of fertile soil, and yet, as it is declared in this Report, thousands are daily in a state of starvation, and thousands do die from absolute want. Ought such a state of things, we ask, longer to be suffered to exist? and ought not Government to use every means towards the finding of every partial remedy for such crying evils, whether it be by fixing the Naval Establishment of Packets at one of the ports of this kingdom, or by any other mode that can be likely to assist in bettering the condition of the destitute poor of this part of the Empire? In the words, then, of an able contemporary print, we will say, "Let us hope that to Lord Melbourne's Administration is reserved the glorious achievement of redressing the grievances, and opening the natural resources, and directing the dormant energies of too long neglected IRELAND."

If the Military Committee of the East India Direction, instead of wasting their time in framing unsatisfactory regulations and agitating the hopeless question of a retiring fund, would seriously inform themselves of the real state of the Indian Army, and make exertions to ameliorate its condition where amelioration is needed, their time would be usefully employed, and they might enjoy the gratifying consciousness of having done duty to it. But can this be the case when the proposals for the benefit of the Army, which were so strenuously urged by all the Officers who were examined on the renewal of the Charter, has been adopted? We have military men of experience in the Direction, which makes it the more astonishing that such total apathy should exist regarding the Army. Can they have failed to observe the awful increase of Courts-Martial of late years? and is there not one of that responsible Board who will take the trouble to probe the causes, and remedy such evils? To what are they attributed? why has the Army continued year after year to fall off in discipline? Why do the Officers pour forth such a continued strain of murmur and discontent? The reply is obvious:—It is because the Army is neglected at home, and improperly commanded abroad; because the Army itself is badly and insufficiently officered, and because its morale has been undermined by the united effects of injudicious interference in some respects, and continued neglect in others. In fact, as a remedy, Commanders-in-Chief should be selected for sincerity in preserving the honour and welfare of the Army, and be more regardless of their patronage, ease, and emoluments.

We may have instance the late Sir Alexander Campbell, who was Commander-in-Chief of the Madras Army, and universally esteemed and respected by it for his disinterested regard and unwearied exertions for its well-being. During his sway, the Madras Army stood eminently high (for which all who recollect the Burman war will vouch), but Sir Alexander's successors not possessing the essential qualifications with which he was gifted, how has it retrograded! The discipline of the Indian Army is shaken, and so it will remain until vigorous exertions are made to restore it. Two main causes arise from the crippled power of Commanding Officers, and a want of Field Officers; their authority must be oftener supported, and treated with less open disrespect at head-quarters; and their wrested power restored to them, which the grasp for patronage and undue influence at head-quarters have nearly annihilated in toto. These, with the various traps that are laid to ensnare them, have so shaken their confidence in themselves, that many are content, by a salutary suspension of authority (where their presence is frequently called for), to allow a total relaxation of discipline, and slur through their duty anyhow, to avoid, by references to head-quarters, the probable chances of a defeat in the eyes of the whole regiment, which of course would contribute to weaken their authority in it.

Surely Commanding Officers of the Indian Army have as much need of their own selection of their staff as King's Officers; but it is notorious that, through private influence at head-quarters, the least eligible and youngest Officers of the Company's Service have frequently been selected as Adjutants in the very teeth of their Commanding Officers' recommendations.

A regiment should never be without one Field Officer, and seldom without two: a Captain in command may be experienced, of good character, long service, and possess all the requisite qualifications, but can he use a free and independent exercise of his authority without the rank of Field Officer to support it? In proof, we will appeal to any one who has served under an Officer of this rank whether he has felt the same degree of respect for authority (although it was his duty to show it) as would if the same Officer had been Major or Lieutenant-Colonel? and, further, we would ask the Captain so employed whether, on certain occasions, his want of rank has not weakened his authority in his own estimation, and frequently prevented his adopting measures that appeared necessary, and which he would have adopted had he been a Field Officer? Yet, how many Regiments are frequently commanded by Captains. At present, in the Madras Army, HALF THE CAVALRY are so situated: viz. 1st Regiment, Captain Buchanan; 2d Regiment, Captain Inglis (the junior Captain); 3d Regiment, Captain Hyslop; 8th Regiment, Captain Robertson!!! and we have known corps for months commanded by Lieutenants! If we are reduced in Officers to this extent in time of peace what would be our situation in war? Field Officers must either be unnecessary, or every one must admit that the Indian Army is short of them.

Every Regiment should have two Majors and a Captain, with two Subalterns to each troop or company (exclusive of the Adjutant and Quarter-Master), which, with the absentees on the Staff and in Europe, would then be barely sufficient. The fact is hardly credible that in every Regiment of Native Infantry three of the companies are without Captains!! The complement should not be less for a Cavalry Regiment of six troops than one Colonel, one Lieutenant-Colonel, two Majors, six Captains, eight Lieutenants (including two for Regimental Staff), and six Cornets; and the same for an Infantry Regiment of eight companies, with the addition of two Captains, two Lieutenants, and two Ensigns for the two additional companies.

The Army should have none but working men in its ranks, and the Commander-in-Chief should have the power of removing from it to the invalids and pension-lists such Officers as are unfit to remain, either from natural infirmity, or continued ignorance, or neglect of their several duties. The regulations should be more strictly attended to, and the duties in garrisons and cantonments more regularly performed: above all, Regiments should be inspected and reviewed without previous notice, and their reports of their state sent to head-quarters, instead of the ridiculous flattery that is so generally lavished upon all Regiments, from the Commanding Officer downwards, whether deserving of it or not,—a most unjust system as regards good Regiments, because they are classed with the bad, and equally detrimental to the bad, because encouraged by this winking system to continue so. If a Commanding Officer is found unfit for his post on these occasions of inspection, he should be invalided at once, instead of being humanely allowed to make a convenience of the Service and hang on to disgrace a whole Regiment by his faults, follies, and ignorance. Were summary removals thus made of the non-effectives of all such who, either wilfully or constitutionally, have become so, we should no longer see fine corps ruined and disgraced for want of efficient Commanding Officers, or hear them stigmatised with odious nicknames expressive of the estimation in which their Officers regard them.

The Indian Army wants consequence in England without which it is hopeless to expect that the same degree of attention will be shown towards it as to the King's Army, and this can only be obtained through the exertions of the Court of Directors. To whom else can they look to advocate their claims? and yet how are they neglected by them! Officers are allowed to come and go without even being honoured with an audience; and surely many of the Officers who come to England might be judiciously consulted on measures on which their experience has given them a better opportunity of judging than many of the Secretaries and Clerks of the India House! Rather, however, than show even this slight mark of respect for their Officers, wherefrom they would frequently benefit, the Directors prefer blundering on in the dark upon the mere ipse dixits of those who have not been in India for the last forty years. At the same time we are aware there are some members of the Home Administration who are amply stored with knowledge on Indian affairs, have gained it by long experience in the country; and without any, of course the duties cannot be conducted.

We have, on former occasions, noticed the small share of distinctions conferred on Indian Officers for Military services: for instance, if the services entitle them to a participation in the Order of the Bath (which is the highest next the Garter), why, we will ask, are they excluded from the Guelphic Order? and why are they excluded from the honourable post of Aide-de-Camp to the King? It will not do to say that the Guelphic Order is retained for the King's personal friends, as we have lately seen it given solely for distinguished services. Invidious distinctions are made in these respects by a preference be-shown for the one Service to the degradation and prejudice of the other; and these distinctions only serve to heighten, instead to subdue, unpleasant jealousies subsisting between King's and Company's Officers in India. Neither is there any reason why the King's Officers should be shut out from a proportionate participation of the Indian Staff, provided that they are acquainted with the language, and have served in India a sufficient time to have initiated them into the ways and characters of the Natives.

Promotion has long been in a state of stagnation; the only effectual way of remedying this, and securing fresh and active Officers for the higher grades, is by pensioning off (striking their names out of the Army List as effective Officers) a certain number of full Colonels every year, selecting from the seniors downwards such of them as either cannot or will not serve in India. We shall return to this subject at an early period.

Having so constantly renewed our remarks during the last two years on the flagrant abuses of the Light-House system, it has been with considerable gratification that we have just seen the daily press calling public attention to this important subject, for of all the various corrupt measures that have so long been practised with impunity in these kingdoms, we know of none that more loudly call for immediate correction; because, under it, our mercantile navy are taxed for the different private lights at a most extravagant and, we may say, at a most shameful rate. To get rid at once of these unjust imposts we would, as we have before observed, have all these private Light-Houses purchased by the Crown, on the fair valuation of a jury, as lands are purchased for making public improvements, roads, &c.; for why should any person, or persons, be suffered longer to levy an undue tax for a property of this kind, at the rate of, in some cases, ten times the cost of maintaining such Lights, because their ancestors may have had the good fortune, perhaps through corrupt Parliamentary influence, to have obtained permission to erect Light-Houses in certain spots, at the cost of but two or three thousand pounds each only, and still to continue to reap the harvest of several thousands a-year for a piece of land not exceeding half an acre, on which the Light-House stands. It is high time that our shipping interest should be relieved from these odious charges; and, though the Honourable Member for Middlesex unfortunately failed, through some trick or manœuvre on the part of the friends of the Light-House proprietors, in carrying his contemplated measure, for effecting a thorough amendment in the present universally condemned system of Private Light-Houses, in the last Session, yet we sanguinely hope that every disinterested and upright Member of the Legislature will lend his aid in the next session towards putting an end to a practice which bears so unjustly hard on the Commercial Marine of Great Britain.

The announcement, in the Gazette of the 8th instant, of Lieutenant-Colonel Sir Henry Bethune, employed in Persia, to have the local rank of Major-General in Asia, will doubtless give much satisfaction to the higher grades of both the King's and Company's Officers; as, by it, not only the Brigadiers and full Colonels in India, but apparently all the Field Officers of the two Armies in that country will be superseded. Sir Henry Bethune has been, we hear, for some time in the service of the Schah of Persia; but neither in the King's or Company's Army Lists does his name appear even with the LOCAL rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. In the "East India Directory," we find him as merely a Captain on the retired list of the Madras Establishment. Had the appointment been confined to Persia, instead of all Asia, there would not have been so much ground for dissatisfaction.

We direct attention to a letter signed A. C. in our correspondence of this day; it is upon a subject of great difficulty and importance, and one that merits no small consideration on many accounts, as involving questions which are likely to arise in the distribution of Prize Money on future occasions. We have many times advocated the policy of employing a much larger proportion of Marines than the naval complement on board our line-of-battle ships in time of war, because, whilst performing every duty of which landsmen are capable, they are not only far more orderly and effective, being already well drilled to the great gun exercise, and to habits of strict discipline, but available for landing on enemy's coasts, or for the reduction of hostile Islands; and a fleet of ten or fifteen sail of the line, containing within itself, and at its absolute disposal, a well appointed military force of two or three thousand men, might, by sudden debarkations upon vulnerable points of the enemy's coast, give harassing employment to an army of ten or twenty times that extent, by the rapidity of their movements, and the ease with which they could be transported to positions one hundred or more miles apart. Now, in order that such a force might be effective, it would be necessary that there should be attached to it not only a Commander of suitable rank, but the Staff Officers which are generally considered indispensable to its wants, and we do think that, under these circumstances, the present regulation, which provides that Field Officers of every grade shall share with the First Lieutenants of the Fleet, who may be considered in the light of Majors, is objectionable and unfair, and as the conquest of a hostile town or settlement might be (and doubtless often will be) accomplished by the Marines alone, the larger ships merely making a demonstration to cover their landing, we do think that, in justice to this valuable corps, a regulation should be established which would secure to their chief Officers a proportion of the Prize Money equivalent to their rank. The great object to be kept in view, in making a scale for the distribution of Prize Money, is this,—that as the Commander of a ship is responsible for every capture he makes, and liable to be cast in heavy damages, if many cases, for want of proving a detained vessel to have committed a breach of blockade, or owing to some technical objection which lawyers will raise on a trial, a considerable proportion of the Prize Money should be awarded to such Commander; a share which appears unreasonable to persons who do not consider the risks and obligations he incurs in the performance of his duty, and the difficulty of drawing a line between different cases.

Our limits will not permit us to express all we would wish upon this intricate question, but we shall return to the subject at an early opportunity; in the meantime we invite the attention of our correspondents to a matter which so nearly concerns Officers of the Royal Navy and their no less valuable brethren the Royal Marines.

We have received some communications complaining of the delay at the Admiralty in receiving Officers on the days appointed by the Naval Lords (the time specified on the placards half-past two o'clock on Wednesdays), and stating that, to Officers who are on leave of absence, and whose little time is most valuable, this delay is felt as an inconvenience that should be remedied, some having actually to return to their ships without accomplishing the object of their official visits. We think that much inconvenience must frequently arise from the length of audience some Officers require; but as we believe that both Sir Charles Adam and Sir William Parker are disposed to give every facility to personal communications with them, they will, if there is real ground for complaint, remedy the inconvenience. Those gallant Admirals are generally at the Admiralty from ten o'clock in the morning until near eight at night.

The appointments of Equity Judges are now settled by virtue of which Sir C. Pepys becomes Lord Chancellor of England, Mr. Bickersteth succeeding as Master of the Rolls, with a salary of 8,000*l.* a-year for life a Peerage.

The son of Rammohoun Roy, who has been for some time employed as a clerk in the Board of Control, has just been appointed to a writership in India by Sir John Hobhouse. This is the first appointment of a native to one of those situations which, in the course of promotion, lead to the highest office in the government of India, and places him at once on a footing with the British governors of the land. This young person, while in the Board of Control, evinced such intelligence, and performed his duties in a manner so creditable to his talent and industry, as secured him the favourable notice of the head of that department.

The Duke of Wellington, when the situation of head-gardener at Walmer Castle last became vacant, gave it to an old serjeant, named Townshend, who served in his Grace's regiment, the Grenadier Guards, at Waterloo. Insolvent Debtors' Court, Jan. 11.—Francis rry, a Captain in the Rl. African Corps, was opposed Mr. Cooke, on the part of Messrs. Brown, solicitors, other creditors. Mr. Lovegrove, hotelkeeper, appeared in person. The insolvent had, it appeared, been discharged in 1826, when he set aside 80*l.* a-year of his pension towards the gradual liquidation of his debts, which then amounted to 3,000*l.* He had resided in Oxford-terrace, Edgware-road, in a house kept by Miss Sarah Asprey, who passed by the name of Rivers. That lady he married last March at Worthing; but previously she had, he alleged, given her sister, Eliza Asprey, the whole of her furniture, jewellery, and dresses. The furniture Miss Sarah Asprey pawned in Oxford-street for 60*l.* and gave the duplicates to her sister. Shortly after she was married to the insolvent; and in August he was arrested at the suit of Messrs. Brown, and went to prison in September. He was arrested at Gravesend, but declared he was not about to sail for Sierra Leone, where his regt. was stationed; he had then with him several trunks, containing property, now in the possession of Miss Asprey. The insolvent had been introduced to Messrs. Brown by Sir John Jeffcott, the Chief Justice of Sierra Leone, from whom he claimed a sum of money. He was examined relative to a gold watch, which he said he sold since his arrest to a brother officer, who had recently sailed to join his regt.; that watch his wife had since pawned. It was proved that the furniture pledged was worth 100*l.*, and it was shown that the insolvent's wife, before marriage, had been in the habit of dressing in an "extravagant manner," and had exhibited a variety of jewels. She was then known as Grace Rivers. Miss Asprey underwent a lengthened examination: she stated that her sister gave her the property; she had lent her articles of jewellery and dresses after she had presented them to her; she had given her everything. A remand to the extent of three years, the utmost period, was prayed, for a determined concealment of considerable property. The Court said the case must stand adjourned sine die, for the insolvent to account for property, to amend his schedule, and to re-advertise his description; he was advised to give up all the property alleged to be claimed by Miss Asprey, if he wished to redeem his case. The Chief Commissioner, addressing that person, said she had better take care what she was about, as there was a clause in the act which rendered persons who abetted parties in the concealment of their property to above 20*l.* liable to an indictment, and imprisonment and hard labour for three years in the House of Correction; she had better, for her own sake, give up all the property.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

Spain.—A telegraphic despatch from Bayonne announces that the Meteore had arrived off St. Sebastian, for the purpose of taking vengeance for insults offered to the French flag by the Carlists. After waiting to receive the first shot, she returned such a warm and well directed fire upon the Carlists that they were obliged to send a flag of truce, with an assurance that in future the French flag should be respected. Deplorable excesses were committed at Barcelona on the 4th inst. Upwards of 100 prisoners were massacred by the populace in the citadel. The body of Col. O'Donnell was horribly mutilated. The disturbance continued on the 5th. The lives of all persons suspected of Carlism were threatened. On the 4th, upon receiving an account of these disorders, Gen. Mina left San Lorenzo for Barcelona. The fort of San Antero de Gustarie had been summoned to surrender, but Alaiza gave a sublime answer, though his garrison are very turbulent. The Carlists before San Sebastian have fired from their two canoons planted at Antigua upon the boats of the French vessels. San Sebastian has already received a reinforcement of 600 men, and 4,500 more are expected. Two thousand troops ought to suffice to dislodge the Carlists, and the British corps will probably effect this, unless Montenegro receives an addition of forces. Two merchants of San Sebastian have been killed by a bomb from the citadel.

Russia.—It has been officially announced that the Empress is again enceinte.

Portugal.—The Queen's marriage by proxy took place on the 1st inst. On the following day she opened the session of the ordinary Cortes for the present year by a speech. Neither event appears to have excited much interest at Lisbon. Several murders have again occurred in the country. Three men were assassinated at St. Ube's between the 26th and 29th ult., by unknown hands and for unknown motives.

Sweden.—Hamburg, Dec. 29.—It is asserted that the health of the King, Charles John, has become very weak, and that the rough climate of Sweden greatly injures him. He may possibly think of spending the remainder of his days in a milder climate more suited to his constitution, in which event Prince Oscar would assume the reins of government during his father's life. Letters from Copenhagen state, that at the beginning of the milder season King John, by his doctor's advice, intends making a temporary tour in the south. Time will tell how far these reports are well founded.

New York.—The accounts of the recent fire, which reached London on Saturday last were greatly exaggerated. By advices received yesterday, after careful investigations, the amount of damage will not exceed ten millions of dollars, instead of 30, as was at first stated.

Cape of Good Hope.—We have papers to the 12th Nov. The robberies had become less frequent on the eastern frontier. Nevertheless it would take some time before things were brought to a proper state of quietude. One or two of the plunderers had been shot.

Malta.—We have received papers from Malta to the 17th Dec. It appears by intelligence received there from Constantinople, that the Egyptian fleet was in the harbour, and consisted of one sail of the line and several smaller vessels. The arsenal presented a scene of great activity, as several extensive equipments were making. On the 28th Nov. Mr. Waghorn arrived at Alexandria, and from thence proceeded for the Nile by the canal, with the mails for Bombay, Bengal, Madras, and Ceylon. From the Nile he was to go on to Cairo and Suez. It was fully anticipated that the mails would arrive at Bombay in the course of 50 days from Malta. Mr. W. intended to return from Suez to Cairo and Alexandria.

The Court.

Their Majesties continue in the enjoyment of perfect health, but the Duchess of Gloucester, the Princess Augusta, and the Landgravine of Hesse Homberg have been confined to their apartments with rather severe colds.

It is expected that his Majesty will preside at a Council to-day, at which the Lords Commissioners will resign the custody of the Great Seal.

According to present arrangements, her Majesty will go to town with the King, and immediately after the Parliament has been opened their Majesties will return to Brighton, and remain there about a fortnight before they take their final departure for the season.

His Majesty has appointed Thomas Shiffner, Esq., youngest son of Sir George Shiffner, of Combe-place, Sussex, to be his Assistant Private Secretary. Those who have had intercourse with this gentleman will take pleasure in this appointment.

The King has been pleased to appoint Lieut.-Col. H. Senior to be Lieut.-Governor of the Island of Antigua, and G. Agostini, Esq. to be Attorney-General of the Island of St. Lucia.

The Duchess of Kent and the Princess Victorie arrived at Kensington Palace on Wednesday afternoon.

The Duke of Cumberland's apartments at St. James's Palace, and also his residence at Kew Palace, are ordered to be prepared for his reception by the 25th inst. The Duchess and Prince George will remain in the Prussian capital. A vacancy has occurred in the equerries of the Duke's household by the death of Sir C. Grant.

Theatres.

Covent-Garden.—Miss Faucit continues to attract crowded houses by her excellent performance of the part of Julia. A Miss Windham has acquired considerable fame by her clever performance of Helen, the part sustained by Miss Taylor, who is absent for the present, in consequence of the severe indisposition of some near relative.

Olympic.—Of all the theatres in our metropolis, this is the house where ample justice is always done to the author who may be fortunate enough to find favour in the fair widow's eye. The manner in which pieces are produced at this theatre, is almost enough to ensure their success, even when their merits are of mediocre stamp. Such has been the case with a new one act burletta, called One Hour, which is certainly one of the slightest and most sketchy affairs we ever witnessed. It is not in plot, point, and the dialogue of the most common-place description, and certainly owes its success to the splendid manner in which it has been produced. The introduction of a Carnival Ball is the saving of the burletta. In the course of the ball, Mr. C. Mathews and Miss Fitzwalter dance the Tarantula in national costume. And a very elegant set of quadrilles is also introduced, and very gracefully executed, which is all that is worth seeing of One Hour.

Queen's.—The substitution of Simpson and Co. and The Wedding Day for last week's attractive novelties, has proved a bad speculation, and unfair towards the authors of two very successful comedies. The above mentioned pieces, in which Mr. Dowton has appeared, have not drawn half as good houses as we witnessed during the preceding week; indeed the entertainments this week have been far inferior to any offered since the reopening. It is high time Christmas Capers was laid aside: let novelty be the order of the day. The management had better look to this in time, for they may depend upon it the public will not visit the Queen's to see old pieces worse acted than they have been accustomed to see them at other houses. On Monday a lively and rather amusing burletta, called Little Sins and Pretty Sinners, was produced, and proved successful. The scene is laid at the house of a quaker in America, who has even daughters, for whom he is desirous of procuring husbands. A suitor, in the garb of a quaker arrives, has an interview with the Pretty Sinners, and finally selects the youngest for his helpmate. The principal characters in the piece were cleverly sustained by Mr. Parry, Mr. Perry, Mrs. Brindal and Miss J. Murdoch. Perry and Mrs. Brindal were particularly good in their respective characters. We have seen Parry in many parts better suited to his lively and gay style of acting; he is not cut out for a quaker; the part is a misfit. The piece has been played every evening since with increased applause.

Braham's Theatre.—We again witnessed on Saturday the performance of the much-puffed opera of Agnes Sorel, with a new vaudeville, A House Divided, the only entertainment which appeared not to divide the house upon the general stupidity of the performances. As for the burletta of Rasselas, we do not remember having witnessed so much good scenery wasted upon so absurd an afterpiece. The only character at all intended to be amusing in this burlesque of Rasselas is a son of She Dr. Johnson, personated by Mrs. Selby, who is evidently intended to represent Miss Martineau. Braham must reform his entertainments altogether if he wishes to establish a theatre for the amusement of the members of the clubs and the aristocracy. This once great vocalist should retire in time; it is distressing to hear him attempt to sing, he, indeed, is the Barker of the establishment, though without the real Barker it would at once fall. The Corps de Ballet would disgrace Sadler's Wells.

Since writing the above, we are glad to find symptoms of amendment at this theatre. On Tuesday last a new and highly interesting burletta, called Monsieur Jacques, was produced, and proved successful. The acting of the author (or rather translator) Mr. Barnett, was such as to entitle him to all the applause bestowed upon his exertions. The music, by Mr. John Barnett, is of a very pleasing character.

CHIT-CHAT.

The King's Theatre, it is said, will open on the second Saturday of next month. The theatre will be repainted, and the gold ornaments refurnished. Colleoni the soprano, and Winter the tenor, are engaged for the opening. Grisi, Pasta, Rubini, and Lablache, will arrive about Easter. Tamburini and Ivanhoff are in treaty with Laporte, who has engaged a most efficient corps de ballet for the season. We hope to hear of a splendid list of subscribers for the ensuing season; Laporte fully deserves to be encouraged for his enterprise. We shall be able to give our readers more particulars in our next.

The Strand Theatre opens this evening under the direction of Mr. Macfarren.

CAUSES OF COURTS-MARTIAL IN THE EAST INDIA COMPANY'S ARMY.

The Articles of War are not carried into effect. It is a proverb, and a very true one, that idleness is the root of all evil. No army behaves so well during peace and idleness, as it does when on service, and when every member composing it is constantly employed, and when the Articles of War are most enforced. Now, I am of opinion that were these laws as strictly enforced during the time of the army being unemployed, great benefit would ensue; because, unless men are of superior mould to what the European soldiery are generally composed of, nothing but the fear of disgrace and punishment will keep them in subjection. By the Articles of War, a soldier convicted of mutiny or desertion is to suffer death, or such other punishment (a severe one of course is meant) as a General Court-Martial may award. The same punishment is also laid down for a sentry being asleep, or drunk on, or quitting his post. Now, let us look to the sentences lately awarded for these most serious of all military crimes. In several instances, men of the worst and most abandoned characters have been sentenced to imprisonment, or to corporal punishment, to the extent of from one to twelve months of the former, and from five hundred to one thousand lashes of the latter; and where sentence of death has been passed, it has been in general commuted to transportation,—the very thing the culprits aim at, and of the evil consequence of which the following fact is a proof. A man was tried and found guilty of mutiny; sentenced to be shot to death by musketry; the sentence was approved of by the Commander-in-Chief, but commuted to transportation as a felon. About a week after the departure of this man, another, who was a friend in iniquity of his, committed the very same act of mutiny, namely, striking a superior officer, his object being to follow his comrade to transportation. Now I need not ask whether, if the sentence awarded had been carried into effect, he would have been so anxious to have followed him to the grave? Should this man succeed in his wishes (for the sentence on him has not yet transpired), I have not the least doubt but that many other vicious characters will follow the example. In cases of desertion, I know several men who have never done any duty since they first joined their regiments nine years ago. Within a year and a half, two of them have three times been convicted of desertion, and been sentenced to imprisonment for various periods. No sooner has the term of one sentence expired, than they desert again. Now what is the use, I may ask, of men like these? They are a useless burthen to the state, and render their troop or company inefficient: they ought to be disposed of as an example to others; for punishment to such men is of no earthly use, except for the sake of example.

In 1827 and 1828 these serious crimes were becoming so very frequent, and so rapidly increasing from striking to murdering their superior officers, that at length—but not until several officers and non-commissioned officers had fallen sacrifices—it was found necessary to carry the Articles of War into effect; and after six or eight men had paid the penalty these crimes ceased. I saw one man hanged and two shot within, I think, three months, and there was at that time a military execution at almost every European station. We are just now going on in the same way; and when the determined villain finds that neither mutiny nor desertion will get him transported, but imprisoned and flogged, he will try what murder will do; and then, after some valuable lives have been sacrificed, we shall be obliged to resort to the punishment that ought at first to have been adopted. The Scotch proverb of "a stitch in time saves nine" is here very applicable:—had one culprit suffered for his crime, nine others would have been saved.

Cause the 2nd.—The delay that invariably takes place between the commission of crime and the punishment awarded in consequence.

It is allowed that the sooner punishment follows crime the better and more lasting will be the effect of example. Now let me see what is generally the case at the principal European stations in our Army—say Meerut, Kurnaul, Agra, Cawnpore. A Company's soldier is guilty of mutiny:—In the first place, a Court of Enquiry is ordered, the proceedings of which, after going through half a dozen different offices, are despatched to Calcutta or head-quarters, and a month afterwards the General Officer gets his warrant to convene a Court-Martial. The Court assembles, tries, and sentences the criminal. The proceedings are sent to Calcutta, and there published; and by the time the sentence is known at the station, a delay of from eight to twelve weeks generally takes place. Thus all the good effects of a speedy example are lost.

Cause the 3rd.—The very restricted powers vested in the inferior or Regimental Courts-Martial.

In the Company's Army there are only two modes of punishing defaulters for minor offences tried by Regimental Courts-Martial,—imprisonment to the extent of six weeks, or corporal punishment to the extent of 500 lashes; in the latter case, the authority of the General Officer commanding the division is requisite, but 300 may be inflicted by the Confirming Officer or the Commanding Officer of the regiment. These may appear severe punishments to our non-military friends, but we of the cloth, who are in daily, hourly, and constant intercourse with European soldiers, know perfectly well that men of bad character do not care for it; nay, I know many men in my own regiment, I am sorry to say, (and I will be bound to say there are also many in every European regiment in India,) who actually prefer being in confinement to doing any duty, and commit crime on purpose to be sent there, and even go so far as to tell you so. I heard an offender say to a Court-Martial, in reply to the question put by it—Prisoner, have you anything to say in your defence? Answer—"No, I have not; I suppose I shall get six weeks for it, but I don't care a damn for that!" He was flogged; and when taken down, after the punishment had been inflicted, he said, loud enough to be heard by every one on parade—"I don't care a damn for that either!"

Cause the 4th.—The very restricted powers vested in the Commanding Officers of Regiments.

A Commanding Officer can only sentence a culprit to be imprisoned in the regimental coojee-house for seven days, impose extra duty, or have his liquor stopped. The latter is no punishment at all; because liquor is to be had in every corner of a European cantonment, and almost for nothing. The consequence is that for every crime a Regimental Court-Martial is resorted to; and when once a man is brought to this, he considers himself a marked man, and can no longer say in praise of himself, "I have never yet been brought to a Court-Martial."—East India United Service Journal.

Literary Notices.

The Self-Condemned. A Romance. By the Author of "The Lollards," "Calthorpe," &c. 3 vols. post 8vo. Richard Bentley.

If a story abounding in strong interest, rapid change of scene, exciting situations, mystery, and traits of heroism be, as we think it is, the very best kind of fiction, h will the lovers of romance be fully gratified. "The S Condemned" is a tale of the reign, we had almost s of the despotism, of Queen Elizabeth; and its subject chiefly connected with the unsparing persecution which an Irish chieftain of the name of Nagle is s jected by the myrmidons of the "lady king," for s was the soubriquet in Ireland of the virgin queen.

One of the principal features of the romance is the pe ous expedition undertaken by Wilmot, a young Engl officer, to ensnare the Nagle in the very midst of strong mountain hold, and surrounded by his numer and daring adherents, and to decoy him from the saf of his position into the power of his enemies. T whole of this portion of the novel is managed w singular dexterity, and if some of the incidents and s prises and contretemps savour rather of the melodrama it cannot be denied that they always keep attention the alert, and powerfully stimulate curiosity. The strik title of the work is derived from the undying remorse o woman, Lady Roche, whose honour, in an unguard moment, had been yielded to the passionate addresses Nagle, as if to verify the old proverb that "pity is akin love," for had not the young chieftain been suffer under the unrelenting cruelty of the English despoil Lady Roche would not have taken that interest in fate which gradually led to her ruin. In this may traced a "a great moral lesson," and it is conveyed w fitting delicacy, and even solemnity. The troubles the Nagle do not, however, terminate here. His sis Grace, a charming creation of the novelist, falls into power of Lord Roche, who, upon the plan, we suppo of the lex talionis, seeks to reduce the pure-minded g to the same state as that to which her brother had brou the wife of the libertine nobleman. This enormity happily frustrated, and the sympathy of the read already keenly stimulated, is in this instance spared.

In the historical portions of the work, the author h been greatly assisted by some unpublished docume furnished by his friend Mr. Crofton Croker, the w known author of the Legends of the sister island. A together, the "Self-Condemned" opens a new a startling page in the eventful annals of our country.

The next paper of importance in this invaluable c lection is the letter of the British Commander to t Minister, Lord Castlereagh, pointing out the singu state of disorganisation of the Army, and suggesting i provements. It is a Military document deserving t attention of every Officer.

"Abrantes, 17th June, 1809.

"My Dear Lord,—I cannot, with propriety, omit to dr your attention again to the state of discipline of the arm which is a subject of serious concern to me, and well d serves the serious consideration of his Majesty's ministers —" It is impossible to describe to you the irregulari and outrages committed by the troops. They are never o of the sight of their officers, I may almost say never out the sight of the commanding officers of their regiments, a the general officers of the army, that outrages are not co mitted; and notwithstanding the pains which I take, which there will be ample evidence in my orderly books, a post or a courier comes in, not an officer arrives from t rear of the army, that does not bring me accounts of o rages committed by the soldiers who have been left b hind on the march, having been sick, or having straggl from their regiments, or who have been left in hospitals.

"We have a provost marshal, and an less than fo assistants. I never allow a man to march with the ba gage. I never leave an hospital without a number officers and non-commanding officers proportionable to t number of soldiers; and never allow a detachment to mar unless under the command of an officer; and yet there not an outrage of any description, which has not been co mitted on a people who have uniformly received us friends, by soldiers who never yet, for one moment, s fered the slightest want, or the smallest privation.

"In the first place, I am convinced that the law is n strong enough to maintain discipline in an army up service. It is most difficult to convict any prisoner bef a regimental court-martial, for I am sorry to say th soldiers have little regard to the oath administered to tha and the officers who are sworn 'well and truly to try a determine, according to the evidence, the matter bef them,' have too much regard to the strict letter of that a ministered to them. This oath, to the members of regimental court-martial, has altered the principle of t proceedings of that tribunal. It is no longer a court honour, at the hands of which a soldier was certain of r ceiving punishment if he deserved it; but it is a court law, whose decisions are to be formed according to t evidence, principally of those on whose actions it is co stituted as a restraint.

ut, admitting the regimental or detachment court-l, as now constituted, to be a control upon the r equally efficient with that which existed under the nstitution of a court-martial, which my experience ne it is not, I should wish to know whether any h army (this army in particular, which is composed end battalions, and therefore but ill provided with s) can afford to leave with every hospital, or with detachment, two Captains and four Subalterns, in to be enabled to hold a detachment court-martial.

The law in this respect ought to be amended; and the army is on service in a foreign country, any one, r three officers ought to have the power of trying isls, and punishing them instanter; taking down all dings in writing, and reporting them for the in-tion of the Commander-in-Chief on their joining the esides this improvement of the law, there ought to be British Army a regular provost establishment, of a proportion should be attached to every army sent l. All the foreign armies have such an establishment. rench gendarmerie nationale, to the amount of thirty y with each of their corps; the Spaniards their policia r, to a still larger amount; while we, who require such more, I am sorry to say, than any other of the nations rope, have nothing of the kind, excepting a few Ser-, who are taken from the line for the occasion, and re probably not very fit for the duties which they are form.

he authority and duties of the provost ought, in some er, to be recognised by the law. By the custom of armies, the provost has been in the habit of punish-the spot (even with death, under the orders of the mander-in-Chief) soldiers found in the act of disobedi-of orders, of plunder, or of outrage.

here is no authority for this practice excepting custom, I conceive would hardly warrant it; and yet I declare do not know in what manner the army is to be com-ed at all, unless the practice is not only continued, additional number of provosts appointed.

here is another branch of this subject which deserves consideration. We all know that the discipline and rity of all armies depend upon the diligence of the ntal officers particularly the subalterns. I may order I please; but if they do not execute what I order, hey execute with negligence, I cannot expect that ritish soldiers will be orderly or regular.

here are two incitements to men of this description to eir duty as they ought—the fear of punishment, and pe of reward.

s for the first, it cannot be given individually; for I e I should find it very difficult to convict any officer of this description of duty with negligence, more particu-s he is to be tried by others probably guilty of the same e. But these evils, of which I complain, are com-d by whole corps; and the only way in which an be punished is by disgracing them, by sending into garrison, and reporting them to his Majesty. I and shall do this by one or two battalions, but I can-ature to do it by more; and then there is an end to the f this punishment, even if those who received it were dered in England as disgraced persons rather than rn.

s for the other incitement to officers to do their duty ally, there is no such thing. We who command the s of the country, and who are expected to make exer-greater than those made by the French armies, to , to fight, and to keep our troops in health and in line, have not the power of rewarding, or promising a d for a single officer of the army; and we deceive ves, and those who are placed under us, if we imagine ve that power, or if we hold out to them that they derive any advantage from the exertion of it in their r.

You will say, probably, in answer to all this, that h armies have been in the field before, and that these laints, at least to the same extent, have not existed: ich I answer—first, that the armies are now larger, operations more extended, and the exertions required n than they were in former periods; and that the of carrying on war is different from what it was. dly, that our law, instead of being strong in propor-to the temptation and means for indiscipline and larity, has been weakened; and that we have not ed the additional means of restraint and punishment ised by other nations, and our enemies, although we imitated them in those particulars which have increased ggravated our irregularities. And finally, that it is within late years that the Commanders-in-Chief abroad been deprived of all patronage, and of course of all of incitement to the officers under their command.

t may be supposed that I wish for this patronage to y my own favourites; but I declare most solemnly that ad it to-morrow, there is not a soul in the army whom ould wish to promote, excepting for services per-ed.

I have thought it proper to draw your attention to these subjects, which I assure you deserve the serious consideration of the King's Ministers. We are an excellent army on parade, an excellent one to fight; but we are worse than an enemy in a country; and take my word for it that either defeat or success would dissolve us. Believe me, &c.

"Viscount Castlereagh." "ARTHUR WELLESLEY.

"The position was well calculated for the troops which were to occupy it. The ground in front of the British Army was open, that in front of the Spanish Army covered with olive trees, intersected by roads, ditches, &c. The Spanish infantry was posted behind the bank of the road leading from Talavera to the left of the position.

"The German Legion were on the left of the position in the first line. I had intended this post for the Guards; but I was unfortunately out, employed in bringing in General Mackenzie's advanced guard when the troops took up their ground. The 5th and 7th battalions of the Legion did not stand their ground on the evening, and in the beginning of the night of the 27th, which was the cause of the momentary loss of the height in the second line.

"General Sherbrooke moved his division, which was the left of the first line, to support General Hill's attack, in order to regain the height; and it was difficult to resume in the night the exact position which had been first marked out; and, in fact, on account of these circumstances, we had not that precise position till after the enemy's attack upon the height at daylight in the morning had been repulsed.

"The advance of the Guards to the extent to which it was carried was nearly fatal to us, and the battle was certainly saved by the advance, position, and steady conduct of the 48th regiment, upon which General Sherbrooke's division formed again.

"The ground in front of the Spanish troops would not have been unfavourable to an attack upon the enemy's flank while they were engaged with us, as there were broad roads leading from Talavera and different points of their position, in a direct line to the front, as well as diagonally to the left. But the Spanish troops are not in a state of discipline to attempt a manœuvre in olive grounds, &c., and if they had got into confusion, all would have been lost.

A Dictionary of Quotations from the British Poets. 3 Parts. Second Edition. Whittaker and Co.

WE must give the editor of this publication great credit for his very judicious discrimination in the selection as well as the arrangement of his materials. As a work of reference it is unquestionably valuable; it contains the most forcible and beautiful passages of the British Poets, and should therefore have a place in every library. It is divided into three parts; the first is entirely devoted to Shakspeare, the second consists of extracts in blank verse, and the third in rhyme; thus each part is independent of the others, and the subjects can be referred to with the utmost facility.

Exercises for Ladies, calculated to Preserve and Improve Beauty. By Donald Walker. T. Hurst.

MR. WALKER has prefixed to a very elegant little volume the testimonials of Drs. Birkbeck and Copland on the value of his Exercises. We could scarcely have higher medical authority, and those gentlemen give Mr. Walker the credit of having contributed materially to prevent the occurrence of unequal enlargement of muscular parts, the first and slightest species of deformity, and the still more serious deviations from the correct form of the body, which occur when that curious and beautiful mechanical fabric, the spine, becomes deranged. The Exercises are clearly described and illustrated with plates, and they are not only excellent for the improvement of health but amusing pastimes, calculated to give elasticity to the frame without pain or the slightest inconvenience.

SIGNAL INSTANCE OF ENGLISH FORTITUDE.

IN the year 1709, when the British forces were in Spain, Alicant, a place of great importance, was besieged by an army of 12,000 men. As this city and castle had been taken by the remarkable valour of the British seamen, so the siege of it afterwards, when the English defended it, was one of the most remarkable actions in this age. The following is a succinct account of the whole affair, from the time the place was invested till its surrender:—Alicant is a city and port commanded by a strong castle standing on a rock at a small distance from the sea, and about sixty-eight miles south from the capital city of Valencia. There was in it a good garrison, under the command of Major-General Richards, which made an obstinate defence against a very numerous army of the enemy, with a very large train of heavy artillery, and excellently supplied with ammunition. At last, the city being absolutely untenable, the garrison resolved to retire into the castle, which had hitherto been esteemed impregnable. They sunk three cisterns in the solid rock, and then, with incredible labour, filled them with water. The troops that retired into it were Sir Charles Hotham's regiment, and that of Colonel Sibourg, generally called the French regiment, because it was composed of refugees. After some progress made in the second siege, the French saw that it was impossible to do any great matter in the usual way, and therefore, contrary to all expectation, resolved upon a work excessively laborious and in all outward appearance impracticable, which was that of mining through the solid rock in order to blow up the castle and its garrison into the air together. At first Major-General Richards and all the officers in the place looked upon the enemy's scheme as a thing impossible to be accomplished, and were secretly well pleased with their undertaking, in hopes it would give time for our fleet to come to their relief; yet this did not hinder them from doing all that lay in their power to incommode the workmen and at last to countermine them.

The besiegers, however, wrought so incessantly, and brought such numbers of peasants to assist them in their labours, that they having, in about twelve weeks' time, finished the works for this service, and charged them with 1500 barrels of powder and other materials of destruction, summoned the castle to surrender on March 2d, most solemnly assuring a safe and honourable convoy to Barcelona, with bag and baggage, for every person in it, if they submitted within three days and prevented the ruin of the castle, but threatened otherwise no mercy should be shown if any accidentally escaped the blow. To demonstrate the reality of their design, they desired the garrison might depute three or more Engineers, with other gentlemen of competent skill, to view their works, and make a faithful report of what they saw. Accordingly, two Field Officers went to the mine, and were allowed the liberty of making what scrutiny they pleased; upon which they told the Governor that, if their judgment failed them not, the explosion would carry up the whole castle to the easternmost battery, unless it took vent in their own countermine or vein; but at least they conceived it would carry away the sea battery, the lodging-rooms in the castle close, some of the chambers cut for soldiers' barracks, and, they very much feared, might affect the great cistern.

A grand council of war was called upon this, the French message delivered, and the Engineers made their report: the besieged acknowledged their want of water, but believing the fleet might be sensible of their distress, and consequently under some concern for their relief, their unanimous resolution was to commit themselves to the providence of God, and whatever fate attended them to stand the springing of the mine. The French General and Spanish officers expressed the utmost concern at this answer, and the second night of the three allowed sent to divert them from what they called, and it is very likely thought, inexcusable obstinacy, offering the same honourable articles as before, even upon that late compliance; but those still were rejected by the besieged. The fatal third night approaching, and no fleet seen, the French sent their last summons, and withal an assurance that their mine was primed, and should be sprung by six o'clock the next morning, and though, as they saw, all hope and prospect of relief was vain, yet there was room for safety still, and the terms already proposed were in their power to accept. The besieged persisted in their adherence to the result of the first council, and the French met their usual answer again; therefore, as a prologue to their intended tragedy, they ordered all the inhabitants of that quarter to withdraw from their houses before five o'clock the ensuing morning. The besieged, in the meantime, kept a general guard, devoting themselves to their meditations. The Major-General, Col. Sibourg, and Lieutenant-Colonel Thornicroft, of Sir Charles Hotham's regiment, sat together in the Governor's usual lodging-room; other officers cantoned themselves as their temper inclined them, to pass the melancholy night.

At length, day appearing, the Governor was informed that the inhabitants were flying in crowds to the westernmost port of the town; the Governor, attended by the above-mentioned gentlemen, and about five or six other officers, went to the west battery to inform himself better. After he had remained there about a quarter of an hour, Lieut.-Col. Thornicroft desired him to remove, as being unable to do any service there; he and Colonel Sibourg answered that no danger was to be apprehended there more than in any other place—that there they would wait the event. The Lieutenant-Colonel remained because his superiors did, and other officers imitated the same example; but the hour of five being now considerably past, the Corporal's guard cried out that the train was fired, observing some smoke from the lighted matches and other combustible matter near it, from whence the same ascended to the sentinels above. The Governor and Field Officers were then urged to retreat, but refused.

The mine at last blew up; the rock opened and shut; the whole mountain felt the convulsion; the Governor and Field Officers, with their company, ten guns, and two mortars, were buried in the abyss; the walls of the castle shook—part of the great cistern fell—another cistere almost closed—and the rock shut a man to his neck in its cliff, who lived many hours in that afflicting posture. About thirty-six sentinels and women were swallowed in different quarters, whose dying groans were heard some of them after the fourth mournful day. Many houses of the town were overwhelmed in their ruins, and the castle suffered much; but that it was any form at all was owing to the vent which the explosion forced through the veins of the rock and the countermine. After the loss of the chief officers, the government fell, of course, to Lieut.-Col. D'Alben, of Sibourg's regiment, who drew out a detachment from the whole garrison, and with it made a desperate sally to show how little he was moved at their thunder. The bombs from the castle played on the town more violently, and the shot galled every corner of their streets; which marks of their resentment they continued till the arrival of our fleet, which they had expected so long.

The Spanish and French historians speak of this action with all imaginable regard to the gallant defence made by the besieged, and the Spaniards called the ruined castle the monument of English courage. In the present day, under a more enlightened intelligence, we can only lament that kindred nations should ever have abandoned themselves so far to the dominion of the lower propensities of our nature as to have come into such deadly and unhappy collision.—Calcutta Lit. Gazette.

THE LATE COLONEL ROBERT HALL.

THIS officer, whose demise took place at Chelsea on the 10th instant, in his 79rd year, entered the service as Ensign, by purchase, in the 72nd Regiment in 1780, and shortly after joined that regiment at Gibraltar, where he continued to serve during the entire remaining period of the memorable siege. Returning thence on the treaty of peace being signed in 1783, he was, on reduction of the establishment, placed on half-pay. He afterwards exchanged into the 39th Regiment, in which he purchased a Lieutenantcy, and served for several years. In 1793, he raised an independent company, and was attached for a short period to the 25th Regiment. In 1794, he embodied an entire regiment for service within the United Kingdom, and which service he perfected in the unprecedented short space of eleven weeks from the date of receiving the order, displaying an activity of mind and energy of character that have seldom been surpassed. Immediately upon the completion of the regiment, thenceforth denominated the Devonshire and Cornwall Fencibles, it was ordered on active service to Ireland, where it devolved upon its Colonel to mould and discipline this crude mass of heterogeneous materials. The regiment served in Ireland from the commencement of 1795 till the middle of 1802, embracing the entire period of the last unhappy rebellion, with credit and efficiency, having frequently received the marked commendations of the General Officers in command of Districts. The present General, the Hon. W. M. Maitland, was its Lieut.-Colonel. The regiment returned to England in 1802, when, on the reduction of the army, consequent on the recent peace, it was disbanded. In 1803, Colonel Hall submitted to the Government a plan for cultivating the waste lands of the United Kingdom, by means of the military then about to be disembodied. His design was still to retain those forces in concentrated masses, locate them, by encampments under canvas, until their own labour should have constructed huts, a single summer suffering for this purpose, under their officers on extensive ranges of uncultivated districts, such for instance as Exmoor and Dartmoor; and, while their efficiency for the defence of the kingdom might have been preserved, the principal portion of their time was to be devoted to the cultivation and enclosure of these lands, the formation of road communications through them, &c. Thus it was calculated that a very few years would not only have rendered those lands productive, and repaid the outlay, but would also have returned a very considerable overplus revenue to the nation. If some such plans had been adopted the country would not now be burthened with its army of pensioners of not fewer than eighty-two thousand men, absorbing something over a million of revenue. A great proportion of these men, at the time of becoming pensioners, were still efficient as labourers, and, in lieu of pensions to continue for life, they might have received a regulated quantity of the land thus brought under cultivation. This plan even still might not be unworthy of being worked out into a practical system.

Colonel Hall lost one son in the service, a Lieut. in the Royal Welsh Fusileers, killed at the battle of Albuera in 1811, and another, as Midshipman in the Navy, drowned at sea. Three daughters and four sons are left to mourn the loss of this veteran officer; one son, Lieut. William Hall, is Assist.-Editor of the United Service Journal, and another, Mr S. Carter Hall, is Editor of the New Monthly Magazine.

A Nautical Apparition.—In the Defiance, off Copenhagen, on the 6th of April, 1801 (four days after the battle), her lights were extinguished whilst transporting the powder from one magazine to another. Mr. Francis John Collet, one of the Middies, on going down into the cockpit, was struck with the apparition, as he supposed, of his mother, who took him by the hand, blessed him, and gave him advice relative to his conduct towards the officers. The boy was speechless until the apparition vanished, when his screams vibrated through the ship like an electric shock, and, rushing on deck, no persuasion or threats could induce him to go below for that day and night. The sentinel at the after magazine door was questioned, and he declared he had seen something white pass across the cockpit when the young gentleman screamed out. Admiral Graves, Capt. Retalick, and also the Rev. James Beaver (the Chaplain) used every endeavour to appease his mind, but to no effect. Whether it was a trick played upon him by some of the youngsters has never been known, but the Chaplain made a minute of the time, and, strange as it may appear, on that very day and hour (allowing for the difference of longitude) Collet's mother died at Greenwich.—Unpublished Naval Recollections.

CROSSE AND BLACKWELL'S PREPARED HORSE RADISH.—For Hot and Cold Meats, &c. The excellence of this universally admired Vegetable for its distinctive and tonic qualities being so well known and acknowledged, has induced the Proprietors to offer more extensively for sale their much approved Preparation of the same. To prepare this necessary article for the table, though simple in itself, is usually attended with much trouble and expense to those who have occasion to purchase each time it is in request. C. & B.'s preparation entirely supersedes this inconvenience, and is recommended with a facility and economy truly desirable, as it will be found, on trial, to reduce the expense to one half,—produce additional zest,—and be ready for use at a moment's notice.

DINMORE'S ESSENCE OF SHRIMPS will be found far superior to the Essence of Anchovies for every description of boiled and fried fish, being of a more mild, rich, and delicious flavour.

Tender and decayed Teeth cured and effectually preserved from further decay.—At home from ten till five.

THE INSTRUMENTS Invented by J. READ in the year 1830, so well known as the STOMACH and ENEMA PUMPS, have been extensively circulated in India for the last 18 years, evidently drew the attention of Victor Jacquemont to their utility, as he declares in his "Letters on India" that many of the English die here from neglecting the use of Injections. The truth of this assertion cannot be doubted, as it is well known that the lives of many thousands in this country, as well as on the continents of Europe and America, have been saved by their use, which is attested not only by the best Medical authorities, but by the most eminent Members of the Profession, as well as from most parts of the globe where the Genuine Instrument is known. J. R. begs leave to inform the Public, that after 16 years' experience he has made such improvements, by rendering them more simple, portable, and durable than any of the kind ever offered. The Tubes also he has brought to such perfection that they are proof against oil, turpentine, or the greatest climate, as J. R. will warrant. Manufactured only by J. READ, 33, Regent Circus, Piccadilly, where they may be seen and purchased.

N.B.—As spurious Instruments are daily palmed on the public as improvements on Read's New Patent, none are genuine unless stamped with his name.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba.

From William Hantech, Esq., House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of: the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly, NORTON'S truly valuable CAMOMILE PILLS, for INDIGESTION, &c.—These Pills are a pure extract of Camomile Flowers, prepared by a peculiar process, by which all the medicinal properties of rather more than one ounce of the flowers, are concentrated into four moderate sized Pills; they are mild in operation, and have proved wonderfully successful in removing every symptom of indigestion, sick headach, loss of appetite, giddiness, heartburn, costiveness, eruptions of the skin, and all complaints arising from a disordered state of the digestive organs; they require no alteration of diet, and their operation will be found so beneficial in giving tone to the stomach, regulating the bowels, and in promoting a healthy habit, as fully to convince all who take them of their great utility.

Persons who have suffered from indigestion for several years, have by their use in a few weeks perfectly recovered, which is a convincing proof, that in the smallest compass, is contained the largest quantity of the tonic principle of so peculiar a nature, as to pervade the whole system, through which it diffuses health and strength.

Sold wholesale by Barclay and Sons; T. Butler; E. Edwards; F. Newberry and Sims; W. Sutton and Co., and A. Willoughby and Co. late B. Godfrey Windus', 61, Bishopsgate-street Without, London; and retail by nearly all respectable Medicine Venders.

Be particular to ask for "NORTON'S PILLS," for in consequence of their great success some unprincipled persons have prepared a spurious imitation.

THE CAUSE OF DEATH!

The Oriental Naturalist, Victor Jacquemont, repeatedly avers in his Letters, that the English die from neglecting the use of Lavements. "It is therefore with renewed confidence that Messrs. Bicknell and Co., 369, Strand, adjoining Exeter Hall, respectfully inform the Public that they are the sole Manufacturers of Dr. Scott's New Patent Clyso-Pump, or Lavement Machine, of which an eminent Physician, who has filled an important station in the Honourable Company's Service for thirty years past, has thus expressed his opinion:—"I am confident that the introduction of Dr. Scott's Clyso-Pump into India would tend greatly to the preservation of Life; and it is a desirable thing that every family should be provided with it. It is admirably suited for hot climates, as it does not possess any elastic tubes, the best kind of which are very perishable and annoying in any country; but decay most quickly in tropical regions. In short, I think that Scott's Patent Lavement Machine should form an item in every outfit to India." Messrs. Bicknell beg to add that this Clyso-Pump is the latest and greatest improvement of the Lavement Machine at present before the public, and is entitled to the serious attention of persons who are in the habit of taking or requiring aperient medicines, and who suffer from indigestion or other disorders connected with a confined or faulty state of the bowels. The distinguishing characteristics of this ingenious patent are, first, the application of METALLIC (folding) tubes to free of perishable materials, which is an important benefit to purchasers residing in the country or abroad; secondly, every part of the apparatus is permanently united, saving, therefore, all trouble of fixing and unfixing when used; thirdly, the liquid passes from the pump in a continued current. Sent to any part of the country, or the Continent, by Bicknell and Co., of whom may be had, "The Companion to the Lavement Pump," (price 1s. 6d.) by James Scott, M.D. Also the same Author's Treatise on Confinement of the Bowels, price 3s. 6d.

STIRLING'S STOMACH PILLS, for Health and Longevity.—An eminent medical writer has remarked, and experience has proved the fact beyond dispute, that those who are attentive to keeping the Stomach and Bowels in proper order, preserve health, prevent disease, and generally attain robust, cheerful, and healthy Old Age. For that truly desirable purpose, STIRLING'S STOMACH PILLS are particularly adapted, being prepared with the Sulphate of Quinine, and the most choice stomachic and aperient drugs of the Materia Medica. They have in all cases proved superior to every other medicine in the cure of stomach and liver complaints, indigestion, loss of appetite, sensation of fulness, sick head-ache, pain and oppression after meals, habitual costiveness, flatulence, shortness of breath, stomach coughs, spasms, worms, and fits in children and grown persons, and all disorders incident to the stomach and bowels. They are also truly efficacious in the cure of colds, ague, asthmas, rheumatism, gout, jaundice, dropsy, and gravel, and an excellent restorative after any excess or too free indulgence at table, as they gently cleanse the bowels, strengthen the stomach, sweeten the breath, cheer the spirits, brace the nerves, induce a healthy action of the liver, improve digestion, and invigorate the whole system. Females who value good health and personal appearance, should never be without them, as they purify the blood, remove obstructions, pimples, cutaneous eruptions, sallowness, &c., and give the skin a beautiful, clear, healthy, and blooming appearance. Persons of a plethoric habit who are subject to head-ache, fits, giddiness, dimness of sight, or drowsiness, singing noise in the ears, which indicate too great a flow of blood to the head, should be particular to take them frequently. They are so mild and gentle in their action that children and persons of all ages may take them at any time, as they do not contain mercury or any ingredient that requires confinement or restriction of diet. Many healthy aged individuals, some of one hundred years and upwards, make it a rule to take them two or three times a week, by which they remove the causes that produce disease, preserve their health, and keep off the infirmities of age, retaining, in a surprising degree, all the energy, vigour, vivacity, and cheerfulness of their youthful days. They should be kept in every family as a remedy in case of sudden illness, for, by their prompt administration, cholera morbus, cramps, spasms, fevers, apoplexy, and other alarming complaints, which too often prove fatal, may be speedily cured or prevented.—Prepared only by J. W. Stirling, Chemist, 66, High Street, Whitechapel, in Boxes at 1s½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each, and may be had of all the principal Medicine Venders in the kingdom.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Bonilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 79, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sams, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

GRIFFIN AND HYAMS, Silversmiths, Jewellers, and Dealers in Bullion, Exchangers of Coin, Irish, Scotch, and French Bank Notes; Second-hand Plate, 22, Cornhill, opposite the Royal Exchange, respectfully return thanks for the liberal support of their friends, and beg to inform the public, that they are determined not to be undersold, but will supply the best manufactured Fiddle Pattern Spoons and Forks of any weight, at 7s. 2d.; King's Pattern, 7s. 6d. per ounce, with a deduction of 1s. 6d. per ounce if for exportation. Ladies' Double-bottomed Gold Watches, Gold Dials, Engine-turned, and Jewelled, at Ten Guineas each; all other articles in proportion.

TO SPORTSMEN, TRAVELLERS, MERCHANTS, and CAPTAINS of SHIPS.—THORN'S POTTED YARMOUTH BLOATERS. Now in high perfection. The increasing demand for this most delicious preparation proves, beyond all doubt, it is far superior to any thing of the kind ever yet offered to the public for Sandwiches, Toast, Biscuits, &c., and as an excellent relish for Wine. In Pots, 1s. and 2s. each. Warranted in all climates.

"In this preparation the flavour of the Herring is preserved unimpaired, if not improved; the prime parts of the fish are concentrated in a substance about the consistency of butter, and which may be used in the same way; and, being put up in neat and portable pots, a treat may be enjoyed at any time, without the unpleasant smell and other inconveniences which attend the dressing and partaking of herrings in the ordinary way."—Watchman.

THORN'S TALLY HO! SAUCE, for Fish, Game, Steaks, Chops, Cutlets, made dishes, and all general purposes, is the richest and most economical Sauce now in use, imparting a zest not otherwise acquired. In Bottles, 2s. and 4s. Warranted in all climates.

"We have tried (verbi experto) Thorn's Tally-Ho Sauce, and can pronounce it exquisite. We know nothing of the ingredients, that we leave to such as are more 'curious in fish sauce' than we are, but we can speak to the richness of its flavour, which, to our thinking, would create an appetite under the ribs of death."—Satirist.

MESSRS. DELCROIX AND CO., Perfumers to their Majesties and the Royal Family, 158, New Bond-street, beg leave to caution the Nobility, Gentry, and the Trade in general, against the many spurious and vile imitations of their celebrated Perfumery by persons who would be least suspected, who have imitated their bottles and labels, but have not gone so far as to forge their seal, the Lamb and Flag, with their address around the same; to the following long admired articles they will in future add their signature:—ESPRIT DE LAVANDE AUX MILLEFEURS, VEGETABLE EXTRACT, BOUQUET SEMILLANT, BOUQUET DU ROI, BOUQUET DE LA REINE. YOLAND'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION is the most wonderful Medicine ever discovered by man, for the cure of GONORRHŒA, GLEETS, STRICTURES, WHITES, Pains in the Loins, Affections of the Kidneys, Gravel, Irritation of the Urethra or Bladder, and for all Urinary Diseases in both sexes.—This Medicine is patronised, prescribed, recommended, and sanctioned by the Most Eminent of the Faculty, not only in England but on the Continent; and stated by them, from experience, to be the only Medicine that can be relied on for the cure of these complaints, and they invariably resort to it when their own remedies fail.

YOLAND'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION cures both sexes at all times sooner than any other known remedy, with the most triumphant success, after every Medicine of the present day has proved ineffectual, so that this justly celebrated specific has arrived at the acme of perfection, surpassing every thing of the kind that ever bore the name of medicine, frequently curing some of these serious diseases in a few hours. Those who have suffered from any of the above diseases for many years (such as strictures, &c.) will find upon taking this medicine for a short time, that, if not entirely cured, they will no longer feel inconvenience from the trifling complaint that remains.

References to respectable Surgeons, who are in the habit of prescribing this medicine extensively, will be given on application to the Proprietor's Agents.

Sold in Sealed Packets, with full directions, so that any one may cure themselves with perfect safety and secrecy, sent to any part of the world by Hannay and Co., 63, Oxford-street, the corner of Wells-street, London, to whom dealers in the country are requested to forward their orders direct; and Retail by all respectable Medicine Venders. Price 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. Country Order, Orders for the Continent, and shipping Orders to any extent, executed as usual on the day of arrival.

A CARD TO LADIES.—A Lady of High Family, the wife of an Officer, feels so grateful to Mr. VAN BUTCHELL, Surgeon Accoucheur, No. 16, Percy-street, Bedford-square, for the cure which he has performed of a complicated disease of Tumour, and Abscesses, &c., with which she had been afflicted five years, that she avails herself of this method of publicly expressing her high estimation of his skill and unremitting attention to her most painful disease, and of her willingness to meet any lady seriously afflicted who may be referred to her.—Cards of address may be had on application to Mr. Craddock, Chemist and Druggist, 6, Store-street, Bedford-square.

HUGHES, B.D., Prebendary of Peterborough, late Christian Advocate at Cambridge, Author of "Travels in Greece," &c. Being the Eighteenth Volume of Valpy's only complete and Illustrated edition of the History of England, now publishing at 6s. each, illustrated with Eighty highly-finished Engravings.

Vols. I. to VIII. contain Hume,—IX. to XIII. Smollett,—and Vol. XIV. commences Mr. Hughes' Continuation to the present time, which will be completed in 8 vols. Either portion can be had separately.

 The Sixth Volume of the Continuation will appear March 1st; and on the completion of the Work this new portion of the History will be advanced to 6s. each volume.

The publication will be continued each alternate month.

"The first volume, as a specimen of typography, is excellent; it is in size portable without being too small, and of a price which will render it attainable by all classes of readers. The Preliminary Essay is most useful as an introduction to a perfect comprehension of what is to follow: it is written in a tone of impartiality and fairness as to statements and deductions, and with elegance and condensation as to style. The work, to those who have neither time, taste, nor opportunity for consulting more bulky historians, will prove a source of entertainment and instruction."—Times.

THE SPORTSMAN'S ANNUAL.

The Sportsman's Annual is an Imperial Quarto Volume, handsomely bound, and splendidly embellished with large illustrations By EDWIN LANDSEER, R.A.

And other eminent Artists.

The Proprietors of the The Sportsman's Annual believe that, independent of its novelty, the work will possess peculiar claims to public patronage. In the outset, they would explain that it is not a book of the Turf, but of the Drawing-room, or the Library, and, although of undoubted interest to the Sportsman, it is no less intended for the wider sphere of general society. It has been entitled because the subjects of its embellishments all belong to, or are in some manner associated with British Sports. They are, at the same time, all interesting subjects in Natural History; and the manner of their Illustration, in the Literary department of the Book, is by means of Tales, Histories, Legends, Poems, Anecdotes, and Songs. The Proprietors hope that in these it will mingle instruction with entertainment for all classes. In the above respects, it resembles the mode in which the most popular of the Annuals are produced—and only differs from them in its novel character—which identifies it with the taste and feelings of all lovers of Natural History, in its most beautiful and animated forms. A Gentleman, eminent in Literature, has been selected to superintend the work.

PORTSMOUTH, Jan. 22.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Saturday, Jan. 16—The Alban steamer, Mr. Brown, Act. Com., arrived at Spithead from Malta, having previously landed the Mediterranean mail at Plymouth; the Alban left on 17th Dec. V.-Adm. Sir J. Rowley with the Caledonia, Canopus, Edinburgh, Revenge, Thunderer, Barham, Vernon, Orestes, Ceylon, Mastiff, Hind, Pluto, steamer, and Sovereign, transport, were lying at Malta. The Alban has sailed for Woolwich to be paid off; she is quite unfit for service. On her passage in England she experienced very bad weather, and was compelled to throw overboard forty bags of coals. Jan. 19—The Hover and Diligent, transport, arrived from the eastward; the former was paid wages, and has sailed for the West Indies; the latter is to ship stores for Plymouth. The Vestal is looked for hourly. Jan. 20—The Melville having been repaired for hourly reception of men, Capt. P. Douglas commissioned her this day for the flag of V.-Adm. Sir P. Halkett; a considerable number of seamen entered the same day. A detachment of marines, under the command of Capt. H. J. Gribbin, will embark in her. The Bristol is taking in the stores for the Mediterranean fleet which were landed some weeks since from the Maitland; she is expected to sail on Tuesday, calling at Cork for troops. The Seaflower has sailed on a cruise. The Victory has been moved up the harbour, and Lieut. Motley, of the ordinary, placed in charge of her, his former ship, the Benbow, is alongside the dockyard. Ships in port—Britannia, Melville, Excellent, Royal George, Bristol, Diligent.

SHEERNESS, Jan. 22.—(From our own Correspondent.) Saturday, 16—H.M. brig Racer sailed for Portsmouth. Monday, 18—H.M. cutter Speedy, Lieut. Douglas, has sailed for Portsmouth. Messenger, st. v., arrived from Chatham with the Russell, 74, demonstration ship. Tuesday, 19—Messenger towed the Turlar hulk down from Chatham. H.M. packet Pandora arrived. Wednesday, 20—H.M. packet Alert, Lieut.-Com. Norrington, anchored at the Little Nore from Chatham, and will sail in a few days for Falmouth. Thursday, 21—H.M.S. Scout and Alfred went out of the basin. Vestal is tolling in the basin with all despatch. H.M. packet Pandora has been taken into dock; she will be paid off, and her Commander, Lieut. Croke, with officers and men, are to be turned over to the Express, new packet, at Woolwich. An officer and party [illegible] will be sent to bring her to Sheerness to be fitted.

[illegible], 21st Jan.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Capt. Bevis, Agent for packets at this port, has just been appointed to a similar situation at Holyhead, and a Mr. [illegible] to the vacancy here caused by Capt. Bevis' promotion. Mr. Edwards, the Clerk of the establishment, is directed to carry on the duty till the arrival of the new Agent. Two sloops of war, similar in construction to the Columbine, are ordered to be built at Pembroke Yard. It must be gratifying to all admirers of ship-building to find the British navy thus becoming supplied with vessels on the superior plans of Capt. Symonds. The advantages they possess of capacity, stability, and beauty, are desiderata long neglected by constructors. However, now they are become evident, they cannot fail of obtaining that degree of approbation they so justly merit. An order has just come into operation at Pembroke yard, in common with the others, which will tend much to the mental improvement as well as the professional acquirements of the apprentices in those establishments. On Saturdays these youths are unemployed, in consequence of the dockyards being shut up, and are thus liable to be led into habits of idleness. Taking this into consideration, the Lords of the Admiralty, at the recommendation of a gentleman of our arsenal, have directed that a person shall be employed on those days to teach them writing, arithmetic, laying off the principles of construction, &c. From these and other modes of instruction it may naturally be inferred that an improvement must necessarily take place in this class of individuals, a class from which the offices of the dockyards have hitherto been so efficiently filled. An order has been received at the yard up this haven, to admit Mr. Gallowsy, the engineer, a lushbwal three tails in the service of the Pacha of Egypt, to inspect the docks of this establishment, for the purpose of perfecting himself in their construction, as he is about superintending the formation of one at Alexandria. The Pembrokeshire United Service Club annual ball is to take place on the 28th inst., and from the tocsin of preparation already sounding, it is expected to be of a very superior character. All the wealth and respectability of the county will be invited, and nothing seems wanting on the part of the stewards to render the entertainment worthy of the united services.

PLYMOUTH, Jan. 21.—Two Dutch outward-bound ships put into the Sound on Wednesday the 13th, and sailed on Saturday, one having troops on board for the East Indies, the other for the West Indies. The Stag, 46, was taken out of the dock on Friday, and transported to the Sheerhulk and masted the following day. The Donegal, 74, after landing some of her ballast to lighten her, was docked on Monday. The Swallow packet was paid off on Thursday, to be sold out of the service. A gunwharf barge, lying off at her moorings, was sunk in the gale of Tuesday night, having sixteen heavy guns in, belonging to the Royal Adelaide. She was weighed by the dockyard lumps on Wednesday morning, and taken into shoal water, where she will be dry at low tide. She will be pumped out, and consequently rise as the tide flows. The guns will be landed, cleaned, and re-shipped for removal to the Royal Adelaide.—In Hamoaze—Royal Adelaide, Dutch ship, and Lively, lighter.

ASCENSION, Nov. 24.—The Lynx returned a few days ago to refit, having carried away the head of her mainmast. The Rolla arrived on the 24th from the coast of Africa; left the squadron all well. The Charybdis and Britomart had each taken a slave vessel. The garrison of Ascensina were all well.

Admiral Sir Philip Durham, G.C.B. (M.P. for Devizes) is appointed to succeed to the command at this port, when Sir Thomas Williams strikes his flag in April next.—Capt. Deans Dundas will be the Flag Captain. Lieut. Flint (of the Actaeon) Flag Lieutenant, and Mr. Joseph Edye the Secretary to Sir Philip.

The Stakesby has sailed from Deptford, to embark troops for Bermuda.

The Lion, 64, long noted as being the ship bearing Lord Macartney's celebrated embassy to China, and for years sheer hulk at Sheerness, is ordered from Chatham, to be immediately broken up at Deptford. The Amity, at Deptford, after taking in stores at Woolwich, will proceed to Bermuda. Sailed the Lady Catherine Stewart Forbes for Malta, and the Stakesby transport, for Bermuda.

The Strathfieldsaye and William Hamilton sail next week to take male and female convicts to New South Wales.

The Terrible, 74, was taken into dock on Wednesday, at Deptford, to be finally broken up.

We publish the following letter, giving a summary of the late interesting trial between the Barham and Vernon; because, written by an eye witness, it appears to us more impartial than the other accounts we have received, and, knowing the writer, we can vouch for the accuracy of what he has advanced:—"In my last I informed you that we appeared off this port (Malta) on the 5th Dec., and, having communicated with the Admiral and acquainted him that, owing to the light and variable winds, no decisive result had been obtained between the rival ships, we were ordered to proceed to our cruising ground again and look for a wind. This we accordingly did, and returned to port yesterday, the two ships having had set trials half-a-dozen times, and the result is as follows:—that in light winds, going free, the Barham has undoubtedly the advantage; by the wind, in light winds, they are about equal, the Vernon gaining in weathering what the Barham gains in fore-reaching; but, in strong breezes, the Barham has [illegible] chance whatever, as the other ship can out-carry and b[illegible] ber. All this, you will perceive, is quite contrary to [illegible] suppositions your newspaper folks in England have, in th[illegible] great wisdom, indulged in, but such is the fact. Again[illegible] head sea, too, the Vernon did not appear to labour, wh[illegible] it was evident the Barham was much distressed and pitch[illegible] heavily; and the difference of heel is very great. In fo[illegible] it would be impossible to press the Vernon down beyo[illegible] sia, or, at most, seven degrees, at which inclination [illegible] could point her guns horizontally; whereas the Barh[illegible] has heeled, during this cruise, eight degrees whilst carryi[illegible] top gallant sails, and, had it blown harder, her inclinat[illegible] would have been greater than the ports would admit [illegible] pointing her guns; nevertheless, she is a very fine ship, [illegible] was most ably handled, her only fault being, next to [illegible] want of stability which I have just pointed out, that she [illegible] a very leewardly ship, notwithstanding that she has two [illegible] inches of false keel more than when a line-of-battle sh[illegible] As you may suppose, these trials have not altered the o[illegible] nion of the fleet as to the Vernon, which ship every [illegible] admits to be the completest man-of-war that ever was [illegible] and there are many ready to back her again against [illegible] Barham, or any other ship in the world, and allege t[illegible] she laboured under disadvantages in the late trials. [illegible] must be admitted that she did not perform so well as wh[illegible] she first joined, which was evident by her not beating u[illegible] the same degree. She has been longer out of dock t[illegible] Barham, and although her trim is shown to be eight [illegible] inches by the stern, and her masts are stepped far that t[illegible] on this occasion she was not more than six inches by [illegible] stern, having taken in sixty or seventy tons of coals [illegible] wards just before sailing. The Barham has also more [illegible] I should think full four feet in the counters, and her m[illegible] are taunter by ten or a dozen feet, although she is [illegible] lightest ship, all which must tell particularly in light wi[illegible] If it were the question, in building large frigates, wh[illegible] mould to select, there would not be two opinions, and [illegible] Barham's would willingly change ships. Perhaps, in [illegible] other cruise, things might be altogether altered. You [illegible] heard how we (Revenge) were constantly beaten by [illegible] nopus and Thunderer, but, on our passage down, [illegible] former ship had no chance with us. I am sure that [illegible] report which goes to-morrow by the Alban will be a [illegible] one, and, take my word for it, it will be favourable to [illegible] Vernon, which ship, I repeat, is the finest in the wo[illegible] and I think my experience gives me a fair title to deliva[illegible] opinion on these matters."

We have seen letters dated on board the Star, Dec. [illegible] in lat. 27. N., long. 32. W., at which time she was ma[illegible] for Antigua under a jury fore-mast. The weather [illegible] encountered from the 20th to the 24th was very severe, [illegible] on the latter day, the gale had become a hurricane at [illegible] with a tremendous sea, and during one of the gusts the [illegible] sel was laid on her beam ends and every thing washed a[illegible] As reported in our last, the Commander, Lieut. Binney, [illegible] eleven men were drowned, the Master, Mr. Brown, [illegible] the only one of those on deck who regained the vess[illegible] clinging to the wreck. Some vessels which were in [illegible] pony just before the melancholy occurrence are supposed [illegible] have foundered, as they were seen dismasted. The w[illegible] of one of the letters before us congratulates himself th[illegible] was not in any of the old packets, which must have [illegible] swamped long before, and could not have lived throug[illegible] gales. He also describes the affecting scene of the [illegible] vivors being assembled at eight o'clock in order up [illegible] thanks to Providence for their great deliverance, their h[illegible] outbursting in thanks for their own safety, whilst m[illegible] breaking with grief for the melancholy fate of their u[illegible] tunate shipmates. This, and the perilous situation [illegible] were in, considered, would be a fair subject for the pai[illegible] The vessel had suffered nothing in her hull beyond the [illegible] of her bulwarks, and they were in hopes to reach Ant[illegible] without further accident. The names of the unfort[illegible] sufferers, in addition to the Commander, are as follow[illegible] W. Smith, W. Bant, E. Roberts, W. Clarke, G. Alli[illegible] Rose, N. M'Donald, S. Thomas, and W. Manning.

A rendezvous has been opened at Portsmouth for v[illegible] lear seamen for the Alert, a new packet brig, just com[illegible] aloned at Sheerness, by Lieut. C. Norrington. One dr[illegible] has already proceeded in that vessel.

Vestal, 26, Capt. Jones, and Racer, 16, Com. [illegible] will touch at Spithead in a few days from Sheerness [illegible] paid wages, and proceed to W. Indies.

On Thursday se'nnight, 71 tubs of spirits, and o[illegible] were seized at the Sallyport by the tide-surveyor of t[illegible] mouth; none of the crew were found; they were doo[illegible] gone to call assistance to smuggle off the liquor. O[illegible] same morning, 35 tubs of spirits were crept up o[illegible] Horse Sand by the Ferret, Custom-house cutter; and [illegible] al others have drifted on South Sea Beach, having [illegible] broken up by the late severe gales. About 100 tub[illegible] been picked up in Southampton Water.

The Erebus and Terror, which were fitted to tak[illegible] in the expedition for the relief of the ice-bound wh[illegible] have been recalled, the whole of the vessels to which [illegible] were to direct their situation having happily got cl[illegible] the ice. The Cove, under the command of Capt. Ro[illegible] rosecute the brave ettempt tu efford relief to those nn the west shore, which are not likely to get free.

The newly-inaented concrete, with which the new wharf at Woolwich dock-yard is covered, has proved not adequate to its intended purpose; it allows the water to get through, and, in consequence, the large new dry dock cannot be kept free of water.

The remeins of the late lamented Lord Vernon were interred on Saturday last at Sudbury Hall. The Harlequin yacht conveyed the body from Falmouth to Bristol, whence it was conveyed by canal to Burton-on-Trent, attended by Lieut. Welsh, R.N., and others, his lordship's old and attached friends, with a few servants. The shops in Ryde generally had their windows closed, in respect for the memory of the deceased.

Royal Naval Charitable Society.—The ordinary quatterly meeting of this society was held last week at the Thatched House Tavern, St. James's-street.—Captain E. Sibley, R.N., in the chair.—His Majesty's annual donation of 50*l.* was announced, as also one of 50*l.* from the Dowager Lady Anson. Seventy-nine cases were presented to the notice of the members, out of whom seventy-three were relieved, for which the sum of 496*l.* was awarded. The report expressed a regret in the diminution of the funds, owing to the death of several of its most liberal supporters; and the committee expressed a hope that their naval brethren would not withhold their aid to support a charity which held out to the widows and orphans of officers a solace in the time of need. The meeting adjourned to the second Monday in April.

Capt. Carroll, R.N., C.B., has been appointed Superintendent of the Police Force at Bath, at a salary of 200*l.* a year. His competitors were Capt. Marsh, Lieut. Schomberg, R.N., and Mr. Passmore.

The Alban has proceeded to Woolwich to be paid off, for she is in every respect inferior to any other steam-vessel employed in his Majesty's service, and quite unworthy to bear a pennant. She will most probably be sold. It is found that vessels with the largest engines do not perform the most work. Thus the Tartarus has done more work than the Spitfire, and made her voyages in less time, with a saving of more than 500 tons of coals, since she has been on the packet service.

Royal Marines.—There is at this moment a private who has sold his "kit" no less than ten times within three months, thus having defrauded the government of between 14*l.* and 16*l.*

That renowned ship, the Victory, 104, late flag ship at Portsmouth, is ordered to be dismantled, and placed in ordinary, and not to be broken up, as reported. This would be very displeasing to the navy and country, from the many glorious associations connected with her. It is thought she will eventually bear the pennant of the Commanding Officer of the ships in ordinary.—Salisbury Herald.

Tartarus steam-vessel, Lieut. H. James, has sailed for Falmouth from Woolwich, and takes out the February mail for the Mediterranean.

Lieut. Wheeler, R.N., Superintendant of the Formby lighthouse, who volunteered in the life-boat to go and assist the merchant schooner Dryades, was unfortunately upset and drowned, with four of the life-boat's crew; the rest of the crew (three men) were saved and restored. The crew of the Dryades landed safely at Southport, in their own boat. Lieut. W. was a humane and excellent officer, deeply regretted.

The Tartar, from Chatham, to be again a receiving hulk at Shearness, and the Nymphe to be fitted as such for Chatham.

An Admiralty order is issued that the apprentices of shipwrights shall, in future, be employed on Saturdays learning the useful art of drawing, thereby uniting the practice and theory of their profession, and enabling them (if ever such should be requisite) to be employed as officers in the royal dockyards, &c.

The Firefly steam-vessel requiring extensive repairs, has been ordered to be paid off at Woolwich.

Rear-Adm. the Hon. T. B. Capel was at Trincomalee on the 9th Sept. The Rattlesnake had arrived from England on the 10th Aug., and on the 31st had sailed for Bombay. The Victor had arrived from England on the 11th Aug., and was to go Penang, to assist Com. Barrow, of the Rose, in the suppression of piracy. The Wolf was to sail on the 10th Sept. to the Mauritius, with despatches for Capt. Cheds, of the Andromache.

Aplin, safe at Barbadoes in the latter end of Nov., and the same vessel arrived from that destination to Cork on Wednesday week, with the first division of the Royals. Major-Gen. Sir E. Blakeney arrived at Drogheda on Thursday week, and was received by Col. Basden, C.B. The General inspected the depot, and was highly pleased at their appearance and performance.

Royal Artillery.—On Friday night a sentry, posted near the military canal at the eastern extremity of the Arsenal Ground, close to which there are a few steps and a landing place under his charge, was requested by an individual in a small boat to allow him to land, and he would reward him, but from an order lately issued, "that no person should be allowed to land after sunset (not excepting officers in the service), the man peremptorily refused, after repeated solicitation and larger promises, desiring the person in the boat to "keep off, as his piece was loaded with ball, and he had orders to fire." The individual, finding entreaty in vain, upon receiving the reply exclaimed, "then I'll have a shot at you," and actually fired at the man, the bullet passing through the folds of the soldier's great coat, who promptly returned the fire, which alarmed the main guard, which immediately proceeded to the spot, but the boat, under cover of the night, rowed away, and effected its escape. A court of inquiry has been held to investigate this extraordinary affair, which still remains a mystery, but the man, who is an old and respected soldier, was highly praised for his steady alacrity and honest conduct, and it is expected, from the recommendations he has received, he will, very justly, be promoted. Capt. Thorndike, Corporal Forrest and four gunners, have embarked in a merchant steamer for Dublin, they left the arsenal on Sunday morning, Capt. Thorndike to replace Capt. Molesworth, who has retired on half-pay; so the report of his joining on leave is an error. Surgeon Fogo has been ordered to examine the Ordnance Pensioners at the hospital at Woolwich those residing at the district being summoned to attend there.

Capt. Adams, late Paymaster 71st, has been appointed Paymaster of the Dublin recruiting district, v. Charles Grimes, Esq., removed to the London recruiting district, in succession to Paymaster Jellicoe, who has retired.

We have just heard of the death, at Edinburgh, of Col. Alexander Mair, Deputy-Governor of St. George.—Courier. (A memoir next week.)

The Board of Ordnance have issued an order that private letters shall not be transmitted either to or from officers with the regimental returns, which has been hitherto the practice. The Board is only acting in accordance with instructions from the Horse Guards, which affects all regts. of the line. These orders place a barrier between relatives in the service of the country in foreign climes who can ill afford to avail the post-office revenue by their being mulcted of a portion of that scanty pittance allowed by "the first government in Europe," to support the appearance of the officer and gentleman.

General Lord Hill's first levee for the season was held at the Horse Guards on Thursday morning. There were present—General Sir F. Wetherall, Lieut.-Gen. Vincent, Lieut.-Gen. Bruce, Lieut.-Gen. ### THE FOREIGN PACKET QUESTION.

SIR,—It was not my intention to have asked any further space in your columns for my remarks on the subject of placing packets in Ireland; but having just seen a letter from Captain Manderson, in your last number, I must beg to say a few words more, in reply to his observations. That Captain Manderson has, zealously maintained, for the last thirty years and more, the superiority of Falmouth over every other port in England, he now admits; but he never before, he says, attempted to contrast it with any port in Ireland for the Packet establishment. Thus, he tacitly acknowledges, at least in the first part of his letter, that there may be found a harbour in the Sister Island better adapted for these vessels than even the one of his unceasing and untired eulogies! The facts which I have already stated on this subject will, I hope and believe, confirm to every disinterested person that, take the average of a year, the mails will be transmitted considerably quicker every voyage, including the route from London, from a port on the south-west of Ireland than from any one in England or Wales; and all I would ask is that this gallant officer should start in a packet from FALMOUTH, with a strong gale at any point between S.W. and N.W., at the same hour that I would start in one of a precisely similar class from BERNHAVEN, and I will stake all I possess that I would arrive at Rio Janeiro, at Barbadoes, at Jamaica, at New York, or at Halifax, many days before him. It would be too tedious at this moment to refute all the points last alluded to by Captain Manderson, but I am positive I could do this fully and satisfactorily to any three, or ten times three, impartial and experienced Naval Officers.

In concluding my remarks on this question for the period, if not for ever, I again fearlessly repeat that a packet from IRELAND, with a strong N.W. by W. gale, would be running from eight to ten knots in a direct course on her voyage, when one from Falmouth could not possibly weather Ushant with the same wind.

A POST CAPTAIN.

SIR,—With an eye to passing events it is not possible that I should overlook the advantages that must accrue to all parties, as well as to the nation at large, by establishing the foreign packet station on the south-west of Ireland. The arguments in its favour which have appeared of late in your impartial journal, are to me of the most convincing nature, and, indeed, if I may judge from the perfectly inefficient rejoinders, they prove so too to those individuals who, either from interested or other sinister motives, attempt writing down the arrangement. I fully coincide with your correspondent who says landsmen would suffer the inconvenience of any number of embarkations to ensure as much "land carriage" as possible, which is far preferable to "the thousand ills to which sea-sickness is heir." Oh yes! who that have felt this heart-rending torment, would not think as I do? The entirely relaxed state of every muscular fibre, save those of the abdominal, intercostal, and others connected with the act of vomiting—the unnerved and listless, I had well nigh said lifeless, condition of the whole frame—the depression of the vital powers—confusion of the sensorium, and the awful degree of retching and nausea attending the malady, must lead "one and all," as the Cornish man says, to extol with me that mode of conveyance which most militates against the production of such a disease. When once this subject is set at rest by the "powers above," they will direct a larger description of packet to ply between Milford Haven and Waterford, a passage comparatively diminutive as regards getting into the Western Ocean. Already a new line of road is forming to Hobb's Point, in the former port, where a commodious pier, floating dock, store-houses, inn, &c., have been constructed; and from Waterford to Valentia, the proposed new station, the highway will be speedily improved, and thus to reach the spot of embarkation from any part of the United Kingdom a very facility will be afforded. Once there, think, Sir, how easily we are wafted on our voyage to the foreign ports, and think, too, how greatly also decreased the difficulties experienced by the homeward bound, by long continued easterly winds on returning to "England, home, and beauty."

While the packet, as at present, is beating up to Falmouth under such circumstances, despatches are in lieu passengers safely lodged by their own firesides, and perhaps commercial or diplomatic replies of the utmost consequence wafted half-way across the Atlantic. This is no chimerical assertion or hypothetical reasoning. No! such are truly the facts, and such the dear bought experience of many a weary voyager after crossing the boundless "waste of waters." Government are too well aware of those advantages not to avail themselves of their operation, "a consummation devoutly to be wished," notwithstanding the disinterested suggestions of Capt. Manderson.

6th Jan., 1836.

SIR,—Before I proceed to observe what a packet may and ought to do, when sailing from Falmouth with a strong N.W. by W. wind, I must notice an error in the Post Captain's calculation, which may be either typographical or overlooked by him.

He supposes a packet from S.W. of Ireland having run 10 knots, and made good a S.S.W. course, would be in lat. 46 deg. 30 min., long. 14 deg. A vessel from the latitude of Cape Clear must make 295 miles southing, and from Bearhaven 310, before she could be in this latitude. Having run 240 miles from the latter, making good a S.S.W. course, would be in lat. 47 deg. 59 min., long. 13 deg. 19 min. I perceive the longitude is corrected in the next Gazette.

A packet sails from Falmouth with a strong N.W. by W. wind, the wind blowing off the land, and being obliged at first to run points free, in two hours she may be in lat. 49 deg. 50 min., long. 5 deg. 16 min., Ushant bearing S. ½ E. 27 leagues. The Post Captain has supposed that one from Ireland under double reefed topsails and courses would make good a S.S.W. course at 5 knots an hour; can any reason be shown why one from Falmouth may not do the same? But suppose she chooses to sail a point from the wind to go 6½ knots an hour, making a S. by W. ½ W. course, making less lee way than if close upon the wind, in 16 hours from sailing she would be 8 leagues W. of Ushant, and in 24 hours in lat. 47 deg. 5 min., long. 6 deg. 9 min. If her course had been S.S.W. good at 5 knots, in 24 hours she would have run 110 miles, and be in lat. 46 deg. 8 min., long. 6 deg. 21 min. passing to the west of Ushant eleven leagues.

The packet now sails from Ireland, say Brayhead, on the Island of Valentia, the Post Captain says in 66 hours she will be in lat. 46 deg. 30 min., long. 14 deg. The Falmouth packet may also be allowed to make good a S.S.W. course, 5 knots an hour, in that period of time, from her lat. and long. specified when the Irish packet sailed with the same mail, she would be in lat. 42 deg., long. 9 deg. 6 min.

It is improbable that a strong N.W. by W. wind would continue so long without veering more northerly, or westerly southward, and it is more than probable that a vessel drawing so near to the south coast of Spain as the Falmouth packet, would now have the wind more northerly, and might have been making good a S.W. course, going free 8 knots an hour.

I may now be allowed to make a supposition, far more probable than that the results of which have been discussed. After the wind has blown strong for 24 hours it begins to falter when the Irish packet is sailing, and she and that from Falmouth make 10 miles S. without altering their longitude, the wind springs up at S.W., and gradually freshens to a stiff breeze, the Irish is in lat. 51 deg. 37 min., long. 10 deg. 19 min., the Falmouth 46 deg. 55 min., long. 6 deg. 9 min.; the latter comes on the larboard tack, the former on the starboard, each making a point of lee way, the Irish will then make her course good S.E. by E., the Falmouth W. by N.; if standing on for 24 hours, going 6 knots, the latter would be in lat. 47 deg. 18 min., long. 8 deg., the former lat. 50 deg. 30 min., long. 7 deg. 39 min. Is there anything unreasonable in this supposition? or that is not as likely to happen as any that can be made? I ask the advocates for the S.Ws of Ireland, if it come on to blow from that quarter soon after sailing on the starboard tack, exposed to all the roll of the ocean, making two or three points leeway, where is a vessel to go? By keeping two points from the wind, she may indeed get on in S.E. quarter, E.S.E., or E. by S., according to the point the wind blows from in the S.W. quarter.

The Post Captain says that "very many packets have again and again been forced to bear up and return to Falmouth." That some have, there can be no doubt, but the "very many again and again," certainly requires a correct list of names and circumstances to prove that any vessel from the S.W. coast of Ireland, would not also have been driven back. There is no wind that can drive a vessel from Falmouth back, can prevent her regaining the safe port she left; can it be so said of those of the S.W. of Ireland?

But, Sir, to favour the S.W. of Ireland, we have hed ppsed a powerful steamer at Milford, tug steamers in ntry Bay, fine mail coach and rail-roads, and every faci- thet pertiellty can imagine. Give Falmouth only e tug mer, the wind is S.S.W., a good top-gallent breeze: on hegioeing of the ebb tide ehe takes an outward bound ket in tow, which wents only en offing to proceed on her age; let her be four houre in effecting this (the packet ix hours might do it without aid), and when 3 or 4 ee S. of the Lizard, ehe ie cast off, and makes good e by S. course; going only 5 knots, in 20 hours she will e run 100 miles from lat. 49 deg. 50 min., and be then lat. 49 deg. 31 min., long. 7 deg. 25 min., 11 leagues V. ¼ W. from St. Agnes, Scilly; e packet now sails from lthaven, with the eame day'e mail as on board the former, the etarboerd teck, her true couree will be E. by S., let m stand on for 20 hours, heving run 100 miles, the Irieh l be in lat. 51 deg. 21 min., lnng. 7 deg. 22 min., the mouth in lat. 49 deg. 12 min., lung. 9 deg. 57 min., leaguee S. Westerly of Bearhaven, and 58 leaguee W. by S. ½ W. of the packet eailed theare. Every igator must know whet a difference it will make in the ation of two vessels as respects their longitude, one ning E. by S. 100 miles, the other W. by S. the samo ance, especially in high latitudes. Is there anything robable in the case auppoeed? It may be alleged, Bearhoven would not stand so long on the starboerd ; let her put about when she thinks proper, the Falmouth 30 miles south of her parallel of latitude, and what esn uppoeed to deprive her of the advantegeous position? If es disable one, so mey they the other; this is an adven- ue circumstance with which plain facts, thet ought to de the judgment, have nothing to do.

t has been shown that with a etrong N.W. by W. wind it a packet from Falmouth may, and ought to do; thst eed of being left behind four days' sailing by one from S.W. of Ireland, that cannot last for 24 hours, or more. r her, ehe must take the lead, and, taking the chance of winds, will doubtlese keep it. Allowing them to sail at aame time, if one be 190 miles west of Falmouth, the er is 100 milee south of it; it has been shown if southerly de bring them on different tacks, bow soon the differeuce ungitude would run off the reel.

will hardly observe that with the wind st W.N.W. a Falmouth can steer S.W., and if she make S. by W. couree, will pase 8 leagues west of ent, and be there when the Irish packet is sailing. th the wind at W. by N., she will fetch Ushant, and ding for some hours N.N.W. may weather it on the l tack.

faving observed what may be done from Falmouth with S.W. wind, I need not go to south or eastward, more than nooge over the compass in that quarter to east, thence to end to W. by N. It would be needlese to make suppo- ns without end; it must be evident to every impartial d, that packets from Falmouth, having an advantage of (I heve taken it only at 24 hours, but, in the present e of things, it may be nearer 40 hours), with any wind will enable them to get south-westward, will, at the ol the time specified, be in a situation preferable to the W. of Ireland for making the south of Europe, the West ies, South America, or even New York. Twenty-six ts of the compass are in favour of Falmouth, if S.W. s are unfavourable, do not such seal up the ports on the W. of Ireland?

PROMOTION IN THE INDIAN ARMY.

Sir,—It cannot be denied that, in devising a radical cure the present extensive evil of protracted promotion, there many and serious difficulties to contend with; in fact, very constitution of the Indian Army of itself renders the lication of permanent aid, as regards the acceleration of motion, almost impracticable, the sources of which, in present day, must be chiefly sought for in the sure effects India's noxious and debilitating climate, whilst those y can expect to arrive at advanced rank and independ- e whose constitutions are so unassailable as to continue years proof against its ruinous attacks. In fact, pro- ion becomes a matter of mere wear and tear, whilst even se who are so fortunate as to reach the wished-for goal, from their then advanced ages and deserved consti- oos, possess but faint hopes of enjoying the luxuries ch their tardily acquired resources command!

The well established truth that of every hundred Cadets o embark for the Indian Service five only, on the ave- e, return to England to claim the pensions of their k, is of itself a most convincing proof of the present ective state of promotion in the Indian Army!

Indeed, so cheerless do the prospects of Cadets appear, t it is surprising so much value is attributed to the ap- intment; few, soon would suppose, would willingly enter h a Service if any other equally respectable mode could resorted to to obtain a provision; but there are some, haps, who court perpetual expatriation, or who probably fer an atmospheric heat of 90 or 100 degs. to the freezing ate of their native land! That military men, from the y nature of their profession, must expect to undergo fre- quent hardships, dangers, and privations, no one for a mo- ment will dispute; and it is but common justice to assert that no men ever possessed a more zealous and anxious de- sire to court those difficulties, whenever their country'e weel has required their services, than the officers of the Indian Army.

With regard to Retiring Funds, they have been the perpetual theme in India for the last thirty years, whilst every plan suggested for their formation, however plausible in its details and attractive in its promised advantages, has invariably failed! and why? because so long as regimental rank continues, no system can be discovered or devised, even by the most able calculator, to secure effectually full and equal advantages to all ranks according to the pecuniary sacrifices which they are called upon respectively to make, and at the same time prevent supersession, unless retiring pensions are restricted to Lieutenant-Colonels and Senior Majors; but it must be evident that, even in that case, the few extra Field Officers who would accept the proffered boon, would yield but a solitary advantage to the junior grades!

The injurious effects which have been the conse- quence of erroneous calculations with regard to other Funds instituted in India, especially the first Military Widows' Fund, ought at least to offer a lesson to all future projectors of Military Retiring Funds! The only feasible plan for a Military Retiring Institution would be to new model the Army, allowing officers to rise to Captains only regi- mentally, and from that rank, in one general gradation list, to that of Major, Lieut.-Colonel, and Colonel, taking the officers as they now stand in regimental succession. Such a measure, however, is not likely to receive the concurrence either of the Army at large, or of the Court of Directors; officers who have been already superseded wish to regain their original standing, whilst those who have received the benefits of such supersession, would not be disposed to forego the advantage. But if such a measure could be resorted to, and all officers below the rank of Colonel com- pelled to subscribe, there cannot be a doubt but that, with the assistance of a handsome annual donation from the Company, ample means would be provided to pension off sufficient of each rank annually, going down to the Senior Lieutenants, as would be the means of materially accele- rating promotion and preventing supersession, except in the rank of subaltern. With regard to pensioning off Colonels of regiments, no subscription, however liberal, which offi- cers could conveniently spare, especially the junior ranks (with reference to the decreased state of allowances), would ever prove sufficient to offer adequate inducements to Colonels, in receipt of off-reckonings, to retire and forego such great advantages which are now amply secured to them, for the sake of an additional three or four hundred pounds per annum, dependant on the success only of an ex- perimental institution. Besides, the present allowances of a Colonel are sufficient, provided they could be attained at an earlier period of servitude, before age and disease ren- dered the possession of them, in a great degree, nugatory—

Perhaps the Court of Directors might be induced, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, to take the funds arising from a general monthly subscription by their offi- cers under their own immediate superintendance, and con- sent to grant them an addition to the present rate of re- tiring pensions, at the same time decreasing the present excessive periods counting them to receive them to such an extent as their wisdom and justice might dictate.

The next mode of administering appropriate relief would be by adding a second Major and two Captains to each regiment in the Service, and at the same time decreasing proportionately the number of Lieutenants and Ensigns, in order to provide for the increased expense; this measure would rather improve than otherwise the efficacy of corps, and would render immediate and efficient relief to many deserving officers, as well as accelerate promotion in future; and allowing that Captains would then be longer in reach- ing the rank of Major, yet the superior allowances which they would in the meanwhile receive, would compensate for their increased periods of service in that rank. Certainly one great cause of such slow promotion having arisen among the Ensigns and Junior Lieutenants was the impo- litic measure some years since resorted to of making two Lieutenants to each regiment supernumerary; another, cer- tainly no less injurious and inconsiderate measure of the Court, was their sending out, many years since, a far greater supply of Cadets than there were vacancies for, or that the exigencies of the Service required, by which some of them remained from three to five years in the country before they even attained the rank of Ensign! Such an unwise and unjust measure we should hope will not again be repeated.

If the boon which report says the Directors are preparing for the Indian Army consists only of a regulation permitting officers who have served twenty years to retire on the full pay of Captain, those of twenty-five years on the pay of Major, and so on, I apprehend that such a slight alteration in the periods of service must inevitably fail of producing any substantial relief. Some few officers, indeed, who have long been looking in vain for promotion, and whose advanced ages preclude them from aspiring to the attain- ment of much higher rank than what they already possess, may probably accept the proffered alternative. If, how- ever, the Court would advance somewhat further in their liberal views, and allow one furlough to be deducted from the periods of service referred to, then indeed might we justly hope that the grand desideratum would in a great de- gree be accomplished, and that the great would be most acceptable; whilst that general and deeply-rooted discon- tent which at present unfortunately pervades the breasts of their officers would be for ever eradicated, and a lasting feeling of gratitude would assume its place.

The present custom of purchasing officers out, in parti- cular regiments, operates in a very prejudicial manner to- wards those corps whose officers, from various causes, may not possess the means of offering sufficient inducement to those above them to retire. There is another point on which I presume to offer an opinion, viz. officers holding the brevet rank of Captain although only Lieutenants in their respective regiments; some of these officers have been sub- alterns for from fifteen to eighteen, and even twenty years. Here, however, the Court of Directors surely have a remedy in their own hands; for if they cannot accelerate their pro- motion, they can at least increase their means of enjoying greater comforts than they at present can command. How easy would it be for the Directors to grant to those deserv- ing officers, who have served them long and faithfully with- out commensurate remuneration, the same pay and allow- ances as Captain Lieutenants used to receive before the abolition of that rank; such a beneficial change would reconcile them to their blighted prospects and at the same time permit them to support that appearance which the in- creased rank renders necessary, and which common policy dictates, when the native troops and natives in general ir- rationally judge of the European's respectability by his means of supporting his rank in society! This boon might also be conceded without occasioning the State any great addi- tional expense, especially in comparison with the benefit conferred; besides, should any remedy be hereafter dis- covered to accelerate promotion, such additional burthen on the Company's finances would gradually cease as the brevet Captains would be gradually absorbed! officers so situated, with reference to their contracted allowances, and the slight prospect of promotion at present in view, can cherish but very faint hopes of ever retiring to their native country with competencies sufficient to reward them for the toils they have experienced and the injured state of their constitutions, unless immediate aid be applied; then surely this would be a fine opportunity for the Court of Directors to exercise their wonted liberality!

ON THE OATHS REQUIRED OF OFFICERS ON HALF PAY.

Sir,—Admiring the principle upon which your Gazette is conducted, and being a constant subscriber, I beg, with your permission, through it, to answer Philotheorus's letter in your last number, and to inform him that he is in error when he states, that "from the prince to the peasant are liable, and must take their oath to stamp their statements with the appearance of truth, before they can be believed;" or, "that there is not a branch, however honourably esteemed, that legally is believed on his mere ipse dixit." He ap- pears not to be informed, that when an officer in the army loses his baggage, either by being taken by the enemy, by shipwreck, or otherwise, all he has to do is, to declare upon his honour that he has lost property to such an amount either by the enemy or otherwise, and the amount is immediately paid to him. Why, sir, I would ask, should one set of individuals be preferred to the other set (both wishing to be considered as gentlemen)? If one party are admitted upon their honour, the other have a right also; for Philotheorus says they are truly "gallant and respected." It appears also that Philotheorus loses sight of that the character of an officer is the only property he can constitutionally hold to substantiate his claims to, and possession of, the commission he may hold. Neither noble birth nor money has any right to be in the scale when character is considered, although, if the officer possesses either, or both, more is expected of him; for it is written, "of him that hath much, much shall be required;" con- sequently, every officer his Majesty may have is supposed to be a gentleman; if he is not he should no longer hold his commission. If the honour of one gentleman is admitted, let the honour of all, whether the coats they wear be red or blue. It would be better for the service if the honour of officers was brought more into practice.

With respect to the latter part of his letter, where he says that it is necessary to "confirm our assertions with an oath before one of his Majesty's justices of the peace, not of low esteem." How was it, and how can Philotheorus account for it, on the 31st of December, 1835, when I took my declaration in one of the public offices of this metro- polis, to be attested before one of his Majesty's justices of the peace, that when I gave it to the police officer for that purpose, he took it in, and desired me to wait in the clerk's office, when he brought it out to me, attested by the justice of the peece ne duty. I never saw the justice of the peace, nor he me. Then, what was the use of my going to the office. I might as well have sent it. This is a direct proof that there was not any necessity for my going. I have already said that directly an officer does anything contrary to the character of a gentleman, he forfeits all claim to his commission; therefore his Majesty's Government have the remedy in their own hands, if an officer makes a false declaration, why might I not as well on the 31st of December last have made my declaration before my agent (unto whom I delivered it) as before a police officer. I told my agent this circumstance when I delivered to him the declaration: therefore, Sir, I contend that the Officers of his Majesty's Navy have a right to be believed on their word of honour.

I shall at all times be happy to hear of Philotheorus if he will in future couch his letters a little more good-naturedly, particularly when he writes about "these individuals" again, for mildness is always considered as a pleasing feature of a noble man.

SIR,—The remarks of your liberal correspondent Philotheorus will, I hope, catch the eye of your distinguished contributor Tristram, in order that they may meet the animadversions they so well deserve. I have not the ability to attempt this, nor I would cheerfully undertake it; I will, however, briefly ask Philotheorus if every workman that goes to receive his wages swears that it is his due, and that he has conformed to the rules which entitle him to this remuneration? The officer, then, stands in the same relative situation precisely. If the former wilfully makes an unjust claim, he is instantly dismissed; so, if an officer should forget himself so far as to declare that which was untrue, he should at once be cashiered from his Majesty's Service FOR EVER. The honour of an officer, Sir, ought to be regarded as sacredly as his oath; for if he violates the one, the same disgrace and infamy should and will attend him as if he had violated the other. Thus, as the power of immediate punishment is in the hands of the Government, and as the difficulties connected with the still continued system of declarations before a Magistrate are great in very many officers, I sincerely hope that, in spite of Philotheorus's liberality, an officer's declaration upon his HONOUR will speedily be regarded as if it had been made upon his OATH.

DISTRIBUTION OF PRIZE MONEY.

SIR,—In my former letter on the subject of the distribution of Prize Money, I gave it as my opinion that the Field Officers of the Royal Marines have just cause to complain of the partiality of the present regulation, which places them only in the same class in the prize lists with officers of an inferior grade. I am not disposed to deny or underrate the heavy responsibility, and risk of pecuniary loss which is thrown on Captains of ships of war, by their liability to be charged demurrage, and the expenses consequent upon the detention of neutral, or other vessels, which are not afterwards, by the Courts of Law, declared to be prizes; and I can see no good reason why this risk should not be shared equally by the Naval and Marine Officer: but, should those by whom the Royal Navy is governed find such an arrangement objectionable, there would be but little difficulty in separating such property as obviously belonged to the enemy from that of a doubtful character, and allowing all of the same rank to share equally as the former, while we gave the larger share of the latter to those on whose responsibility it was detained. Field Officers of Royal Marines are only embarked in Flag Ships, and it is not probable that they will, in time of war, be found for a continuance serving in ships detached from the fleet. The prize-money made by those in the fleet by the capture of occasional merchant ships is divided among so many, that the share of each individual is seldom of large amount, their best hope of enriching themselves arises from the capture of the enemy's ships of war, prisoners and towns, or from Parliamentary grants, given as a reward for services performed; and in these cases that knowledge of international law so necessary to a Naval Officer is not called into action; I therefore trust you will concur with me in thinking that we commit an act of great injustice towards the members of a distinguished corps, when we deprive them of advantages enjoyed by other Officers of equal rank in the service, in cases where hard fighting, or the gratitude of the nation, has given us an opportunity of bestowing some reward on the defenders of their country. If this subject be fairly considered it will be found that few cases occur of captures being made, where any possible risk is encountered by those in command, except by the detention of vessels or property nominally belonging to neutral nations, smugglers, pirates, and slavers; therefore, to these cases alone should that regulation in future apply which gives to Captains in command of ships of war so marked, no advantage; and I think I am justified in claiming for the Field Officer, where no necessity for caution exists, a fair participation with the Naval Captain in all the advantages resulting from their joint exertions.

The general use of steam vessels in maritime warfare will probably cause great alteration in the mode of carrying on future operations, and the facility and rapidity with which troops may be transported by sea will cause frequent descents to be made on the coast of the enemy. Should the Government determine to employ Marines on services in suitable to their nature, Commanding officers of talent and energy will be invaluable; but however devoted to the service, or attached to their profession, Field Officers of Marines who possess these necessary qualifications may be, it is not to be expected that they will continue voluntarily, and without discontent, to expose themselves to privations and dangers for which they are so ill requited; and such of the other officers of this corps as may have in early life given promise of future eminence in a profession so varied as that of our Marine service, will, on attaining the rank of Captain, avail themselves of the good characters they enjoy to obtain staff appointments, or retirements, and thus quit that service which has nothing further to offer them worthy of acceptance.

PROMOTION IN THE INDIAN ARMY.

SIR,—When I had the honour of being made a Bengal Cadet, near 20 years ago, promotion was not particularly rapid in the Indian army. Some Cornets, if I recollect rightly, could not be brevetted (poor devils!) because they were Cornets; and on one of our Shiker parties, not many miles from Aurungabad, I remember a squib passing round after tiffin by one of those wreckless Subs who take small thought for the morrow. I fancied at the time it might have been a hit at my brevet, or perhaps levelled at my whiskers, where their young eyes probably detected intruders of a virtuous cast; it ran as follows:—

"When all are grey who are not bald
In reaching a Majority,
We scarce need tell our youthful friends
We rise by seniority."

Time passed, we lived in hope, and the Mahrattas and Pindarries amused us. The Burmese War followed, caused great excitement, and some promotion from loss of life among the gallant fellows who went full of hope, of zeal, and loyalty, to Rangoon and Arracan. Peace being restored, it was found expedient to reduce regiments two troops or companies each, and Supernumeraries were abundant. The most thoughtless then found there was not much reliance to be placed on what the morrow would do for them, and all were anxious to institute a retiring fund, to augment their annuities at the end of their exile; but no mode was then hit upon to please all ranks (I wonder when there will); however, after ten years' nervous excitement, Mr. Curwin's plan became the favourite, was supported by the highest authorities in India, but unluckily found impracticable by the Court of Directors. The Hon. Court, while retiring funds were in agitation, agreed to permit 12 retirements to the Bengal army, 8 to Madras, and 4 to Bombay, annually. This was liberal, but its operation, if it had taken effect, would have been by no means certain, and, as India becomes colonised, likely to be still less so as a source of promotion.

Something is wanted in the Indian army to give an accelerated limb promotion, not dependent on individual will. I therefore submit that the Hon. Court of Directors, instead of the before-named retirements of Lieut.-Colonels, should transfer an equal number of senior Colonels annually to a senior list, these officers having the option of being further actively employed in any of the higher official situations or Military commands, to which their rank, their merits, and their services, give them a just claim. Were they to decline no injury would accrue to them, but hence would follow a certain promotion through all ranks, and on the principle on which the service is based.

The expense to be incurred by such an arrangement, beneficial alike to the Company and to the Army, in addition to what the Hon. Court has hypothetically conceded, to be made up by an Army Fund, if deemed necessary; but it is quite hopeless now to agitate funds of any description, until it be known what measures the Court have in view, or to what extent that Hon. body will go to confer a progressive and pervading good on their Army. The expense, as the Army is now circumstanced, ought to be a secondary consideration.

By an arrangement such as I have hinted at, H.M. Army could sustain no injury, as the Brevet system would very properly correct any supercession arising out of it, if by possibility it should occur. The senior Colonels so transferred receiving an equivalent for their off-reckoning, could not be injured by it, and considering the period of life to which the officers of that rank have arrived in attaining it, there cannot be much apprehension of access of expenditure from the list accumulating, since, alas! they will all have passed the average period allotted to human existence.

THE NAVAL COLLEGE, AND SCHOOL OF NAVAL ARCHITECTURE.

SIR,—The report which has been current for these two or three sessions gains credence, that in moving the Navy Estimates it is the intention of the Secretary of the Admiralty to make some observations, with a view to the suppression of the Naval College at Portsmouth. I would respectfully call the attention of this talented gentleman to another establishment, which has cost the country more than 100,000*l.*, and never, I do believe, effected (or capable of effecting) one pennyworth of good—I mean the School of Naval Architecture, that precious humbug, from which so much was expected, and so little has resulted. Had the noble science of phrenology flourished 30 years back, and rejoiced in so many believers as at present, I doubt not but some independent Member of Parliament would have moved that the heads of the pupils to be admitted for instruction should have undergone an inspection, and by this means it is probable great disappointment would have been avoided; for I believe the organ of ship-building is so very rare, that the professors of the noble science of phrenology have not even delineated its true position on the cranium.

For nearly thirty years has the country patiently endured the advent of the mighty advantages which were to result from educating a certain number of pupils in the science of Naval architecture, the only qualifications required being sound health, reading, and spelling; but grievous has been the disappointment. With the exception of a few pamphlets and lectures overloaded with plagiarisms and endless repetitions of worn-out ideas, not a single ray from that source has illuminated us to dispel the gloom: there has been quantum suff. and more than enough of theorists; but the report of genius is nil, and when we consider that this establishment is supported at the expense of 6000*l.* a-year, it well behoves the worthy Secretary who has the first look of the Estimates, whose keen perception and pertinent inquiries have caused some little alarm amongst officials during his repeated visits to the dock-yards—it behoves this gentleman, I say, to consider whether this is not paying too dear for a whistle,—and a very contemptible one it is.

It is in vain that we seek to force genius by arbitrary means. No application or study, whether at private or national expense, will produce it: the utmost that can be expected by such means is to improve and mature it by the acquisition of the practical axioms laid down by scientific men, easy to be learned, whereas "Genius is never to be acquired by art, but is the gift of nature," and highly precious has estate been in the selection of men of genius. She found Watt a land surveyor, and Arkwright weaving my grandmother's front at a barber's block, and surely she will not astray when she visited the quarter-deck of a British man-of-war in search of a talent which should redeem the odium we had long endured on the score of our deficiency in the art of ship-building.

You have truly observed, Sir, that ship-building is an art, and not a science. It cannot be considered a science until we can reduce certain rules to demonstration; even this can never be, because the difference of the sea's surface, produced by the action of the wind, will require bodies of different moulds to overcome the varying resistence which they experience. I will treat more on this point hereafter; at present I may remark, that the School of Architecture should be abolished, and parents in future left to cultivate those talents which their children display, in any trade or profession, instead of the futile attempt to force them into an artificial system. It may be objected that the gentlemen educated at the public expense would take their talent into the service of some rival state. As Dogberry said to the watch, "let them go, and thank God you are well rid of them." But there need be no alarm about this; for however highly they may estimate their own qualifications, and however high priced they may value them, they will pass current for no more than their worth in the market, and certainly no more than they are now in the receipt of in the several dock-yards.

In conclusion, I will make a few remarks on the recent trial in the Malta Channel, to show the utter futility of theoretic science, when applied to ship-building. There was the Barham, a ship built on the plan of Sir William Rule, who was a practical shipwright, and held the rules and assumptions of the School in sovereign contempt, knowing them to be fallacies. This ship, sailing upon a line of floatation two feet below that intended by her projector, skimming, as it were, the sea, raised of one deck, but still retaining her original masts, and in consequence a great depth of counter, beats the crack ship of Capt. Symonds in light winds, going free—a thing to be expected certainly. But where are the productions of the School that can compete with this ship of the same class? Where are Acteon and Sapphire? Alas! no where in the race, they have not even been placed, as the sportsman says.

I must conclude for the present, but shall follow up the subject next week: in the meantime, I am glad to see your excellent contemporary, the Journal, do full justice to Capt. Symonds in the Editor's opening address to his readers on the prospects of the Army and Navy in 1836.

THE EXTRAORDINARY CASE OF MR. H. D. PERROTT, LATE LIEUTENANT R.N.

"He that filches from me my good name,
Robs me of that which not enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed!"

...ir,—Mr. Perrott having no hope left of the Admiralty ...ting an investigation of his case, Mr. Hume, M.P. very ...anfully advocated his cause, and was successful so far as ...ceeded, in 1825, in obtaining for him a pension of 2*s.* 6*d.* ...diem for his loss of limb and other wounds, but was ...und down not to interfere further;" nor did he, while ...d Melville was in office.

Now "be it also known to all men," that Mr. Clay, M.P. informed Mr. Perrott, after many interviews and consultations with official persons, that Government had offered him the arrears of his pension, provided the motion before the House respecting him was withdrawn: dire necessity prompted Mr. P. to accept the offer—the motion was consequently withdrawn, Mr. P., however, stating in writing "that such was not to be considered as binding him to give up his claims for restoration, or in any way compromising his honour;" and, "flushed with the sanguine hope of being enabled to repay the honest trades-people who had supported him to obtain justice," he submitted (by Mr. Clay's request) a statement of his services and wounds to the Admiralty, viz.

"That he had been at the capture of 202 vessels, twenty-five times engaged, seven of which he had the honour of commanding, and was successful; that he had received seven wounds; that he was struck off the Admiralty List of the Navy on the 24th March, 1812, through conspiracy; that the Lords of the Admiralty had repeatedly acknowledged his services, as well as in both Houses of Parliament; that on the 19th July, 1825, a pension had been granted to him at the recommendation of a late board, for the loss of his left arm, and several other wounds in the service, therefore praying for the arrears of his pension from the 24th March, 1812, to 19th July, 1825."

Instead of this promise being fulfilled, when Messrs. Hume, Clay, and Attwood advocated the cause of this truly unfortunate gentleman, they were informed by the Admiralty, and Sir James Graham himself in the House of Commons, that if Mr. Perrott agitated his application further, his pension would be taken from him, as the Admiralty were led to believe that he, when a boy, had obtained his first pension* by fraud, and even his second pension in 1825 by misrepresenting the fact relative to the loss of his arm. Mr. P. then entered into a full explanation, stating, "that it was inserted in his original pension ticket, No. 886, and in the statement of the late Lord Hood, that 'he had lost his arm in the Channel, had received two balls through his right arm, a sabre wound in the right hand, and was also wounded in the body.'" He was now informed that he had misrepresented the fact relative to the loss of his arm, which caused him again to address their lordships, "that if he had stated an error in his letter of the 3rd August, in reply to theirs, by return of post, it was as nearly in accordance with his pension ticket as he could recollect after such a lapse of years. That at that period he was a Midshipman on board of the Phœbe, cruising in the Channel; that she put into Portsmouth Harbour to refit, and whilst refitting, by permission of the Commanding Officer, five or six Mids went out in the ship's boat on the 24th February, 1806, to practise firing at a mark, in which service his gun burst and shattered his arm, upon which he was sent ashore to the King's Hospital at Haslar, where it was immediately amputated, and that his pension was granted after the regular examination by the proper officers, &c." To which he received their Lordships' communication—"That after due consideration, their Lordships declined all further interference in his case;"—a tantamount acknowledgment that he had not obtained his first pension by fraud, nor his second pension by misrepresentation, and, in my humble opinion, a full acquittal by their Lordships of these two distinct and serious charges.

The successive charges brought by the Admiralty time after time against this unhappy individual having been instantly met, and rebutted by sterling truth, it is natural for every person to wonder why this gentleman, proven innocent of either crime or fault, has not been restored to his rank in the Navy. He will cease to wonder when in possession of the following fact:—the Admiralty have asserted in the House of Commons, that an Admiral, formerly Mr. Perrott's Captain (when a Midshipman) had informed them that "Mr. P. was a bad character;" to which Mr. Attwood in reply observed, that "that very officer had granted Mr. P. certificates of good conduct" with which he passed his examination for Lieutenant. This induced the Admiralty to make further inquiry, since which one of the Sea Lords has informed Mr. T. Attwood, "that the said Admiral had written to the Admiralty that Mr. P. had forged them," thus raising a distinct charge against him for the first time, after 27 years' separation—the Midshipman from his Captain!!! Here then is the point "wire" this gentleman is not restored to his rank and reputation as an officer—the point up to which I have fairly beaten, with "honour's breeze, fore and main tacks of argumentation on board, in the face of the world, against ice spring tides and under-currents, springing and ebbing from the hitherto undiscovered sources mentioned in my first letter.

(To be Concluded in our next)

* Forfeited on promotion to Lieutenant.

NAVAL ENGINEERS.

Sir,—In looking over the Navy List, I do not perceive any notice of the Net or Sea pay, or the sharing of prize-money of that new class, the Naval Engineers (I conclude Warrant officers), their Mates, or Apprentices, which no doubt is an oversight, as I have been given to understand their rank was established by Lord Auckland. I am induced to address you on the subject, in the hope, by your remarks thereon, the Engineers' names may be attached to the vessels (in the Navy List) to which they belong, as also an alphabetical list of them.

An Old Lieut. R.N.

[It is probable that when the new instructions are issued, this matter will be satisfactorily arranged.—Ed]

Extraordinary Memory of the King.—The following are singular proofs of the King's memory, as well as of His Majesty's intimate acquaintance with the annals of the different regiments of the army:—On the death of the late Lord Chatham, upon the Commander-in-Chief taking the Royal Commands respecting the disposal of the 4th, or King's Own, Regiment, His Majesty promptly replied, "Appoint General Hodgson, I promised it to him many years since; his father, the Field Marshal, was for a long time its Colonel." In like manner, when the Buffs became vacant, the King directed that Lord Howard, of Effingham, should be the Colonel, observing, "The Buffs once belonged to his uncle, Sir George Howard." It is not a little curious, that Field Marshal Sir George Howard and Field Marshal Studholme Hodgson were brothers-in-law, and that after such a lapse of years their representatives should hold their regiments. The present Colonels of the Buffs and King's Own are consequently first cousins.

Female Sailors.—Three females served and fought on board the Victory, in Lord Rodney's engagement with the French; they were discovered after the battle to be females, and were sent on shore at Lisbon, where they were clothed at the expence of the British factory there, to which Mr. Turner, formerly of this city, was then the Treasurer; a collection was made for them, which amounted to about 25 moidores. They were afterwards sent to Falmouth by one of the packets, and brought to their homes in this city. They belonged to the parish of St. Edmund on the Bridge; one of them was blind of an eye, a very stout lusty woman; the others were short, but stout. They had served at the guns most valiantly during the whole of the engagement, and had not received any injury.

An old writer says, "the Spaniards are eagles on their horses, lions in their business, women in the open field."

A modern Spaniard being asked some particulars of the manners and morals of his countrymen, replied "Read Gil Blas; the Spaniards are the same still."

Among some late despatches in the South American papers, one from the Commander of the Bolivian army of operations is addressed to General Francisco Burdett O'Connor, Commanding General of the army of reserve.

The French Navy.—Ships of the Line, First Class. 126 Guns.—L'Ocean, La Montebello, Le Commerce, La Ville de Paris, Le Majestueux, Le Souverain, Le Friedland, Le Louis XIV., L'Austerlitz, Le Trocadero, Le Wagram. Second Class, 86 Guns.—Le Jena, Le Duquesne, Le Neptune, Le Jupiter, Le Genappes, L'Ulm, L'Henry IV., L'Ecle, Le Foudroyant, Le Magnifique, L'Algesiras, Le Tage, Le Fleurus, L'Annibal, Le Novarin, Le Rucontante, Le Diademe, Le Santi-Petri, Le Suffrein, L'Hercule, Le Dugumy-Fru., Le Turenne, L'Ajax. Third Class, 82 Guns.—Le Tourville, Le Nestor, Le Scipion, L'Orion, Le Jean-Bart, Le Genereux, L'Alexandre, L'Inflexible, Le Veteran, Le Marengo, La Ville de Marli, Le Trion, Le Du Guesclin, Le Fontenoy, Le Diomede, Le Breslau, Le Trident, Le Superbe, L'Alger, Le Couronne, Le Bayard, L'Achille, L'Hector. Here then are fifty-seven as fine ships of war, almost all of them built since 1818, as ever floated on the seas. In addition to this the French have upwards of forty splendid frigates of the first class, all of them carrying sixty guns, thirty-six pounders; she has ten frigates carrying forty-six guns, thirty pounders; she has fifteen frigates of the third class carrying thirty-two guns; she has ten frigates of the fourth class carrying twenty-six guns; she has twenty-four corvettes, carrying from twenty to thirty-two guns; and she has sixteen gun-brigs. But this is not all—she has twenty-seven steam-vessels, most of them being 160 horse power, and well and heavily armed.—Shipping Gazette.

French Dinners.—To be selon les règles, you must begin with a dozen oysters; then bad soup (except at private tables); then a pâte; then radishes and bread and butter; then a slice of melon! (where's your appetite now?) Then comes your entrée, generally a made dish, with their only sauce for every thing, viz. of flour, eggs, vinegar, and butter, sometimes they add onions. After this meat comes fish; then perhaps a tolerable friccande; after which you have, single and aloffe (to eat with bread) potatoes, or peas, or carrots. Then comes a roast leg of mutton, or veal, or, beef, hard, dry, and tasteless, with une [superbe, salade. Mon Dieu!—How to enjoy Paris.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 23, 1836.

Can it be possible that our pseudo-patriots are so infatuated as to adopt the creed that "the ends sanctify the means, and ill may be done that good may come out of it?" If so, it is time that the mist of so fatal a delusion should be swept from their eyes. Do they believe that their country is benefited by making outcasts of the widows and daughters of Naval Officers, and wandering beggars of their sons, that a paltry pension, which for ages was an undisputed right, shall be saved to the State? Are these the means which are to sanctify such an end? It is indeed setting up the mammon of unrighteousness as the idol of adoration; and that too in a land calling itself Christian. But away with such Pharisaic casuistry, worthy the suggestion of the veriest imp in the train of Alecto! A diminished expenditure, as shown by the annuel balance sheet, may excite the plaudits of the populace, who are ignorant of the sacrifice by which it is attained; but the morals of the community must eventually be the oblation;—eventually, do we say? nay, the sacrifice of morals commenced when the sense of gratitude for services done was buried in the grave together with him to whom the nation was indebted; when feeling of commiseration for the desolate widow and the fatherless children was exchanged for oppression towards the most deserveless of the creation; and when the ear of the patriot became deaf to the cry of starving infancy, though alive to the shout of popularity. What beyond self-elevation do these same patriots propose as the result? Is it, that the sufferers and their friends shall become more enthusiastic in their love of country, or entertain a more special admiration of its institutions? Is it an enhanced respect for those to whom they are to ascribe their own immediate degradation, as well as the contumely in which the memory of their father's services has been shrouded? Or is it, finally, a proud acknowledgment of the integrity with which their country has maintained faith towards them? Alas! for poor England! The Royal Navy, once her boast and glory, is likely to become an object of dread to her own sons, and be shunned like the pestilential pool of the Dead Sea, the Asphaltides of every hope and implied promise! "Better be hanged than damned"* to so desperate a course of life." The blight of despondency has long been suspended over the heads of its votaries, but it was reserved for the widows and orphans of its Officers to drink the cup of deathly disappointment.

When, with the glow of patriotism, and prompted by the hope of one day rivalling the established heroes of our annals, British youth embarked on the chivalrous venture, they dreamt not that, in addition to cold neglect and ill-requited services, they should likewise leave behind them, in after life, a progeny of paupers, and made such by the express voice of their country! for pensions to widows was no such recent innovation on the public purse, but was a long established provision, and esteemed one of the sources of remuneration to Officers for the zealous and fearless performance of hazardous duties. Its alienation, then, becomes not only the violation of a pledge but the perversion of justice, as well as the source of oppression towards the helpless, and must prove destructive to the Service. Men who possess no dastard fears for corporel suffering, or for the chances of premature death by hazardous enterprise, may yet entertain a praiseworthy dread of leaving to the mercy of patriots a widow and nursery of infants, and hesitation, at least, if not actually shunning the encounter, must, by law of nature, be the result. Who, after the late examples of pauperising the widows of Officers who died on actual service, will volunteer for pestilential stations? Have they shown themselves too confiding, and thus brought deception on themselves by reposing unhesitating confidence in the integrity of their country? If so, it was an error founded on unlimited generosity of feeling on their part, and that genuine patriotism which never questioned the existence of a virtue which subsequent events have shown was supplanted by deep-rooted ingratitude and deception,—deception, in that the pension was undisputed until suddenly withdrawn.

But it is argued that, as "non-contributors to productive labour, Officers can have no claim upon the country." Where were they when Britain, respleudent with the torch of war, diffused her glorious rays around, and lighted up the path of commerce through trackless seas and distant lands? What boots the power loom? the tinsel of your Sheffield plate-worker? or skill of the Birmingham cutler? Could the productive labour of either mechanic, or other votary of Plutus, have flourished, even though aided by the Watts or Arkwrights of the age, but through the protecting influence of the Navy; at the sacrifice on their part of health, wealth, ease, and the social ties of family intercourse, whereby to insure quietude to the labourer and freedom from care to the unenterprising? Do they then merit the reproach because they effaced from the ocean every hostile impediment to the furtherance of traffic, and left nothing to oppose the successful speculations of these worshippers of mammon? But old fruit, as the proverb runs, loses its savour, and their services and sufferings are no longer remembered. Branded as "dead weight," their pay is yet sufficiently paltry to secure them from the imputation of having embraced the profession from the sordid motives of mercenary gain.

Did the fact transpire among our rivals for Naval renown that such is the treatment of British Naval Officers, France and America, whilst they blushed for Old England, would chuckle at the prospect of discontent thus reasonably surmised and look with confidence at the successful issue of any future trials of strength; for unless the widows and orphans of Officers are secured from pauporism, the most courageous will fear to meet death; more especially when we see the promise of bribe (for it savours much of such imputation for stimulating to a due performance of duty) evaded. How runs the sentence? "Except the husband be killed in action, or lose his life in the execution of the Service!" What is the true English meaning of "losing his life in the execution of the Service?" Does it imply that he must be killed by a cannon-ball, and not by disease, when on Service? Is he prohibited from catching a fever on the Coast of Africa, or imbibing infection in Egypt or India, under penalty of forfeiture of the widow's pension? Is he forbidden to be affected by cold, in the icy latitudes, which terminates in death, for want of the attentions and care of her thereby become widowed, under the infliction of sending herself and children beggars on the world? Such casuistry "that because he does not die according to set phrase the widow's claim is forfeited," is unworthy the least dignified nation yet has it been made applicable for the rejection of petitions from the widows of British Naval Officers in England.

We beg clearly and distinctly to state that our observations have no reference whatever to the Admiralty Board, fully impressed as we are with the conviction that they, like ourselves, are compelled to bow to the pseudo-patriots, the time-servers, who, after amassing all they could by the extravagancies of the past, are now willing to saddle the ill effects upon the helpless.

We stated last week that one great fault in the organisation of the Indian Army is in the appointment of its Commanders-in-Chief. This important office, by which the whole machine is regulated, should be given with great circumspection; but it is well known that interest and service in Spain and Portugal, instead of in India, invariably prevail in the consideration of fitness for so peculiar command, in which a practical acquaintance with the dispositions and singular prejudices of the native soldiers should be made as indispensable a qualification as is the military experience which is supposed to be united with the high rank necessarily attached to whoever is chosen. Surely the Directors agree in this opinion, yet their acts would not lead us to suppose so.

When an Officer is sent to command an Army with which he has no feeling in common, either by personal communication or previous acquaintanceship with its constitution up to the day of his appointment to it, what motive can he have for accepting the office beyond that of increasing his private fortune and obliging his friends? and, being bred in another Service, and a stranger to the Company's, will he not rather lean toward his own, with prejudice against, and neglectful indifference of, the other? What have the Commanders-in-Chief ever done for the Indian Army, either in the Councils of India or after their return to England with accumulated riches, and not unfrequently with honours that have been gained through that Army? When has one ever stood forward to advocate their claims? For many years past, Lord Combermere is the only Officer who has presided over the Indian Army and has made himself known to it or cont ted to its improvemeot; he, hy personal inspecn's at the differont stations of almost every corps tha Bengal Army, informed himself of its tual oondition, which enahled him to regulate disciplino and improvo. its appesrance. We me his Lordship as a solitary instauce, not that was immaculute, but becausa he exerted himlf, was full of life and activity, nad seemed to ko a pride and interest in the troops he comanded, whereas most other Commanders-in-Chief ppaar to have gone to India with the avowed tention of seeing and knowing as little of their oops as possible, their only movement from the residencies being a yeerly trip at the setting in the hot seasan to some favoured cool spot, nnd turning sometimes by a different rante, so as barely taka time to see pass in review the few corps of the ations through which they necessarily travelled;

d this undertaking being designated in Generol rders a "Tour of Inspection," is intended, wo ppose, to ba considered such.

Is not such a system of listless inaction ruinous any Army whoso Chief, on being appointed, as previously unknown to it? Surely n sense of uty should inspiro every Commander-in-Chief, joining an Army unler such a disadvautsge, to e exertion of remedying it as soon as possible, y visiting tha several stations and inspecting nll a Regiments that he can bring within range of a tour, and thus maka himself generally known it as soon as he can. Every one will admit the nger of heing dapendant on others in tbn perrmance of any duty, but is not this the situation every Commander-in-Chief in India, who, hy total ignorance of tha Army, must be entirely the mercy of his Staff, who, again, by long re-dencies at the Presidency, aod withdrawal from arrison and regimental duties, are frequently os ufit to give hino inforoation on points referred to ead-quartera as ha is to decide upon them; and to his obtaining ony by reference to the inspec-on returns of a Regiment, the exiating principle pon which they are made out renders that o bopcss case.

Anotber great defect in the Company's Army rises from the interferenca of the Court of Diectors in some of its minor details; thia has, for any years, kept it at a stand behind the King's ervice, which continues to improve and benefit y experience, whilst it remains comparatively im-utable. The Directors' prohibition against any lteration in the dress or equipment, without a revious referenoe to them, has the sama effect as prohibited altogethar. In India, the Command-
-in-Chief will not sanction any change without n order from home; and at home none will ba ade without en application from India; aod, owever much it may be required, none taken lace. The Commander-in-Chief, either indignent hat his judgmeot on matters purely military hould be subjected to the approval of Leadenhalltreet, or else not cousidering it worth while to sfer home about them, to wait a year or two for he Directors' ssuctiom, with nu equal chanoe of s being withheld, sud the Directors, oo the other and, being far too iodifferent about the uniformity r efficiency of their troops, to give such matters thought,—with such an order in force, it may he asily understood why there is an aversioo on the art of the Commander-in-Chief to ioterfere, el-hough there is much need of it both in the avalry and Infantry.

The Cavalry certainly demand a more special attention than has hitherto been shown to tnat branch, but that thoy do not meet with any, the tame result of General Sleigh's tdur of inspection in 1832 sufficiontly shows, no notice whatever having heen taken of hia reports, hy which the Governuent has been put to a needless expense, and that efficient and zealous Cavalry Officer to much unnecessary trouble.

We have four regiments of British Dragoons, and twenty-one regiments of .Native Cavalry, besides several irregular corps belonging to the Indian Army; and there heing no Inspector-General of Cavalry, the Generals of Divisions in which they nre serving do his duty, and, as the generality of these belong to the Infantry, the inspections nre frequently very imperfectly made. The many intricate questions about saddles, horses, stable duties, foraga and grain yards, horsemanship, sword exercise, pistol practice, riding schools, head and post practices, &c. &c., being ao totally new and incomprehensihle to most Officers of Infantry, that frequently they are obliged to perform the duty so absurdly imposed on them by the guidance of the Officer on whom they have to report! and this is the way in which the Indian Cavalry are annually inspected! In each Presidency they are differently equipped, and surely the expense of paying an Inspector-General of Cavalry would be amply refunded in the efficiency and uniformity that would rapidly take place in that useful braach of the Army.

The Infantry are much behind band with his Majesty's Regiments of the Line in regard to clothing, which is very inferior in material, pattern, and make, and far tau scanty; and, as for the Native Officers, they are dressed up more like figures in a toy shop than British Officers.

The arms are very bad; new firelocks being often found unserviceable in consequence of bad springs in tha locks; these are supplied hy contract;—it is therefore but right to publish how shamefully the Directors are imposed upon by the contfactors; but we must return to this matter on a future occasion.

It always affords us satisfaction when we are enabled to call attention to the conspicuous merits of any Officer of either Service, and we felt the more pleasure in introducing into our number of the 9th inst., from unpublished Naval Recollections, the paragraph showing the early proofs of courage manifested by the present Commander, William Hillyar, at the commencement of the late war in 1804, because we learn from those who are well acquainted with this Officer, that his conduct throughout his career has been closely in unison with that which he so heroically evinced when but fourteen years of age, and when, as we before stated, Lord Nelson at once bestowed upon him a Lieutenant's commission, and obtained an Order in Council to confirm this extraordinary mark of favour—the just reward of dashing and successful enterprise in a boy. Commander Hillyar is, we are told, a brother of Captain Sir James Hillyar, an Officer second to none in reputation and high character on the list of the Navy; and, as we find the name of the former at this moment as the Second Captain of the Revenge in the Mediterranean, and that he has been above twenty years a Commender, we will express our best wishes that he may, at an early period, receive from the present First Lord of the Admiralty that rank which we deem he ought to have had years ago, and to which, we are assured, all who know him and more especially all who recollect the enterpris alluded to, will hear testimony to his having wel deserved.

Since the above was in type, we have receive intelligence of the promotion of this gallant Officer an act highly creditable to Lord Minto's Nava Administration.

We continue to hear the best characters Captain Symonds's ships from all quarters. Th Officers commanding the vessels, of the new syste of construction, appear to be exceedingly proud them, and only wish that it had been their goo fortune to have been on board such vessels durin war, as they are confident they should then hav filled their coffers with prize money.

We have always taken great interest in the ex periments on the new system of Naval constru tion, because we know the importance of stabilit in ships; with great delight did we witness a m of genius stepping into the course of our exper mental squadrons, and in the first trial distancin all the old practitioners in theory and practic This astonishing performance of Captain Symond augured well, and his subsequent experience h completed his brilliant triumphs. When it is co sidered, that Captain Symonds's ships have be pitched against the best of the British Fleet, it most wonderful that they should have sustain their first superior characters, because, if they h sailed only in the general run as well as others, t character of a good ship-builder would have be maintained. It is to be expected that, in the n merous ships in our Navy, chance alone must ha produced some good ones, even from bad co structors; but for ships to be built on n certa principle, like those of Captain Symonds, to b all, even the best, is most extraordinary.

As the shadow of an object proves the substan true, so does envy attend true merit. The beat men have been most hated, and therefore we a not surprised when we see attempts made to d preciate the performances of Captain Symond but we rely only on the evidence of facts, as docto often differ on theoretical points. To that te for evidence of the Surveyor's merit, we sha always look, and to no other; and not till he buil bad ships shall we consider him to be a bad shi builder.

Not tha great majority of the ships of ou Navy are defective in their sailing qualities no will deny; hence the numerous modes propos for cutting them down and new arming them. their present form they were found, even twen years ago, to be inferior to foreign ships, and th are still more so now, as foreigners have still fu ther improved on their models. The French Na is remodelled, and their new ships are remarkab fast-sailers, carrying masts and yards much larg than ours.

But while it has been found necessary to c down our ships and diminish their force, there ha not been wanting persons who have advised i creasing their weight of metal instead of diminis ing it, thereby advising a recurrence to all t evils of our old small ships overloaded with met notwithstanding that the French and America are increasing the tonnage of their Navies. Su is the recommendation of Mr. Read, in a pamph published in 1831, in which he proposes to conv our eighteen-pounder frigates to those of long a short thirty-two-pounders. By mixing long thir two-pounders with thirty-two-pounder carronades on both main deck and quarter deck, in a strange higgledy-piggledy fashion, he proposes to augment the weight (which must sink the ship lower in the water, and cause additional resistance) as the means of improving these vessels!!! Alas, what is this but worse than going back to the principle of having forty-four guns on two decks? and this person has been educated at the School of Naval Architecture—strange to say it!!! He commences his pamphlet by depreciating razées, and foretelling that their stability or power to carry sail will not be increased, which is quite contrary to what the facts of the case have since proved; he wishes the number of men of the frigates to be reduced in order to make up in some degree for the increase of the weight of his guns, and he reduces the allowance of shot. We wish our readers who are interested in the controversy on ship-building to read this pamphlet,* as Mr. Read is the oracle of the party against Captain Symonds. Knowing the state of the parties on ship-building intimately, and knowing also the attainments of some of the oracles, we have given our voice for Captain Symonds, being convinced of the solidity of his principles.

The observations of X. Y. Z. in our last are so much in unison with the opinions we have frequently given on the subject of the Half-Pay of Lieutenants of the Royal Navy, that we can do little more than repeat them.

It has been contended that, inasmuch as the three hundred senior Lieutenants upon the Navy List are still receiving seven shillings per diem half-pay, although a portion of them have been promoted a step for rank only, and designated Retired Commanders, no injustice is done to those lower down on the List, who are still advanced as vacancies fall in, so as to keep the full number of one thousand (who receive superior half-pay) complete. We like, however, to call things by their proper names. If it were considered just or politic to give to Officers who had served from thirty to forty years as Lieutenants, nine-tenths of them throughout the extent of the last war, a Brevet rank, (and no one will question the justice of such a measure,) the act of grace should have been accompanied with the pay of their new rank; or at all events they should have been removed from all claims upon the Lieutenants' List. We doubt not that if this matter is considered worthy of attention in the proper quarter, a just and favourable view will be taken of it; and we trust ere long to congratulate our readers upon this anomaly, which appears to be a source of great complaint amongst the old Lieutenants in the Navy, being abolished, and the List placed once more upon the footing established by Order in Council of 1816. As regards a general advance of half-pay, as proposed by our Correspondent, we fear that, under present circumstances, it would be but holding out a vain hope to intimate that anything of the kind will be accomplished.

We direct the attention of our readers to a letter, signed Yorick, in this day's paper, on the subject of the School of Naval Architecture. It is highly questionable whether that establishment or the Naval College of Portsmouth have answered the expectations of the country, and whether it is politic to uphold them longer at the public cost. We agree with our correspondent that it is better to leave these things to private competition and emulation; and doubtless parents will then see the policy of educating their children in such trades or professions as they display an inclination for, or a capacity to excel in. We have heard, on good authority, that both these establishments will be abolished at no distant period. We invite our correspondent to continue his remarks.

It is not often that we notice the proceedings of our contemporaries, but we were compelled in our last to allude to the disgraceful piracies of an Irish paper. That print is this week defunct, and we hope such other papers, as extract from our pages, without acknowledgment, columns of original articles, will profit from the fate of the one referred to.

We this day announce the annual promotion of Clerks, which will be found to include those who have the greatest seniority and the best testimonials upon the list. They appear to have been selected entirely on these accounts, without reference to patronage or favour.

The late Dowager Duchess of Beaufort, daughter of Admiral the Hon. Lord Ellenborough gave a dejeuner on Tuesday, at Southam House, to Lord Segrave and the gentlemen of the Cheltenham Hunt. The party afterwards proceeded to enjoy the sports of the field. During the chase, the Hon. Mrs. Law was taking a small fence, when her horse took too high a leap, which threw her down, her foot remaining fastened in the stirrup. A gentlemen caught the horse just as she fell, and the Hon. Craven Berkeley coming up at the moment, rescued her from further peril, and she afterwards pursued the chase with her usual spirit.

On the night of Sunday week the coach which left Cork for Dublin was stopped by a considerable body of men, within a few miles of Cashel. The attacking party immediately demanded the arms. The formidable body of the assailants made several attempts to throw the coach upon its side, yet the coachman's management of the horses was so adroit, and his throwing them into motion so well timed, that this decisive stroke of destruction was not accomplished. There was, however, no resisting the menacing demand for the arms with any success, and they were necessarily surrendered.—Cork Herald.

ROYAL HUMANE SOCIETY.

On Monday an adjourned meeting of the Governors of this institution was held at the Society's House, Chatham-place, for awarding rewards to persons who have distinguished themselves in saving the lives of individuals from drowning; Col. Clitheroe in the Chair. Mr. Westropp read the list of cases recommended by the Committee to the notice of the General Court. The following awards were made:—The thanks of the Society, on vellum, to Capt. Girdler, of the American ship Morea, who saved the Captain and crew of the British brig Effort, which was water-logged, on her voyage from Newcastle. The crew, 13 in number, were lashed to the rigging and completely exhausted. The Mate of the Morea, in consequence of the high sea, refused to go to the rescue of the crew, but Capt. Girdler, with a number of volunteers, went to the Effort, and succeeded in saving the whole of the unfortunate men. The Society's silver medallion was awarded to Mr. Fitzjames, one of the officers of the expedition which was fitting out in Feb. last at Liverpool, for the Euphrates, for his gallant conduct in jumping into the sea with his great coat on, and saving a man who had fallen overboard. The Commander of the expedition, in a letter to the President of the Board of Control, strongly recommended the case. A medal was awarded to Mr. J. C. Crawford, Midshipman in H.M. ship Dublin, who jumped overboard in Coquimbo harbour, and saved the lives of two individuals. Thanks on vellum to Mr. J. Stevens, who, though 60 years of age, plunged into the water and saved a youth from drowning. The medal was unanimously voted to John Morun, for his extremely gallant conduct in saving the life of Mary Roberts. The child, two years of age, fell down a privy, and in her struggles went ten yards along the common sewer. Nearly 25 minutes elapsed before the child was missed, when Morun, who is in the employ of Messrs. Pontifex, in Shoe-lane, went down into the pit, which was five feet deep, and, at the great risk of his own life, had nearly reached the child, when he sunk, but regained the side of the sewer; and after a great effort, succeeded in getting hold of the girl, in nearly a lifeless state, and restored her to her friends; the child recovering after proper restoratives. The medal was awarded to Master W. G. Scott Keys, aged 16 years, who plunged into the Grand Surrey Canal, and saved two boys from drowning, aged 13 and 5 years, and who also rescued another lad some time before. Thanks on vellum, were voted to Mr. Anderton, a clerk in the Grand Surrey Canal office, for having plunged into the canal with his clothes on, saved one lad, and went in again, and after diving several times, brought up the body of another. Mr. A. rescued a boy from drowning 4 months ago. J. Tyfer, a labourer, in July last, plunged into the river Lea, and brought up the body of a youth; but life was extinct, the body having been 25 minutes in the water. While giving evidence before the inquest, in the evening, a report was brought of a lad, named George Bennett, being in the act of drowning while bathing. Tyfer ran out of the inquest room, jumped into the water with his clothes on, against the advice of the bystanders, and brought out the lad, who was quite exhausted. The medallion of the Society was immediately voted to Tyfer. Thanks, on vellum, were voted to T. Westall, who saved the life of a youth, 14 years of age, who had sunk while bathing near Hampton Court. The medallion was voted to Samuel Birch, who jumped into the sea, at Dover, with his clothes and heavy nailed shoes on, and saved William Cavill. About 14 months ago Birch jumped into the water and saved the life of a boy. A letter was read from Mr. Charles Mayberry, surgeon of H.M.'s ships in ordinary at Portsmouth, detailing the gallant conduct of George Doneford, a seaman in H.M.S. Prince. The wife of P. Razer, a marine, in a fit of frenzy, jumped into the sea. The sentry on duty, though unable to swim, jumped into her assistance, and both were sinking, when Doneford plunged in from where he was, 23 feet high from the water, and, though the tide was running strong, succeeded in reaching them, and held them up till the boats came to their assistance. Doneford had previously saved the lives of three other persons. In a letter from Capt. H. D. Byng, the Com Officer of H.M.'s ordinary at Portsmouth, this officer bore testimony to the gallant conduct of Doneford. The Society's medal was awarded to him. In May last a brig ran on a shoal at Winterton Ness, the sea breaking over her, which washed every soul on board into the sea. The life-boat was launched with the greatest difficulty, and 25 volunteers put off. Out of seven lives four were lost, one man being rescued from the stern-post, to which he clung, after the vessel went to pieces. The ship proved to be the Blackbird collier, from Sunderland. The thanks of the Society, on vellum, were voted to Lieut. Simmonds, who conducted the life-boat. The medal was voted to Wm. Dunbar, of the Sylph steamboat, who plunged into the water and saved Mr. W. C. Sole, who, in order to avoid getting under the paddles of the steamer, jumped into the river from his boat. Dunbar, on a previous occasion, had saved a boy's life at Woolwich. The medal was voted to Mr. Payne, who, with his clothes on, jumped into the canal and saved a woman, who had attempted self-destruction. In a letter addressed by order of the Directors of the E. I. Comp. to the Society, the gallant conduct of Cadet Pigou, at Chatham, on 27th Sept. last, was detailed. The E. I. Comp.'s Sappers and Miners, in concert with the R. Sappers and Miners, on the day stated, were engaged in exercise. Pigou, in command of one pontoon, was returning to his moorings, when private Williams fell into deep water, the tide running strong. Cadet Pigou jumped overboard, and at the hazard of his life saved the man. The medal was voted. The medal was also voted to F. Dovey, a lad, 14 years of age, who saved the life of a boy, near Looe Point, Helston. The boy's cousin ran into the water to rescue him, and was drowned. Dovey again went into the water, dived, and brought up the body of the cousin, but life was extinct. In a letter from Lieut. J. Somerville, of the Coast Guard station, New Romney, the particulars were given of the saving of five men of the brig Industry, of Sunderland, which was wrecked near the station. In the morning the vessel was on her beam ends, with the crew clinging to the fore-top shrouds. A galley was launched, and four men volunteered to go with Lieut. Somerville. After great exertion the galley neared the vessel, and the crew dropped one by one into the boat, which, however, was afterwards upset, when the whole were rescued by Lt. Somerville, who was coming off to their assistance.—The medal was voted to Lieut. Somerville, and another to Mr. J. B. Willoughby, at Capt. Parker's recommendation, Midshipman of his Majesty's ship Rodney, who saved the life of a boy who fell from the Vigo hulk in Hamoaze.—In a letter from Lord Panmure and others, the conduct of David Hill, son of Mr. Hill, of the Dundee Courier office, was brought to the notice of the society. Emma Christie, eight years of age, fell from the chain-pier into the Tay, when Hill plunged in to her assistance. She grasped his leg so fast that both went down. By a powerful effort he disengaged himself, and for self-preservation swam on shore. He, however, again went to the child's assistance, when she again seized him by the arm, but he succeeded in bringing her to shore, after being several times under water. The medal was voted to Mr. Hill.—The medal was voted to Lieut. R. H. Bunbury, of H.M.'s ship Thunderer, who, while at sea in September last, saved the life of a man who fell from the main top-yard. Lt. Bunbury had lost his right arm close below the elbow; but notwithstanding the ship at the time was under close reef fore-and mizen top-sails, the sea running high, and night closing in, he heroically plunged into the water, and rescued the man. The medal was also voted to Mr. W. Pritchard, of Doctors' Commons, who saved the life of a lad named Whitehead, who had fallen from a boat in getting into the Pearl steamer, off Greenhithe. Mr. Pritchard was in the same boat, and in attempting to save the lad was himself drawn into the water. Though unable to swim, Mr. Pritchard managed to keep himself and the lad up for some time, until a boat came to their assistance.—The last case read was that of John Ellenthorpe, a sailor on board the New Holland packet, running across the Humber, who has been instrumental in saving a great number of lives. The case recommended for a reward was as follows:—On the 19th Nov., at dusk, Ellenthorpe heard a splash in the water, and plunged in towards the spot from whence the noise proceeded, when he caught hold of a drowning man, but became so entangled with him that both went down. He freed himself and again went to the man's assistance, and succeeded in bringing him on shore. In Aug., 1833, Ellenthorpe rescued a girl six years of age, and in November, in the same year, a man on a dark and tempestuous night. He also has saved a feeble old man, 75 years of age, who fell from the packet on a dark night. In Sept., 1834, he saved a child six years of age, also a man who had sunk; and in May, 1833, he rescued Sarah Hurland, a stout woman about 40 years of age, from drowning. The silver medal was awarded to Ellenthorpe. Mr. Hawes, jun., M.P., stated that since the last meeting a simple plan had been proposed for rescuing persons who might fall into the water by the breaking of the ice. It was suggested by Mr. Morgan, of Walworth-road. It was proposed that parties going on the ice should have a small cork attached to a string, which, by being fastened round the neck, or to the coat, and placed in the hat, would, as the latter usually was knocked off when persons fell in the water, indicate by floating where the body was.—[We recommend Mr. Hawes to read the letter headed "Helps and Hints for the Use of Skaters," which appeared in our paper of the 2nd inst. A string cannot move much less raise a person; and if a man slips under the ice, of what use is the string, if even it is not cut by the edge of the ice, or the small cork is not drawn under it? Moreover, a string will foul or entangle when hurried into the hat any how, and the string and cork never can show where a man is under ice. Further, we should like to know from the managers why the poor Drummer, who richly deserved to be rewarded for his gallantry and humanity, has been overlooked. We have always warmly advocated this institution, and regret to find fault.—Ed.]—A vote of thanks was passed to the medical officers who exerted themselves on Christmas-day in recovering the unfortunate persons brought into the Receiving House: also to the Coms. of the Metropolitan Police for the assistance rendered the Society's men during the frost. Mr. Hawes, M.P., said that since the last meeting a communication had been received from the Foreign Secretary furnishing the correspondence which had taken place between the British and French Governments relative to the sanitary laws of France. The correspondence was long, but he was happy to state that the subject was under consideration. In reply to questions, the French Minister of Finance had stated that there was nothing in the law of France to prevent Custom-House officers attempting to save the lives of persons wrecked on the coast. The practice, however, was different, and the Secretary would communicate to Lord Palmerston the evidence upon which the society relied upon this point. Admiral Donnelly confirmed this view of the case, and considered it resulted out of the system adopted in the Mediterranean, where the quarantine laws were observed with the utmost strictness. Mr. Hawes said it was satisfactory to know that the French Government was desirous of getting rid of the practice complained of. Thanks were then returned to the Chairman, and the meeting adjourned.

EAST INDIA COMPANY'S MARITIME SERVICE.

Minute of the Court of Directors:—

"General Court of Directors, Jan. 20, 1836.

"The Court of Directors have proceeded to take into consideration the reference from the General Court of 16th Dec., regarding the claims of the maritime officers excluded from the plan of compensation in consequence of their having been out of service more than five years previously to 28th Aug., 1833.

"The General Court of 20th Aug., 1834, expressly restricted the compensation to such Commanders and Officers as had been in the service within that period. The Board of Commissioners on sanctioning the plan of the General Court with modifications, enjoined the same restriction in terms even more pointed than those which the General Court had used. The President, in his letter dated 12th Nov., 1834, directed the compensation, whether pension or gratuity, to be given to such Commanders and Officers only as had been in actual employ in the service within the period of five years antecedent to 28th Aug., 1833; and added—'that the General Court had not specified that every claimant should be required to subscribe to a declaration to the effect that he had not previously to Aug., 1833, quitted the service of the Company for the purpose either of retiring from it, or of following any other pursuit.'

"Acting, notwithstanding, in accordance with the structions so given by the General Court under the control of the Board, the Court of Directors had no alternative but to limit the benefit of the plan to those whose period of service brought them within the prescribed term, and who could declare that they would again have gone to sea in the Company's service had it not been annihilated. The only cases of a special nature which the Court of Directors felt themselves at liberty to consider were those in which doubts might be fairly entertained, whether upon a liberal view of the spirit of the resolution, the claimants, although excluded by the letter of the rule, should not be considered as having been in the service within the restricted time.

"Reference having been made in the course of the late discussion to the third clause of the resolution of the General Court, and to the last paragraph of the President's letter of 12th Nov., 1834, before mentioned, for the purpose of showing that special cases were within the contemplation of the Proprietors; but that clause relates to 'additional' compensation to Commanders and Officers who came within the general plan, and has been so acted upon in the cases of Commanders and Officers of the Company's ships under contract. The clause is as follows:—

"'That, in addition to the foregoing scale of compensation to the maritime Officers of the Company, this Court recommends that the Commanders and Officers of those ships whose contracts with the Company are unexpired be reasonably compensated for the non-performance of the remaining voyages—and that it be recommended to the Court of Directors to give such additional allowance as may be deemed reasonable to those who may be considered specially entitled thereto, and to submit the same to the General Court.'

"That the clause now quoted was not intended to apply to the Commanders and Officers who were excluded by the rule of time will be evident when it is recollected that upon the day in which the plan of the General Court was finally discussed, a letter, addressed to the Court of Proprietors by the Officers of the service excluded from compensation, was read, 'protesting against that part of the measure proposed for the adoption of the Court which limited the remedy to Officers employed since Aug., 1828;' and observing, 'that as a final measure it is partial in its effects, inasmuch as it limited compensation to those maritime servants who had had the good fortune to be employed since Aug., 1828.'

"The General Court having however now passed a resolution in the following terms:—'That the Court of Directors be requested to take into consideration and report upon the claims and cases of those maritime Officers whose interests are affected by the discontinuance of the Company's trade, and whom the Directors may be of opinion are, under the special and particular circumstances of their cases, entitled to compensation by way of pension or gratuity, although they may not have been in the actual service of the Company for five years previous to 28th Aug., 1833, the Directors in considering and reporting upon such cases to have regard to the 7th sec. of the Act 3rd and 4th William IV., cap. 58, and not to hold themselves bound by the rule of time alleged to have been adopted by the Court of Proprietors, as necessary to have been adhered to in awarding pensions or gratuities under such resolution.'

"The Court of Directors feel it necessary to call the particular attention of the proprietors to the Court's resolution of 1st July, 1835, proposing that pensions upon the scale of those allowed by the regulations of the Poplar fund should be assigned, not in the shape of compensation for prospective losses, but as the means of subsistence to such of the excluded claimants as were in straitened circumstances, and the Court now submit their decided opinion that this is the only mode in which, under existing circumstances, relief can with propriety be awarded. Should it be the pleasure of the General Court to adopt this opinion, it will be the duty of the Court of Directors to apply to the Board of Commissioners to reconsider the decision which they have passed, and to sanction the Court's proposal to the full extent.

"But the Court of Directors consider it to be their duty to add, that whilst they are sincerely anxious that such a measure of relief should be adopted in favour of those of the excluded Officers who are in straitened circumstances, they cannot be any parties to an extension of the plan of compensation, and they are further of opinion that if the plan should be extended, either by an enlargement of the rule of time, or by its total abrogation, it will not be possible, consistently with what has already been done by the General Court to deny compensation to any of those who, coming within the new rule, might subscribe the declaration."

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—It was expected in Paris that the trial of the last "category" of the prisoners connected with the procès d'Avril would be closed this day, and that Fieschi and his accomplices will appear at the bar of the Court of Peers in the early part of next week. In this case, the whole of the state trials, including the latter, will be probably gone through by the middle of February. The address has been adopted by the Chamber of Deputies by a majority of 179 in favour of ministers. But the event which has given rise to most excitement this week, is the retirement of M. Humann from the office of Minister of Finance.

SPAIN.—Letters from Vittoria, dated 4th inst., state that 20,000 men were being concentrated round that city. The plan of campaign is that towards the end of the present month a simultaneous movement should be made from Vittoria, Pampeluna, and St. Sebastian. On the 3rd Gen. Evans had a review of the Legion on the Castile side of the town. The British have suffered much from cold, and typhus fever has been raging in the hospital at Santander, and here also, but not to so great an extent. Desertion and want of money are abundant on both sides.

AUSTRIA.—Vienna, Jan. 9.—His Majesty's coronation at Prague, as King of Bohemia, has been officially proclaimed, and will definitively take place in the month of September next. Orders respecting it are already given, and the open letter of the king to the states of Bohemia and other countries united to that kingdom is shortly expected. It has been at the same time decided that the Court's voyage to Milan and Italy shall not take place this summer. A courier started yesterday for Clausenburg, entrusted with conveying to Archduke Ferdinand orders to return to this capital. The motive of this invitation is unknown. Some persons say that it is on account of the approaching opening of the Diet of Transylvania; others think that he is recalled for an important mission.—Suabian Mercury.

HANOVER.—The Duke of Cumberland, during his late visit to this city, honoured with his presence a supper, at which there were many respectable men of different classes. On the healths of the Duchess of Cumberland and of Prince George being drank, the Duke returned thanks in the following terms:—"You have drank to the health of my wife and of my child. The Duchess is a Hanoverian; she was born in Hanover, and set a high value on this dispensation of Providence, for she esteems and loves you and your fellow-citizens. I am not in the same case; yet I nevertheless belong to you. Hanoverian blood flows in my veins. From my fifteenth year, I received my education in this country, and cannot but look on Hanover as my native land. My son is therefore a Hanoverian both on the father's and the mother's side, and his love to Hanover is as faithful as mine. At all times, and now again, I have seen the most unequivocal proof of the firm attachment of the Hanoverians to the family of their princes, which are dear to my heart. I entertain towards you all the sentiments of my revered and august father, King George the Third, whose principles always have been, and will continue to be, the guide of my opinions and actions. In these principles I educate my son, to whom may a gracious God, as I have reason to hope, restore the light of his eyes. I shall continue to cherish these principles, and give you the assurance that it is my most earnest endeavour to educate him so that he may become a faithful and affectionate father to the country. With joy I am able to add, that I am now certain of success. I now drink to the health and happiness of all true Hanoverians."

SARDINIA.—A letter in Le Toulonnais of the 13th inst. states that the Sardinian fleet, regarding which there has been so much conjecture, was at Leghorn on 2d Jan. waiting the arrival of another frigate. It was to proceed first to Naples, then to Syracuse in Sicily, afterwards to Cagliari in Sardinia, and to return to Genoa after five or six months' navigation. The cause of the fitting out of this squadron is still involved in a certain degree of mystery. There are no late accounts from Sardinia; but if the report of the insurrection in that island were correct, and this fleet sent to put it down, it has taken rather a circuitous route to its destination. If, on the other hand, it was intended as a demonstration in favour of Don Carlos, we suppose a significant hint from the parties to the quadruple alliance has put that scheme out of the question.

NAPLES.—A rumour is prevalent that, upon the delivery of the Queen, there will be a general amnesty in favour of the persons condemned or exiled for political offences. This hope is eagerly and joyfully cherished by the different classes of society, as all were more or less affected by the events of 1820.

CARACCAS.—Letters and papers to the 6th December contain official despatches relative to the submission of General Monagas and other leaders of the rebels. This military insurrection, which was with difficulty suppressed, has rendered the maintenance of an armed force by the State very unpopular in Venezuela. The question of the utility of such a force has been much discussed, and appears to have been decided in the negative; for it is said that the Government have it in contemplation to propose the dismissal of the standing army, and the substitution in its stead of a militia, to be instituted on an impartial and comprehensive plan.

JAMAICA.—The last accounts state, that an order had been received from the Commissioners of Compensation in England, by the Commissioners here, stating that it was unnecessary for them to report on uncontested claims in consequence of which they were proceeding upon sent claims alone for that colony. This order would great[ly] diminish their labours, and considerably expedite a cl[ose] them.

The Court.

The King and Queen are in the enjoyment of p[erfect] health, and his Majesty's sisters are now convalescent. [The] dinner parties at the Pavilion, during the week, have [been] on rather a limited scale.

The health of the Princess Victoria is much improved [by] her visit to Ramsgate.

The Duchess of Cambridge has been seriously indisp[osed] at Hanover, but is now approaching to convalescence. [The] latest bulletin is exceedingly favourable.

The state apartments in St. James's Palace have [been] re-embellished, preparatory to the approaching le[vee] and drawing-rooms.

At Brighton, on the 16th, his Majesty in Council [de]livered the Great Seal to the Right Hon. Sir C. C. Pe[pys], whereupon the oath of Lord High Chancellor of G[reat] Britain was administered to him. The Rt. Hon. [Henry] Bickersteth was sworn of his Majesty's Privy Council, [and] appointed Master or Keeper of the Rolls and Record[s] Chancery. The King has been pleased to direct le[tters] patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the [dig]nity of a Baron of the United Kingdom of Great Br[itain] and Ireland unto the Right Hon. Sir C. C. Pepys, K[nt.] and to the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten, by [the] name, style, and title of Baron Cottenham, of Cotten[ham] Cambridge. Also granting the dignity of a Baroness o[f the] United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland to the [Hon.] Mary Elizabeth Lady Campbell, wife of Sir John Camp[bell] Knt. his Majesty's Attorney-General, and eldest daught[er of] the Right Hon. James Baron Abinger, by the name, [style] and title of Baroness Strotheden, of Cupar, Fife, and, at [her] decease, the dignity of a Baron of the said United King[dom] to the heirs male of the body of the said Mary Elizabeth [Lady] Campbell lawfully begotten by the said Sir John Camp[bell] by the name, style, and title of Baron Strathedeu, of Cu[par] in the county of Fife. Also granting the dignity of a B[aron] of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland [unto] the Right Hon. Henry Bickersteth, and the heirs mal[e of] his body lawfully begotten, by the name, style, and tit[le of] Baron Langdale, of Langdale, in the county of Westm[or]land.

The King has been pleased to direct letters paten[t to] pass under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom of G[reat] Britain and Ireland, nominating the Venerable Wil[liam] Grant Broughton, Archdeacon of New South Wales, to [be] Bishop of Australia.

The King has granted unto Capt. Sir John Fran[klin] R.N., permission that he may accept and wear the [Gold] cross of the Order of the Redeemer, which his Maj[esty] Otho, King of Greece, has conferred upon him, in ap[pro]bation of his services at Patras, while commanding [the] ship Rainbow.

Theatres.

ADELPHI.—A new drama in THREE ACTS, with a TIT[LE] ONE IN, from the pen of Mr. Soane, called Luke Somers was produced at this theatre on Monday evening, [but] scarcely sufficient effect to keep the audience awake. [It] one of those dull tedious productions, under the very def[ini]nomination of a dramatic piece, which in this scribbl[ing] age are not unfrequently obtruded on public notice at [the] places as Sadler's Wells, but to receive an unequiv[ocal] sentence of condemnation, and then relapse to the obli[vion] from which it had been so injudiciously dragged forth. [I] never remember to have seen a piece in which the want [of] continuous fable and united action was more apparent [than] the THING (we cannot call it a drama) is altogether parti[cu]larly trashy and feeble—a regular piece of patch-work, [full] of CARPENTERS' SCENES, to allow time for the arrangem[ent] of the stage for the production of EFFECTS, all of wh[ich] proved OBJECTS, from the first scene to the denouem[ent] which is also very badly managed. There is no hero to [the] piece—no one to whom the slightest interest is attached [in] two scenes in succession. The humbug about the "Su[b]stitution of the thirteen columns!" the "Appearance of [the] Corpse Light!!" and "SUPPOSED (a good word that 'su[p]posed') flaunt of the Manilla Dog!!!" is too contempt[ible] even to be practised at Bartholemew Fair. The gl[o]ssy cotton of Queen Anne into Whitehaven, in which [Mr.] Davis's "splendid stud!" consisting of four old bays [and] for common cabs, and one tolerably decent-looking w[hite] charger were introduced, was a decided failure—a nuisan[ce] and a great inconvenience on so small a stage as [the] Adelphi. The only person entitled to the smallest shar[e of] praise was Mr. Webster, who sustained the part of Sci[pio] a black sailor.

QUEEN'S.—Mr. Thompson made his debut at this tha[tre] on Monday evening as Robert Macaire, in the drama The Two Murderers, and was very favourably received house crowded to excess in every part. The best acted art in this piece was the Strop of Oxberry. The comedy Is She a Woman? is an established favourite, in which e recommend our friends to witness the clever acting of Mrs. Nisbett: she was never more at home then in the haracter of Lady Caroline Butler. We were glad to see he private boxes well filled. The Turkish Ambassador od suite are constant frequenters. The Countess of Blesington and Count D'Orsay have had a peep at The Flowers f Loveliness. Good novelties. Mrs. Nisbett and the Queen's will be the St. James's theatre. Miss J. Mordaunt advancing in public estimation at a rare pace. On Thurs. ay evening a new burletta in two acts, called The Twins, Paul and Philip, was produced, and proved very successful. The piece is a translation from the French, and is he work of Messrs. Oxberry and Laurent, jun. Mr. xberry has the entire weight of the piece on his shoulders, at of personating both twins.

STRAND.—We looked in here on Tuesday evening, and lad enough we were to get out again. We understand he entertainments were put forth merely as a feeler, to ascertain if there would be any interference from a certain igh quarter. With the exception of Mr. Hughes and Mrs. Matthews, we suppose the rest of the company paid for being allowed to exhibit themselves in public, and (Heaven ave the mark!) a pretty exhibition it was. If Mr. Macarren continues as he has commenced, he must pay people visit his theatre. We hope he will profit by this little nt, and we shall be happy to give him our warmest support if he merits it. Since writing the above, we find that e Theatre has terminated its performances for the present, consequence of a notice from the Lord Chamberlain's fice. Some of the performers have petitioned to be permitted to perform for a month.

ST. JAMES'S.—We were in hopes that our notice of this autiful theatre would have been of a more favourable ture than that we gave in our last number; but we greatly prehend that Braham is determined to supply us with undant matter for just and severe censure. On Monday new burlesque, called Broten's Horse, was played for the st time at this theatre, and if the proprietor possessed the ust good taste he would not have allowed it to be repeated. We suppose this wretched abortion is intended as a parody some piece which has been played, or is now playing, one of our theatres, perhaps The Old and Young Stager, Ride a Cock-Horse, produced at the Lyceum, if not, "give it up," for it is not worth guessing about. To ate either our time or our paper in dilating on the demerits of this vile trash, would be to offer an unpardonable insult to our readers as Braham has to the public in inging it forward. We will content ourselves with ating that a production more completely destitute of the ast glimmering of human intellect never appeared in an stic shape. Every incident by which any clue to the eaning of this piece might be obtained has most carefully en kept out of sight, and every character most effectually ecured by the clouds of insipidity. No single incident, no e effective scene, no point or humour in the dialogue, no dividual gleam of brilliancy, for once intrude to enlighten general gloom and dulness of Braham's Ass. Indeed, verily believe that one-half of the audience would have len asleep if they had not been kept awake by the indignant hootings of the other half. It is disgraceful to Braham thrust the new good performers he has got into such a vile oduction, which was completely and deservedly damned its first representation. The St. James's, we fear, is sinking fast to the lowest level. We are informed that Broten's orse bolted on Thursday.

THE ATTEMPT TO ASSASSINATE THE BRITISH RESIDENT AND HIS SUITE AT THE COURT OF JYPORE.

[THE following extract of a private letter throws more ht on the Jypore murder than anything that has appeared.—ED.]

"You have doubtless learnt from the papers of the assination of William Fraser, the Delhi Commissioner. It is believed the petty Nawaub of Ferozpore employed the assassin. He is to take his l, and if guilty will, I hope, be very unceremoniously hung. You will have heard of the attempt assassinate Alves, and the deliberate murder of e of his assistants, young Blake, of the Civil rvice at Jypore. Joota Ram, the Minister, was paramour of the Ranee, who kept the reins of vernment in her hands, though the boy, the Rajah, was age. She died, and it is believed that, to keep in wer, Joota Ram poisoned the Rajah her son. He s in all things opposed to us, and it was our interest l desire to see him ousted; but the people could not, would not, depose him. At last Alves was ordered to him, that if he quietly resigned the power that he sed we would guarantee his life and property, in the e way we guaranteed those of the Minister of Oode, late Aga Meer. He consented and resigned, and we orted him off. We did not know that there were any unds to believe him guilty of poisoning his master, nor are there sufficient, perhaps. The rabble of Jypore, incited, no doubt, by the Court and new Minister of their own choosing, demanded his surrender for sacrifice. Government would not give him up. Alves, with his assistants, Capt. Ludlow, Cornet Macnaghten, and Blake, went to visit the widow of the deceased Rajah and her son, who is only a few months old. On leaving the palace he was cut down while mounting the elephant, and got three severe cuts in the head and shoulder before they could seize the assassin. He was put into his palanquin, and, accompanied by Ludlow and Macnaghten, got back to the Residency safe. Blake remained behind to see the assassin safely delivered over to the Court. He mounted his elephant too late: followed by the armed mob he was repeatedly wounded, and at last took shelter in a temple, whence he was dragged and deliberately murdered. They had always gone in this way with only few followers, trusting for protection to the honour of men who had never any. Their few followers were almost all murdered. The Nusseerabad troops made a forced march to Jypore, and all who survived were soon safe. Alves may now do what he likes: the whole army of India is at his disposal to avenge this foul murder. He wants no quality that the occasion and high station require; but he may be less severe than he would had the person assaulted first been any officer but himself. Were I in his place, poor Blake's spirit should sleep in peace, for his murder should be deeply revenged. Upon its being so depends our very existence in India, and if we do not revenge it by the extinction of the state of Jypore as a principality, we basely and voluntarily descend from the high station which the welfare of India requires that we should occupy, as much as our own interests do, and we become too contemptible for obedience or respect."

BREVET CAPTAIN KEIGHTLEY.

JACK KEIGHTLEY came to Hindostan in hopes of quick promotion,
Or he had ne'er become "Cadet" and cross'd th' Atlantic Ocean,
Though Brevet rank he had obtained, he grieved, and very rightly,
That he was only in his corps still plain Lieutenant Keightley.

Eighteen long years he justly deemed a pretty decent time, Sir,
For him to "rub it out," as "Snh," in such a fatal clime, Sir,
And as for Brevet rank, he said, he valued it but lightly,
As it did not increase the pay of Brevet Captain Keightley.

Though some agreed, such rank indeed was worthy of procession,
Because it gave them consequence, and check'd dire supersession,
But "consequence," though it might make a soldier march more sprightly,
Would never pay the mess account of Brevet Captain Keightley.

'Tis true he knew, allowed it too, that officers should feel, Sir,
An ardent love of enterprise and military zeal, Sir;
But then the "Sun" so fiercely shone, and cast its rays so brightly,
'Twas hot enough to try the zeal of better men than Keightley.

At last his grief gained some relief, the Company he prais—ed,
He dreamt one night, to his delight, four regiments would be rais—ed,
And while he thus enjoyed the dream a ghost walked up politely,
And said, "My boy, I give you joy, you're now full Captain Keightley!"

Next morning he, brimful of glee, told all the corps his vision,
Though he was apprehensive they might turn it to derision!
But picture his surprise to find that all of them had nightly,
For many months past, dreamt the same as Brevet Captain Keightley.

He made them throw his old Chako and Raggies all away, Sir,
And ordered coats with epaulettes, to make the more display, Sir,
His Wellingtone and pantaloons were made to look so slightly,
That many scarcely could believe 'twas Brevet Captain Keightley.

When at the mess he oft would press the Subalterns to sing, Sir,
And then would give, with three times three, "the Company and King," Sir, Whilst all the corps, "three regiments more," would chaunt in chorus slightly,
And get so fou they scarcely knew themselves from Captain Keightley.

Madeira, that plebeian wine, he scarcely deigned to know, Sir,
And nothing else would now go down but champagne and Margot, Sir,
His half starved tattoos were replaced by horses far more sprightly,
For Arabs were the only steeds would suit full Captain Keightley.

Too soon, alas! it came to pass his joys turned to disasters,
For now he dreamt, enraged he saw his Honourable Masters,
Who said to him with looks so grim, whilst wagging him most tightly,
"Do you suppose we'll raise new corps to please Lieutenant Keightley?"

The Chairman then said, "Can you think that we shall be content, Sir,
If we and the Proprietors receive not ten per cent., Sir?
'Twould be a pretty joke," said he, with head stuck quite uprightly;
"Were we to lose our dividends to serve Lieutenant Keightley."

They scarce had spoke when he awoke, in terrible confusion,
To find his former dream a hoax and nothing but delusion,
He talked no more of "rank or corps," but got besotted nightly,
And then would sob o'er brandy-shrub, poor Brevet Captain Keightley!

For weeks he could not eat a bit, his stomach grew so weak, Sir,
Nor could he chew a tender stew, and far less "bubble and squeak, Sir,
His looks became cadaverous, his conversation flighty,
You'd almost thought he'd been the ghost of poor Lieutenant Keightley.

E'en on parade, where he was wont so active to appear, Sir,
He now could scarcely ascertain the front rank from the rear, Sir,
And as to the manœuvring he once could do so rightly,
Your squares and columns were the same to Brevet Captain Keightley.

Most happy had it ended here, and stopped the dismal story,
He might have lived to gain renown and military glory,
But sick of "Hope" he tied a rope around his neck so lightly,
It strangled him: and death so grim walked off with Captain Keightley, Oh! poor Keightley, Brevet Captain Keightley.

Tales of a Voyager to the Arctic Ocean.—The present perilous situation of our countrymen ice-bound in the northern seas, has given renewed interest to this work, which narrates, with great pathos and power, the perils and pursuits of mariners in those fearful regions, the geography and natural phenomena of a wonderful and unfrequented part of the globe, where every object is a marvel and a mystery. The author, who is a friend of Captain Sparrsby, has often been a voyager in the scenes he so forcibly describes. Indeed, of the few modern writers who have successfully dilineated the lives, pursuits, and eccentricities, of seamen, the author of these admirable tales is perhaps the most remarkable, not even excepting Capt. Marryat. While, at one moment, the various mysteries and secrets of the mighty deep are unfolded with awful effect, at another, the reader is amused to his heart's content with the playful humour of the writer, which is of the spirit and quality of Washington Irving, combined with incomparably more force and vivacity. We may add, what we believe is not generally known, that the popular drama of the "Wreck Ashore," and several others, have been taken from this most interesting work, which we are glad to observe is now, like so many other excellent ones, published in three cheap four shilling volumes.

The attention of the members of the Naval and Military professions is called to the following copy of a letter, which has been transmitted to Mr. George Franks, Surgeon, 90, Blackfriar's-road, the proprietor of "Franks' Specific Solution of Copaiba," from R. W. Meade, Esq. late Col. Com. Rifle Brigade Columbian Service, and formerly Capt. in H.M.'s 13th Lt. Dragoons:—"Sir—Having retired from active life, I feel a strong repugnance against appearing before the public in any character, but my reluctance has been overcome by a sense of the duty I owe to my fellow beings, and the gratitude I feel towards you. Having served many years in H.M.'s army in India, and subsequently in the Columbian Forces, under the gallant but ill requited Bolivar, I contracted in those hot climates a disease, which has for years inflicted on me the most poignant sufferings; since, however, I have been fortunate enough to obtain an introduction to you, and having used your 'Solution of Copaiba,' a few times, I have been relieved beyond my most sanguine expectations, and am now entirely free from pain, or the obstructions to which I was so many years a victim.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL, unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in curl under the different varieties of atmosphere. Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO., Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose heir would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and art is there well known to succeed in outrivalling even the far-famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found undeviatingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if lost from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY, sustain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to dye Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

ORIENTAL OIL DOES NOT RENDER THE HAIR GREASY, and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances misnamed Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minute as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby. thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury; and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff combs, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3*s.* 6*d.*, 6*s.* 6*d.*, and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 12*s.* each

R. Hamilton and Co., 2, Moore-lane, Dublin.

Bankers.—The Bank of Ireland; the Provincial Bank of Ireland; Messrs Ladbroke and Co., Bank Buildings; the Northern and Central Bank of England; Messrs. Attwood, Birmingham.

Engineers.—John M'Neill, 2, Parliament-street, Westminster; William Bald, Dublin.

This Company has been formed with a view to facilitate the communication between this country and America by means of steam.

The Directors have already proceeded so far in obtaining a charter from the Crown as to have got it signed by the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. It has been in the usual manner transmitted to London for His Majesty's sign manual, which will be affixed as soon as the subscription list of the Company shall have been to a reasonable extent completed.

The most eligible port on the west coast of Ireland has been selected for a steam-packet station, viz. Birturbuy Bay, in the county of Galway, from whence it is proposed to carry a railroad in a direct line through Athlone to Dublin. The distance is only 110 miles, and the line of country presents unusual facilities for the formation of a rail road, the country being level and containing abundance of materials necessary for the construction of the work. The average inclination throughout the whole line is 1 in 672, and is obtained without great embankments or deep cuttings, and will be entirely free from tunnels and viaducts.

The Directors have to announce, that they have an offer of as much land as will suffice for 20 miles of the rail road, the ground requisite for wharfs, docks, and stores, at 100 acres of building ground on the margin of Birturbuy Bay, for ever at a peppercorn rent, and likewise the unanimous approval of all the landowners along the line.

Proprietors of 5 shares will be entitled to a free passage in the Company's vessels between Liverpool and Dublin; Proprietors of 15 shares to a free passage on the rail-road; Proprietors of 30 shares to a free passage in the Company's vessels between America and Birturbuy; and Proprietors of 10 shares will be entitled to a reduction of 10 per cent. on the current freights by the steam vessels, and the charges for the carriage of goods by the railroad.

Ten thousand shares have been reserved, by special agreement, for America.

Subscribers will not be liable for more than a deposit of £1 per share (which must be paid on the allocation of the share,) until the act of Parliament for constructing the rail road is obtained; nor will they afterwards be responsible for more than the amount of their respective shares, which will be called for by instalments, not exceeding £5 per share at any one time, and at intervals of not less than two months between each call.

Prospectuses, fully detailing the plans and objects of the undertaking, may be had on application to the Bankers, Solicitors, and Engineers of the Company, in London and Dublin; at the offices of the Company, 31, New Broad-street, London, and 51, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin; Messrs. Johnston and Co., Bush-lane; J. Bateman, 8, Old Church-street, Paddington; Thos. Cardwell, Manchester; and John Davis, 2, Rumford-place, Liverpool, by all of whom applications for shares, under seal, and endorsed "British and American Intercourse Company," will be received.

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.

FAMILIES in want of really good Servants of every description, both Male and Female, will decidedly find their interest better consulted, and their object much sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, No. 134, Oxford-street, near Holles-street, established in 1830, than through the adoption of any other method whatever; as Domestics, with good characters, are in waiting to be hired from 10 to 5 o'clock.

Many persons are prejudiced against an Establishment for Hiring Servants; but if the Servant possess a good character, it certainly is perfect nonsense to suppose that it is injured by the readiest method having been taken to procure a situation.

N.B. It will be particularly advantageous to send for a Prospectus.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND

BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and totally eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:—"36, Upper Gunstreet, Spitalfields.—Sir,—Being troubled dreadfully with Corns for some years, and at times unable to walk without assistance, when I heard of your Corn Solvent, and, extraordinary to relate, after using one half a bottle, my Corns were entirely removed, and have never troubled me since, which is now nearly four years. ## STIRLINGREES' ESSENCE.—Its vast and increasing sale, from the recommendation of the highest Medical characters, as well as those who have experienced its salubrious and beneficial effects, proves its great success and superiority over every other preparation, in being the most safe and effectual remedy ever discovered for the Cure of Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Seminal Weakness, Strictures, Fluor Albus, or Whites, Pains in the Loins, Kidneys, Lumbago, Gravel, Irritation of the Bladder, Urethra, and every Disease incident to the Sexual and Urinary Organs, frequently performing a perfect cure in the short space of three or four days. It contains, in a concentrated state, all the efficacious parts of the Cubeb, chemically combined with Sarsaparilla and other choice alteratives, which renders it invaluable to those afflicted with secondary Syphilitic Symptoms, Pains of the Bones, Ulcers, Pimples, Blotches, Scorbutic Eruptions, Glandular Swellings, and all diseases arising from a tainted and impure state of the blood. In cases of Debility, Want of Power, both Local and General, Tabes Dorsalis, Diabetes, Wasting Impotence, and Nervous Depression of Spirits it has been taken with the most decided benefit. A regular perseverance in its use has invariably been found to improve the appetite, assist the digestive powers, and give muscular strength, energy, and vigorous health to the whole system. The most delicate female may take it with perfect safety. It is an excellent restorative after the constitution has been weakened or injured by mercurial or from any other cause.

YOLAND'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION is the most wonderful Medicine ever discovered by man, for the cure of GONORRHŒA, GLEETS, STRICTURES, WHITES, Pains in the Loins, Affections of the Kidneys, Gravel, Irritation of the Urethra or Bladder, and for all Urinary Diseases in both sexes.—This Medicine is patronised, prescribed, recommended, and sanctioned by the Most Eminent of the Faculty, not only in England but on the Continent; and stated by them, from experience, to be the only Medicine that can be relied on for the cure of these complaints, and they invariably resort to it when their own remedies fail.

YOLAND'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION cures both sexes at all times sooner than any other known remedy, with the most triumphant success, after every Medicine of the present day has proved ineffectual, so that this justly celebrated specific has arrived at the acme of perfection, surpassing every thing of the kind that ever bore the name of medicine, frequently curing some of these serious diseases in a few hours. Those who have suffered from any of the above diseases for many years (such as strictures, &c.) will find upon taking this medicine for a short time, that, if not entirely cured, they will no longer feel inconvenience from the trifling complaint that remains.

References to respectable Surgeons, who are in the habit of prescribing this medicine extensively, will be given on application to the Proprietor's Agents.

WE beg to direct the attention of our readers to the following communication addressed to A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, Hatton Garden, London.

GENTLEMAN,—I take the earliest opportunity of relating the surprising virtues of your Macassar Oil on two of my children, one seven, the other nine years of age—their hair came off on several parts of their heads, in patches the size of half-a-crown, and continued so. Alarmed at this circumstance, as there was no appearance of its coming again, I tried several compositions, &c. without effect; when a lady, who had witnessed the extraordinary qualities of your Oil, entreated me to try it, which I did; and, after using four bottles, their Hair was completely recovered. You have liberty to refer any one to

Your obedient Servant,

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE

SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Houilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesman have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 72, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sams, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

EXERCISES for LADIES; calculated to preserve and improve Beauty, and to prevent and correct Personal Defects Inseparable from constrained or careless habits; founded on Physiological principles. By DONALD WALKER.

The work describes and illustrates, by numerous drawings, the right and wrong positions in Standing, Sitting, Writing, Drawing, Guitar-playing, Harp-playing, Riding, Tying in Bed, &c., and the Deformities which these wrong positions cause; and it gives all the best Exercises to prevent or to correct them, particularly the new and beautiful Indian Sequire Exercise, for the first time published, as well as ample directions as to Walking, Dancing, Gesture, and Deportment.

Medical Testimonials.—Dr. Birkbeck, in a letter to the Author, which is prefixed to the work at length, says, "With your general views regarding female development, which are clear and well expressed, I thoroughly agree. You have contributed materially, I am persuaded, to prevent the occurrence of unequal enlargement of muscular parts, and the still more serious deviations which occur when the spinal nerves are deranged. The means which you have proposed for the correction of such casualties when they do occur are excellent, and will, I trust, quickly supersede the use of all those inconsistent and unscientific expedients which, under the pretext of producing support and extension, augment the essential cause of deformity."—Dr. Copland says, "I esteem the exercises described to be the best calculated of any means that have come to my knowledge to prevent deformity, to remedy it in most cases, and to promote a healthy physical development."

Extract from the Spectator, Jan. 9, 1836.—"Mr. Walker, as author of a popular account of British Manly Exercises, comes recommended for his knowledge of the subject. His 'Exercises for Ladies' is more valuable, and calculated to be infinitely more useful; for it is not confined to exercises merely, but regulates the motions of the limbs in action, the position of the body in repose, and, in short, the whole department. * * Mr. Walker's book deserves a place in every family library. Attention to his suggestions would make many a lovely girl more beautiful, and, what is of no small moment, more comfortable to herself. If people look ungainly in going through the streets, how much more so must they appear in entering a room full of company, or joining a promenade."

CAVALRY.

1st Drags.—One field officer and squadron marched from Newbury to Stradbally on 20th inst. to attend a meeting, and return when no longer required.

10th Hussars—Major Sir W. Scott has arrived in Dublin. Capt. Wathen's troop from Cahir has relieved Capt. Wood's troop on detachment at Clonmel, when the latter joined head-quarters. Lieut. Kay, from head-quarters, has joined Capt. Wakefield's troop in Limerick garrison; Lieut. Carrington has leave to England.

INFANTRY.

1st Foot, 1st Batt.—The depot from Castlebar, will join head-quarters in Cork Barracks next week. The magistrates of Castlebar have taken informations against four men for a violent assault upon two soldiers. Two comps. moved from Cork to Templemore on 28th inst. to arrive on 3d Feb.; one and half comp. on 27th inst. to arrive on 4th Feb.; one and half and head quarters on 28th, to arrive on 5th Feb.; and one comp. on 29th, to arrive on 6th Feb.

1st Foot, 2d Batt.—Maj.-Gen. Sir E. Blakeney, accompanied by Col. Cuyler, Mil. Sec., was received by Col. Wetherall, at Enniskillan, when the General inspected the reg. on Sunday, and was much pleased at their soldier-like appearance.

7th—Col. Farquharson and the officers of the 7th Fusiliers gave an elegant farewell ball on the evening of 6th Jan., at Malta, prior to their departure for England, which was attended by the Governor and military Staff, naval Commander-in-Chief and superior officers, heads of civil departments, &c. &c. The splendid barracks were most tastefully decorated for the occasion, and the entertainment conducted and kept up with great spirit and liberality until daylight of the following day

60th—Capt. Hamilton has left Cluo Castle for England, on leave.

69th—Ensign Moore has been appointed to the Staff as Fort Adjutant at Dominica, v. Lieut. Dalrymple, Royals. Major Noel Hill has taken the command of the Depot at Sheerness.

77th—Capt William Clerke having been acquitted of the charges preferred against him, and been released from arrest, has relieved Capt. Nelley in command of the companies of this regt. stationed in Chasler Castle. The latter officer returns to Haydock.

79th—Serj. Dalgleish, missing since Nov., was found dead near Quebec with a pistol ball in his head, it is thought fired by his own hand in a state of mental derangement.

85th—The second division (three and half comps.) embark at Dublin on 22nd inst. on board the Innisfail steamer, for Cork, and the remaining division (three and half comps.) and head-quarters embarked on 23d inst. on board the Jupiter steamer, for the same destination.

86th—The service cos. expect in the course of a few months to be ordered to Barbadoes; they, with the 19th, are now the two first regs. for home from the West Indies on the embarkation of the 25th reg.

94th—The officers have issued cards for a ball and supper party, at the New Barracks, Limerick, on Tuesday evening, 9th Feb. Lieut. Whitworth has joined from leave. A soldier belonging to the detachment at Kilrush, was last week sent to head-quarters. His conduct on the preceding night had been outrageous; having loaded his musket, he threatened to shoot the first that approached him, and repeatedly swore that he would take Capt. Tulloch's life.

Rifle Brigade, 1st Batt.—The Depot Paymastership at Jersey is vacant by the death of First Lieut. Flamsteed.

Royal Artillery.—The appointment of Serjeant-Major M'Pherson to be Lieut. in the Riding Establishment, has given much satisfaction; but it is to be lamented that it will not benefit the troop, as a Serjeant, it is understood, from the 5th batt. is to fill up the vacancy, thus stepping over the heads of many deserving Non-Com.'s, who joined the school so far back as the period of breaking up the Artillery Drivar corps, and who naturally looked forward for this promotion. As this will be (if it takes place) the second instance of a Batt. Serj. having been brought into the troop, the Serj.-Maj. previous to Lieut. M'Pherson being so appointed from the Horse Brigade, it is to be hoped that the Master-General, with his usual justice, will take the hardship of the case into consideration, and not disappoint the ambition of tried and deserving men. It may be further urged, that the "riders" of this troop are not artillerymen, so that they cannot look for promotion in the Horse Brigade, which may in a measure account for the impropriety of conduct of some two or three of the privates, as they do not perceive any certain reward for their ability and behaviour. Several brigades of field batteries were ordered out to Woolwich Common on Monday and Tuesday, that Col. Powers might inspect and report upon their state of progress in the drill, when their efficiency from the short time they have been in the batteries gave the Colonel much satisfaction, and excited his commendation.—The general opinion respecting the occurrence of the sentry being fired at in the arsenal last week, is that it was an attempt to land contraband goods in the marsh grounds, as a boat was found adrift among the reeds on the banks of the marshes.

RTY-EIGHTH, OR NORTHAMPTONSHIRE REGIMENT.—We pleasure in laying before our readers two extracts, complimentary to this gallant regimeot. The first n a work just published by Lieut.-Col. Gurwood, and econd from Colonel Napier's History of the Peninsular

Mem. of the Battle of Talavera, July 28th, 1809.

The advance of the Guards, to the extent to which it arried, was nearly fatal to us, and the battle was cersaved by the advance, position, and steady conduct of 8th Regiment, upon which General Sherbrooke's di-formed again. (Signed)
" ARTHUR WELLESLEY."

vol. 2d of Colonel Napier, is the following, on the battle;—

he centre of the British line was absolutely broken, he fate of the day seemed to incline in favour of the h, when suddenly Colonel Donelan, with the 48th nent, was seen advancing through the midst of the dered masses. At first, it seemed as if this regiment be carried away by the retiring crowds, but wheeling by companies, it let them pass through the intervals, suming its proud and beautiful line, marched against ght of the pursuing columns, and plied them with a ctive musketry, and closed upon them with such a nd regular pace, that the forward movement of the h was checked—the Guards and the Germans immey rallied—and a brigade of light cavalry came up from econd line."

inserting these extracts, we may also make known early two hundred Northamptonshire men were servthe ranks of the 48th on that memorable day; they olunteered from the Northamptonshire militia, a short before. We hear the regiment has been successful in ting since its arrival at Weedon, in October, and beaving the county, it is likely to be complete.
e-Admiral Sir Peter Halkett, K.C.B., returned to dience of his Majesty, previous to sailing in the Mel-

PORTSMOUTH, Jan. 29.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Saturday, Jan. 23—The Romney troop-ship, Mr. J. Wood Master and Commander, arrived at Spithead on Saturday morning from the Cape of Good Hope, but as it blew a gale of wind nearly the whole of the day, it was not until late in the evening that she could communicate with the Port Admiral. The Romney had a passage of only 42 days from the Cape, and has brought a number of invalid soldiers and seamen. It was intended that part of the 98th reg. should have returned to England in her, but the Gov.-Geo., Sir B. D'Urban, did not consider it expedient at present to reduce the military force. The Romney is in a bad leaky state, and will probably require extensive repairs; she is now in harbour preparing to be taken into dock. Monday—The Tartarus steamer, Lieut. James, on his way to Falmouth to take the next Mediterranean mail, put into Spithead, and was instantly put in requisition, being employed to tow the Romney into, and the Bristol troop and freight ship out of, harbour. The Tartarus afterwards proceeded to the westward. Tuesday—The Racer did not succeed in getting clear of the island until this day. The Seaflower and Cracker made an attempt to get to their stations off Jersey, but were compelled to put back, owing to bad weather. The Stakesby, Lieut. Ward, arrived from the eastward, on her way to Cork to embark the 14th reg. for a passage to Barbadoes. Thursday—The Parmelia transport arrived from Cork, and ran into harbour; she is taking in victualling stores. The Numa transport arrived from Ascension with invalid seamen from the ships on the Cape station; she quitted 14 days after the Romney, but has not any news. The Erebus is again ordered to be got ready. A party of riggers and convicts have been hard at work for the last three days, and she is now fit to proceed to the eastward, so soon as a steamer arrives to tow her thither. The Melville is getting ready with great expedition; in consequence of the number of seamen which have been entered, her topmasts have been got up, and a quantity of stores shipped, and she will be hauled out of the basin next spring tides. Lieut. Harris has been ordered to Plymouth to open a rendezvous for seamen to complete her complement. Capt. Gillespie, Second Lieut. Daniel, and a reduced party of non-com missioned officers and private marines embarked on Tuesday morning. The Speedy cutter, Lieut. Douglas, pitched so deep in the gale of Saturday, that her bowsprit was carried away by getting under the chain-cable, and she run into harbour to be refitted. Ships in port—Bristol, Stakesby, and Numa transports at Spithead. In harbour—Britannia, Melville, Romney, Seaflower, Speedy, Cracker, Parmelia transport.

Sheerness, Jan. 29.—(From our own Correspondent.) Wednesday, 27—The Messenger, steamer, arrived with the Express packet from Woolwich. Thursday, 28—The Vestal, Capt. Jones, and Alert packet, Lieut.-Com. Nurrington, sailed to the westward in company with the Messenger, steamer. Friday, 29—Messenger, steamer, returned to Sheerness.

Gibraltar, Jan. 19.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Earl Moira, transport, with the remaining companies of the 92d reg., remains in the Bay, wind bound, destined for Malta, to relieve the 7th Fusiliers, who are on their way home. The Pluto, steam-vessel, Lieut. Duffill, will leave to-morrow, for Falmouth, with the mails; and the surveying vessel Mastiff, Lieut. Graves, which arrived yesterday from Malta, will sail immediately for Tangiers and Portsmouth. Passengers by the latter:—Lieut. Owen Stanley, of the Caledonia, and Lieut.-Com. Hill, of the Alban. The only other ship of war here is the Jaseur, Com. Hackett. Everything is quiet in this part of the country, and the communication open. The regs. composing the garrison are, the 47th, 59th, 60th, 68th, and 70th, with detachments of Artillery and Engineers; and, at Malta, the 5th, 53d, a batt. of 60th, and 92d.

We have accounts from Jamaica to 16th Dec. The Comus sailed from Jamaica on 10th Dec., on a cruise. Pickle on 8th for Nassau; Wasp on 2d for Vera Cruz; and Meteor 30th Nov. for St. Thomas's. The Dee had also sailed for St. Thomas, from which she was to return to Jamaica. The Skipjack schooner arrived at Jamaica on 13th Dec., and the Gannet on the 2d, from Honduras.

The Romney, troop-ship, Mr. J. Wood, Master, arrived at Portsmouth on the 23d, during a heavy gale. She is from the Cape of Good Hope, and has been forty-seven days on her passage, and brings information that the Caffres were, at the time of her sailing, perfectly quiet, and evinced every disposition to keep the peace to which they had bound themselves. Still, however, it was not deemed prudent to send away the 98th reg., although the 27th had been conveyed out in the Romney for the purpose of relieving it. The Romney brings home therefore only returned naval and ordnance stores, with a few officers and their families, and invalids, from the garrison and squadron; the invalids are from the 72nd and 75th regts. The Romney has been for the last four months in a series of bad weather, and on her voyage out was driven into Algoa Bay with ten feet water in her hold, after having had her chain pumps constantly going for fifteen days; even at Ascension the rollers had done more mischief than had been witnessed since we had garrisoned the Island; the Pier and the Turtle Ponds had been much damaged; and the Romney was prevented for three days from landing a supply of stores and live stock.—The Lynx and Forester, brigs of war, and the Neuha transport, were left there. The Romney spoke on 15th Jan. the Samuel Winter, Rodger, Master, all well, bound for Charleston, lat. 40. 1. N., long. 17. 30. W.

Plymouth, Jan. 28.—The Prince Regent transport arrived on Tuesday morning from Cork, and came into Harbour in the forenoon, having on board invalided troops of the 36th Regt. to be landed at Plymouth, those of the 69th at the Nore, 65th and 76th at Gravesend; and some Artillery at Woolwich. She touched the rocks near Devil's Point coming in, owing to a sudden calm. The Pluto steam vessel, Lieut. Duffil, arrived yesterday from the Mediterranean, and lay to in the Sound under quarantine, and subsequently proceeded for Falmouth. The Belleisle, 74, was towed down the Harbour from her moorings yesterday, by the Tartarus steam vessel, Lieut. James, in order to be fitted as a demonstration ship, instead of the Kent. Fifty more labourers are to be hired in the Dock Yard, giving preference to those who have been reduced from that establishment. The whole establishment are in future to work Saturday mornings, which will add to the mechanic's weekly stipend, and forward those ships which are progressing towards completion. In Hamoaze—Royal Adelaide, Harpy, Tartarus steam vessel, Falmouth lighter, and Prince Regent transport.

Government is becoming sensible of the relative position of Engineers on board steamers; we understand that they are, in future, to be included in the return of officers, and to have charge of those stores belonging to their department.

Our readers will be glad to perceive that the Jupiter, having Lord Auckland and suite on board, arrived all well, at Rio Janeiro, on the 17th of November, and proceeded on the 21st of the same month for the Cape.

Mr. King, who accompanied Capt. Back on his recent expedition in search of Capt. Sir John Ross and party, has put forth a proposal for fitting out a new expedition, for the discovery of the North West Passage, and volunteered the undertaking, if one thousand pounds are subscribed to purchase the necessary outfit. His proposal does not appear to be countenanced by government; and although this, or any other undertaking, is eligible to individuals, we think that, should an expedition be fitted out for such a purpose, the hope of success might be more reasonably indulged, if the command was bestowed on some officer who had gained sufficient experience in these regions to meet the various difficulties which no instructions, however minute, or plan, however well digested, can contemplate, and which must be encountered and overcome by the skill and judgment of the Commander. We think Capt. James Clarke Ross the officer best calculated for this service. He has youth and energy in his favour, and more experience, perhaps, than any one living, having, as we have before said, accompanied every expedition which has been fitted out for this perilous purpose, and on all occasions displayed in an eminent degree, the qualities required for such an undertaking. We should imagine that the public, and particularly his companions, would have more confidence in such a Commander than in a novice, and we say this without any disrespect to Mr. King, of whom we know nothing, and whose enterprising spirit is well worthy of commendation.

Firefly st.-v., Lieut. Baldock, has been hauled into the basin at Woolwich, and was paid off on Friday last, as she requires extensive repairs.

Alban st.-v., Mr. Brown, Commander, has been taken into the basin at Woolwich, and will be paid off to-morrow (Friday).

Express, hg. barque, rigged for Packet Service, has been splendidly painted, and fitted at Woolwich. Part of the Pandora's crew were sent up in the Messenger, which towed the Express on Wednesday to Sheerness, where the late lieutenant of the Pandora will take the command.

Spitfire st.-v., Lieut. Kennedy, is in dock at Woolwich, but it is expected she will take her departure next week for Falmouth, to proceed to the West India Station.

Captain Richard's Company of Royal Marines, doing duty at Deptford Victualling and Dock Yards, were relieved by a similar number from Woolwich, and the following officers: Capt. Peebles; 1st Lieutenant, Wright, 2d Lieutenants, Berkhouse, Snow, Harrington, and Kennedy.

The Albion, 74, is ordered to be broken up by contract in Deptford Dock-yard.

The Alert packet has left Chatham for Sheerness and Falmouth; the Terror, bomb, is docked at Chatham, to be fitted for discovery service.

The Cove, Capt. J. C. Ross, reached Longhope Sound, Orkney, 9th, and sent Lieut. Inman to Ness Strontings for any information respecting the missing whalers. The crew of the Cove were in excellent health and spirits, which was to leave Longhope Sound on 11th inst. The Coast Guard tender rendered every assistance to Lieut. Inman and the Cove.

Woolwich Dockyard.—On Monday last 40 extra hands were taken on at this yard.—A mischievous report has been industriously circulated by some interested parties, relative to the insufficiency of the water side new wall, from its being formed of the composition called "concrete," and that a part of it would be taken down, of which there is not a particle of truth, for the work is proceeding with amazing rapidity. The composition of which this "concrete" is formed, was some short time ago given in this paper; and such is its solidity, that the foundation of an erection in the yard was dug out with the greatest difficulty and the loss of the best implements used for that purpose. It may be said to defy age, weather, water, and iron. It certainly did not answer at the dry dock, not from its want of durability or weight (even stone having been employed, which also failed), but from the power of a spring, which constantly boils up, and has hitherto resisted all human skill. So that the concrete cannot be condemned from this cause, nor is there a single instance as yet to prove its inutility.

We think that the new regulation respecting the promotion of Pursers a good one, we mean that part of it which regulates the advance of one Clerk for every three vacancies, just as every other promotion is filled up; because we have more than once heard that great disappointment has been incurred by those not included in the annual batch, whilst amongst the many each indulges a hope that he is one. We trust, however, that should vacancies occur on foreign stations and be filled up there by the Commander-in-Chief, that such may not interfere with the promotion of the old Clerks, near a score of whom still exist, who have served upwards of twenty years. After all, these gentlemen are not in so bad a plight as Mates, who entered the service even before that date, and who, from the nature of their education, are not fitted to avail themselves of the modes of obtaining a respectable livelihood, when out of employment afloat, which Clerks can resort to.

The Hermes, which has lately proceeded with the terranean and Indian Mails, is a vessel of very s[uperior] construction and accommodations, as compared wit[h] hitherto employed in that service; and there is every to expect that the Branch Packets between Malta, A[lexan]dria, and the Ionian Islands, will soon be replaced by of increased power and dimensions. Those at prese[nt] ing are the least adapted of any steam-vessels touc[hing] Malta, and quite discreditable to the flag they bear.

Mediterranean. The festivities of Christmas in the Fleet have, in one instance, been attended with serious consequences. Several of the Marines, and one seaman of the Caledonia, have been tried by a court-martial for riotous conduct, and sentenced to receive 100, 80, and 60 lashes respectively, for assaulting the officers of that ship, who interfered to quell the disturbances on her lower deck. Many others were implicated, who were confined and punished in a lesser degree. While the advocates for the abolition of corporal punishment are so pertinaciously urging their peculiar topics upon the humane consideration of the public, it would be well for them to consider how miserable, and disastrous would be the result, if the means of maintaining unimpaired the order and discipline of the Fleet were annihilated or crippled. These punishments are already regulated by rules and restrictions of almost a stringent extent; and without some adequate or still more severe substitute, cannot be dispensed with.

East India Intelligence.

HE Calcutta papers mention that Mr. Cornin has not applied for leave to proceed to England to expedite Retiring Fund, and obtained it, but he has also made cation to government for a sufficient sum to defray xpenses. It appears that Sir C. Metcalfe did not ider himself justified in granting his pecuniary de- ; but on learning that the sum required would not ed 6000 rupees, he most generously begged Mr. in would accept the amount from his own purse, promised him that he would avoid making any per- ent arrangement to deprive him of his office in the . As soon as it came to the knowledge of those suggested the voyage to Mr. Cornin, it was imme- ly proposed to consider the 6000 rupees as a loan, o raise a subscription in the army to discharge it. is said that the 65th Volunteers have received orders arch forthwith to Jeypore; and there is a rumour ad, that the 12th N.I. will have to accompany the . Mr. Blunt to that quarter. We cannot vouch for accuracy of these reports, but should they prove true ll augur that the government has at last arisen to a e of its dignity, and that a tremendous example will e to the native courts that the person of a repre- ative of the government is not to be murdered with unity.—Central Free Press, Sept. 9.

he Calcutta papers state that in the Ackhais the ol Byree Saul having assembled the Thakoors and indars, told them that a British force was coming to ore, and on asking them whether they would give hair country to the English, or fight in defence of ey replied that their lives and properties belonged to Rajah, and as they were directed so they would act. Delhi Gazette of 2nd Sept. states that since the news Ir. Frazer's murder had reached Juljjar, Fyz Mu- ed Khan had distributed 500 rupees daily amongst oor and needy of that district.

XECUTION OF KUREEM KHAN.—At seven o'clock on Aog Kureem Khan was taken from his cell on a ery to the place of execution. The spot for erect- he drop was chosen as near the place where poor er was shot as possible. All the way to the ground criminal salaamed with both hands to the mob that wed him, which was supposed to be a recognition himself, and the Nawab, a report having gone ad the previous night that Shumsoodeen had killed elf, the falsity of which the assassin never was aware the last. On arriving at the ground he addressed rowd assembled, and requested all good Mussulmen ay for him, but he neither confessed his guilt nor ed it. After having his irons knocked off, he ed his hands and feet in performance of religious tion, and walked steadily up to the drop. When the ssary preparations were being made ready, he again ested to be prayed for, now and continually, and at reat mosque, and called all to witness that he died nting the creed, in the midst of which he was ched into eternity. The number of people collected computed at 20,000, and owing to the unexpected ence of a detachment of 300 Sepoys and some of nner's Horse, perfect order reigned throughout. After ing an hour, the body was taken down, and buried the walls of the city. On the 28th immense ds of people assembled at the several mosques in the to pray for the murderer, but they were not per- ed to enter the large mosque, the Jumma Mosjeed. ections were then made for keeping a light continually ing at his grave, and the assassin has been enrolled nt, under the title of "Gul Shoheed," no blame, in pinion of the natives, being attachable to him, as he ely killed a Kaffir, at the bidding of his lord and er the Nawab! We learn that thousands of natives y crowd to the grave of the murderer, where the ing girls of Delhi, from "Dildamah" down to ootee," warble forth their "sweetest notes" to he the assassin's spirit!! Such are the abominations he land.—Delhi Gazette, Sept. 2.

y a notification in the last government Gazette, it ars that the H.C.S. Clive is to be despatched on the Sept. to Cosseir with an overland packet. The th of the passage, at this season of the year, will pro- y be two months. The Clive is to be stationed in Red Sea for some time.—Bombay Courier, Sept. 12.

The Thomas Grenville was struck by lightning in gor Roads, on the 17th Sept. The electric fluid is to have shattered the mizen mast, and passed through of the cabins, destroying everything in it; the pas- gers who had occupied it, left the ship for Calcutta a few hours before. It appears that for three days a was very bad weather at the Sandheads, but no y serious damage among the shipping has been re- ted. The Mangee of the Marine Board boat which e up from Kedgeree, reported the river much swollen a great number of boats wrecked.—Calcutta Courier, t. 19th.

MADRAS MILITARY FUND.—The voice of the liberal party has at last prevailed, the obnoxious clause in the Military Fund Regulations, viz. the exclusion clause, has been rescinded, and a regulation more in accordance with the improved state of society now supplies its place. The contest was long, and struggle great; all the aid to be derived from superior talents and the powers of rhetoric, have been had recourse to, as well by the one party as the other, and to many the issue seemed doubtful. There, were, however, a small but increasing party whose faith was not to be shaken, who, with a distinguished veteran holding a conspicuous and important staff appointment, looked forward to the day which has at last arrived, feeling assured, despite of every exertion the opposing party, powerful and active as it might be, could make, the justice of the measure sought would in the end work the desired change; they have lived to see and rejoice in the realisation of their desires, and to enjoy the satisfaction to be derived from the result of their labours, in so just a cause being crowned with success.—Madras Courier, Oct. 5.

The majority of votes in favour of the new rule has exceeded two-thirds of the number received, as required by the act, and the following regulation has been substituted in its place—viz. "that the fund hereafter be open to widows or orphans under the rule that governs admission of Cadets to the army, and that all existing marriages (hitherto excluded under the old) be recognised and admitted under the new rule, by paying up all arrears of subscription, &c., according to the existing rates from the day of marriage, with interest at 8 per cent. accumulating half yearly." The period for admission under the new rule is limited to six months from the date of the resolution being communicated to the army, as well for present non-subscribers, as for those now subscribing as unmarried. A term of three years is given to the former for liquidating the accumulation of subscriptions, and of two years to the latter.

A very unfavourable report has been made of the Bengal Civil Fund, but it is too long for insertion; our next number will contain some interesting particulars.

THE LATE ADMIRAL JOHN FERRIER.

THIS officer, whose demise took place on the 27th inst., at the advanced age of 77, obtained the rank of Post-Captain, Nov. 22d, 1790. In 1796, he was appointed to the command of the York, 64, in which ship he served on the Jamaica station five years. In 1801, when Lord Nelson meditated an attack on Flushing, Capt. F. was employed under the orders of his Lordship, whose esteem he acquired, as will be seen by the following extract from a letter to Earl St. Vincent, then First Lord of the Admiralty:—"Captain Farrier you do not know, therefore it becomes me to tell you that his ship is in the very first order, and that he is a man of sense, and as steady as old TIME himself: I am much pleased with his regularity and punctuality."

On the recommencement of hostilities, in 1803, Capt. Ferrier was appointed to the Albion, 74, and proceeded in her to the East Indies. A few days after the discomfiture of the French Admiral Linois, by a fleet of deep-laden Indiamen, commanded by Capt. Dance, that officer fortunately fell in with the Albion and Sceptre, in the Straits of Malacca; and Capt. Dance having represented to Capt. Ferrier the great national consequence of the Company's ships, he was induced to convoy them to St. Helena, where they arrived in safety June 9th, 1804.

Capt. Ferrier was promoted to the rank of Rear-Admiral, July 31st, 1810; and towards the latter end of that year was appointed to a command in the North Sea

eet. He accordingly hoisted his flag in the Bellerophon, 4, where it continued until the commencement of 1813, hen he shifted it into the Scarborough, of the same rrce. He was made a Vice-Admiral on the 4th June, 814, and Admiral of the Blue 22d July, 1830.

THE LATE LIEUTENANT-COLONEL SIR JOHN KENNAWAY, Bart.

We promised, a fortnight since, a memoir of this distinguished officer, who died after a few days' illness from paralytic affection, which commenced on Saturday the 6th Dec. and terminated his existence on the morning of New Year's Day, without a struggle or a groan.

Sir John Kennaway was born at Exeter, March 6th, 758, and received his education at the Free Grammar chool, then conducted by Mr. Mershall. On the 18th eb. 1772, he sailed for India, in company with his elder rother, the late Richard Kenneway, Esq., having been resented with a Cadetship by Sir R. Palk.

In 1780, he received his Captain's commission, and erved in the Carnatic in the grand army commanded by ir Eyre Coote, against Hyder Ali, until the battle and iege of Cuddalore. On his return to Bengal, his skill the native languages and his talents for diplomacy re-ommended him to the notice of the Marquis Cornwallis, en Governor-General of India. In 1786, this distinuished nobleman made him one of his Aides-de-Camp; nd, in 1788, sent him as Envoy to the Court of Hyderbad, to demand from the Nizam the cession of the mariime province of Guntoor. In this mission he was emiently successful, not only obtaining that which he came o demand, but inducing the Nizam to enter into a treaty f offensive and defensive alliance against Tippoo Sulan. For this service, his Majesty was pleased to create im a Baronet; and he received a mark of still further pprobation from the Court of Directors, in a vote which hey passed to take out the patent of creation at the Company's expence.

In 1792, Lord Cornwallis again made use of his diplomatic talents in the arrangement of a preliminary and definitive treaty of peace, in concert with the Commissioners of the Nizam and the Mehrattas on the one part nd those of Tippoo Sultan on the other. By this reaty, Tippoo ceded half his dominions, and agreed to ay three millions three hundred thousand pounds to the hree allied powers, and to give two of his sons as hosages for the faithful performance of the engagement. From this time, Sir J. K. resided at the Court of the Nizam at Hyderabad, with the title of Resident, being he first English representative that had been permaently received there.

Having suffered much in health from the climate of ndia, he returned to England in 1794. The high estimation in which he was held by the Directors of the East India Company may be estimated by the unusual rant of 500*l.* per annum, which they voted him on reiring from the service.

Since this time he constantly resided at Escot, in Devonshire, where he acted for some years as Deputy Lieutenant and Colonel Commandant of Local Militia nd Yeomanry. The increasing infirmities of age, and specially a total privation of sight with which it pleased God to visit him eight years ago, obliged him to withdraw rom active life. His loss will be deeply felt;—his tenantry have to mourn a most kind landlord, his friends a constant friend, his children a father whose heart was truly paternal, and his widow the uninterrupted care and solace of thirty-nine years. His extensive charities, both in the county and beyond its limits, bear witness to his large and Christian liberality; and the poor of his neighbourhood will not cease to bless his name.

THE PACKET QUESTION.

Sir,—Captain Maederson's last letter compels me, contrary to my intention, to offer once more a few remarks upon the Packet question. I will then briefly observe, that were this enthusiastic writer to write on till doomsday, he would not, I am fully satisfied, convince any one wholly disinterested seaman that Falmouth is better than Brarhaven for a Packet station. I will again confidently repeat every argument I have already used in favour of the latter Port, and maintain the general correctness of each and all of the facts I have before given.

Theories, after all, are good for nothing in this matter; but what I most wish is, that the gallant Captain could but be permitted to start in a Packet from Falmouth with a close-reefed topsail breeze at W.N.W., and that I could at the same hour, and with the same wind, start from Bearhaven in another Packet of the like class, and I would stake the full amount of all the property the worthy Captain possesses in or near Falmouth, that I would arrive at Halifax, or the West Indies, or Rio Janeiro, days before him. Let the thing be hopefully tried for one year, and then Truth must and will subdue all erroneous and interested reasonings. A Poet Captain.

[We think sufficient has now been said on this question. —Ed.]

PURCHASE OF APPOINTMENTS IN THE EAST INDIA COMPANY'S SERVICE.

Sir,—I beg again to stir up the attention of the cheerful-like looking maidenly old gentlemen of the India House upon the necessity of moving out all corrupt seed that may have the remotest bearing upon the respectability of their own more pure growth, upon which the stability of their power depends. If it be the folly of the Prince that causeth the people to perish, let them correct themselves in due time lest they also fall. As every corrupt practice is folly, as there is none greater than the illicit purchase of power or office under any government, still more so when such practice is connived at by the ruling power in the face of their own positive injunctions, publicly promulgated, against them. It is, as we may instance, a degree of insanity, only forging the weapon that will eventually be applied to their own extinction, or fixing the parasitic plant that will eventually destroy all wholesome vegetation.

The secret connivance at the purchase of office, and its consequences, may be recorded in many cases, but in none more grossly than that of R. P., who was a Collector of Madura. There was a sum drawn of 25,000 rupees by the predecessor of R. P. from his treasury, which should have been replaced, but the latter person took upon himself the responsibility, upon the condition of having the interest of the former to ensure R. P.'s succession to the Collectorate; this was arranged, but the 25,000 rupees was never replaced; on the contrary, a further defalcation was incurred by R. P. of 500,000 rupees, the development of which lost a large sum to the public as well as the destruction of what, under a system of more pure principle, would have secured the services of an able and experienced servant. There are other instances, no doubt, in the Civil Department, but those in the Military are now so common as scarcely to attract notice. Let us fancy one officer presenting another with £5,000 to secure the succession to the superintending of political prisoners, as happened at Madras; and another £3,000 to secure an Artillery command, as happened at Bombay,—both rather recent occurrences; let us suppose this; and ask ourselves from whence there can be honestly secured a reimbursement for such a risk in outlay of capital; and, if not honestly, let us reflect upon the honest consequences that may result in a large military community by the tacit connivance of the local authorities, as well as the more distant over-ruling influence in such a meritorious system of patronage.

The absurd supposition that the tacit permission to purchase the retirement of officers, Civil or Military, by a secret and illicit arrangement amongst themselves, will eventually open a more rapid promotion, as is so requisite in our Indian Service, is, I boldly assert, without any true foundation. Let us see how such a system acts in other Services,—for instance, in his Majesty's Army! Does it there accelerate promotion? do not we know that it there only acts as an opening for the longest purse, and proves only that a fool and his money are soon parted? do we not there find heaps of old deserving men who can never get on at all from the prevalence of this very system? The Indian Service differs so far that such a system there produces vacancies that must be filled by successive advancement, but that advancement is not more rapid, except in a very few instances, where a large treasury is in hand, and by which the very first principle of the prevention of a supercession of rank, the principle upon which that Army was formed, and upon the upholding of which the faith of its government is guaranteed, must be broken; but we are led into the error by seeing it adopted by the British Army, although it is admitted that this very arrangement is one of the greatest faults the British Army possesses, we are led, by the glitter of the name, to follow up, instead of, as experience should teach us, to turn from the errors of Royalty. Why should not we act honestly and openly, however, by which at least, the moral mischief, which is the most important, would be prevented? If such a system is to be followed up, do not let us know that, like the foolish Venetians, ye have cunning laws yet dare not use with honour to yourselves, but kept as close as an assassin's knife until there come an opportunity, and then you'll strike, but rather cancel the rule that makes it criminal. If ye do not, I shall not say "you deserve hanging," as a certain President vociferated against an honest man who was endeavouring honestly to curb oppression, but I will be heartily delighted to see you cut your own fingers. Carnatic.

THE EXTRAORDINARY CASE OF MR. H. D. PERROTT, LATE LIEUTENANT R.N.

Thus far I had written upon this extraordinary case by the 8th ult., when I came to an anchor at the seid point "why," to wait the decision of the trial*, Perrott v. United Service Journal, in the Court of Common Pleas, Westminster, Dec. 10, 1835, before Lord Chief Justice Tindal and a special jury, for a libel published in that Journal in August last. The defendant put upon the record five different pleas of justification.

Now it is publicly known to ye, all men, that the said defendant failed in toto to justify four out of the f pleas of the libel, and was cast in 30l. damages. I ne not enter into detail of this trial for my purpose; b in justice to the case I am bound to observe, that t Admiralty failed to establish any one point they had rais against Mr. P., except that he was dismissed by a Nav Court-Martial for a Military offence, "reflecting upon t character of another officer, saying, 'he was a dangero character,'" but proved also his almost immediate restor tion by Order in Council, 6th Oct., 1811, for a most galla and successful action, in cutting out an enemy's vessel, a did not produce any one document, filled up by Mr. Perrot hand-writing, to criminate him in any manner whatsev What a brilliant day, among the many, of Mr. Serjea Wilda's pleading!!! He gained his cause by a maste piece of argument—"Produce," said this learned and uprig man to the defendant's Counsel (Serjeant Talfourd) a witnesses, "produce but one document forged by the ha of the gentleman whose cause I am advocating, and I wi throw down my brief!" Sublimely eloquent is the publ defiance of the proof of accusation from the lips of an inn cent man!!!

The advocacy of the defendant's Serjeant was mo unrelenting and unforgiving towards the plaintiff. It certainly the bounden duty of an advocate to exert h ability to the utmost in defence of, and to use every art, e lay every snare to entrap the whole truth in favour of h client, but beyond that duty the dictates of the honesty a uprightness of an Englishman's heart should tell him he h no right to pass.

The reversal of the conviction of Mr. Perrott in 1812, the Supreme Court of King's Bench, was thus pronounc by the Lord Chief Justice Ellenborough:—"Upon hearin Counsel on both sides, it is considered and adjudged th the judgment given against the defendant in this prosec tion be reversed, and that the said defendant be restored all that he lost thereby." This reversal being in favour the plaintiff, and proved in Court against the defenda Watts's plea of justification of the libel against Mr. Perro the plaintiff, as to his conviction at Maidstone, the s Serjeant —— (I forget his name) should have been silen having done all in his power for his client (man or ang could no more—lawyer or demon would more, did not j nice cry, "Cease ye, either viper!") and not endeavoured lessen the value of that sentence of the just and sage judg of the law, when it could in no wise assist his client, t might (if the Serjeant's remark had aught of fair play seneo) have materially affected the opinion of the Admira es to the true intent and meaning of the order of the Co of King's Bench.

Behold!!! The Serjeant —— declared in open Co that these words of the said reversal "that the said defend (Perrott) be restored to all that he lost thereby we read," thus insinuating, that they were mere words course—of no meaning, and conveying no intention of t Judges of the Court of King's Bench that the law p nounced by their own lips should be carried into effect, to his restoration to his rank in the Navy, which he lost the conviction of the said inferior Court of Law.

Now, Serjeant ——, let me ask you this question,— not these the usual words of the sentence passed upo criminal condemned to death:—"Thou shalt be taken the place whence thou camest, thence to the place of exe tion, where thou wilt be hanged by the neck until thy bo be dead," and is he not sure of suffering for his crime by forfeiture of his life (unless reprieved) by the usual wo of the sentence of the law? Good God! then is not proven innocent man by the jury of his country equally e of being restored to his liberty, his character, and his rig by the usual words of the sentence of the law, pronoun from the seat of justice?

I wonder in what city the said Serjeant was born, and what family. I should think not in the City of Jerusal but in the City of London; and is not of the family "Israel, skilful in all wisdom and cunning in knowled and understanding science, and such as had ability," his name is not Daniel, nor Shadrach, nor Meshach, Abednego, but I think he is of the family Puneas, know not whether Minerva assisted Britannia in the fore tion of her laws, or the devil, leagued with Belshazzar king, to form the laws of the Medes and Persians."

Then there was "Non Ricordo," Royal Navy, the defence, who, a few days after the accident occurre Mr. Perrott, left the Phœbe in 1806, and joined another vessel. He had no recollection that any other guns w fired before the accident took place, and had no recollect of the names of the young gentlemen who were in the b on that occasion. Yet he could recollect it was a rowli piece, and not a musket, with which Mr. P. was woun whilst practising at a mark!!! Addio, Il Signor Capit Non mi Ricordo.

My good fellow, Mr. Editor, in summing up my opi upon this hard and singular case, I shall proceed, no li lawyer, secundum artem, but like a seaman, artless guided only by the feelings of the heart to assist a bro sailor in distress—to place the lights and shadows of it they appear to my mind, so that the Admiralty and Navy may judge themselves whether Mr. Perrott is gu ot guilty of the said crimes and accusations with which s charged.

"Be it known then to all men" that the said Flag Officer he informed the Admiralty, after 27 years' silence, that Parrott had forged his certificates to pass his examina- for Lieutenant), when subpœnaed, was found paralysed a number of years, and could not journey to London to ear against Mr. P., but acknowledged it was all a MISTAKE ut forging the certificates!!! which mistāke annihilating point "WHY" this gentleman is not restored to his rank Lieutenant in the Navy, I will weigh anchor, and with ving sheets and "bonour's breese" RUN DOWN all the nts of accusation raised up in judgment against this poor ow, and back to the point from which I started, viz. the ged forged documents said to be found on Mr. P.'s per- , or in his desk, which were the sole cause of his not ing been restored to his rank in 1814. It is proved in rt that he did not qualify for a pension in 1806, then only years of age, by pretending to have lost his arm in the 's service whilst practising with one of the great guns on rd the Phœbe in Portsmouth Harbour; he is not guilty the scandalous trick of extorting money from poor men, under pretence that he could protect them from ressment; and he is not guilty of the crime for which was imprisoned in 1812, as the sentence under which he fered was reversed in the Court of King's Bench; and, ve all, he is not guilty (as acknowledged by the word of Admiral who secretly accused him) of forging in his th certificates of conduct with which to pass his exami- ion, and he has taken a solemn oath that he is not guilty forging any certificates of discharges, or other documents to be found in his desk at the time of his apprehension 1812.

The conspiracy against him is proved on oath beyond bt or controversy. It is true his conviction was reversed "WANT OF FORM," and his character saved apparently by a "flaw in the indictment." But what says a rister of eminence who gratuitously gave his opinion?

"It appears to me, on reading the above papers, that if application had been made for a new trial, and that such lication had been supported by affidavits similar to those Captain and Mrs. Gillbee, and Sir Edward Parrott's affi- vit of 1st March, 1824, and the non-production of such dence as the trial accounted for, that it would have been most of course for a new trial to have been directed. And also appears to me, that if on the trial Captain and Mrs. lbee, and Earl Gillbee, and Sir Edward Parrott, had been mined, and had given testimonials similar to that con- ed in their affidavits, that Mr. Perrott ought to have n acquitted, not on any matter of informality, but on the stance and merits of the case.

THE PROJECTED VETERAN BATTALIONS AND MILITIAS.

SIR,—I beg leave to claim your indulgence to offer a few remarks in your excellent Journal on the report of its being in contemplation to form Veteran Battalions, composed of Pensioners, so far as relates to those who have not served the whole of their time (if any can be found fit to do duty, even in garrison), and those who are receiving pensions, who have not been discharged more than five years, all which has been duly "reported" in your valuable Gazette. Is it not proper to bring to the recollection of the projector how these old soldiers may be situated at the present period, supposing even one or two years after their discharge has been granted? Is it not likely that, after a lapse of only a twelvemonth, the majority of them may have settled themselves in some "little way of business," or obtained employment of some description? which being more lucrative than a soldier's pay (of course their pension would be stopped) is more likely to enable them to support a wife and family, and no doubt the most of them are so situated; consequently, is it not a cruelty to call upon them to lose though it were only a day's work, to appear before a Military Surgeon for examination? It may be urged that such has been the case before; but that will not alter the reasons I adduce against the hardship of the measure, although it may be urged by some that these men, being "Old Soldiers," they are "ready to hand." I contend against such an argument, for the "Rules and Regulations" of His Majesty's service state that "the men and non-commissioned officers shall be drilled after return from lengthened leave." If, then, this be necessary in those cases, can it be advanced with propriety that men who have been out of the army from six months to five years are any more effective than a raw recruit? If any additional force is necessary to do garrison duty, in lieu of the line, whose "presence is required elsewhere," and there is any sincerity in the promise of anything being done to prevent the total decay of our ancient and truly constitutional force, the Militia (and I see no reason to doubt it, from the conversation which took place in the House of Lords on the subject last session of Parliament between Lord Melbourne and the "first Captain of the age," who gave his flattering testimony of their discipline and gallantry, and if aught could add to such high authority, many other noble lords and gallant peers too joined with the "Hero of Waterloo" at "past neglect" and "hopes for the future" of permanent benefit to that species of force, nor is it to be forgotten, the general order relative to them of the lamented "soldier's friend," the Duke of York, at the close of the war);—if, then, it is the intention to keep up this "national resource," the utility of which has been proved upon every emergency, to recruit the army with well-disciplined men, now is the time, particularly as the term of the ballot for the last batch drawn expires this spring. Why not embody a few of the regiments, instead of the ridiculous and (as economy is the "order of the day") expensive practice of the useless "training for twenty-eight days" then and there, by, my good Mr. Editor, preventing the inconvenience and sacrifice to which the old pensioners will be put by dragging them from their little domestic circles and occupation, while many a young and able-bodied man would be called upon to serve in the Militia, who is now being led into crime from want of employment; and though he would not "list" to go abroad when he had been once "trained" into the habits of a soldier, would upon a "reduction" be most likely to enter into the line rather than again encounter want in seeking for a precarious subsistence on the miserable pittance doled out by the parish officer. But again the economist will rejoin—"All this is very feasible, but you forget the expense it will entail;" and I again reply, "No! There is no half-pay to officers, no extra pensions: you pay county rates to support the gaol, and poor rates to subsist many a sturdy fellow who is often compelled to seek such relief very unwillingly; you must maintain the convicts (often reduced to crime from absolute want of employ), and pay their keepers, as well as the hire of transports to convey them to distant Colonies, and when arrived, to keep them there (except they find their way to the bottom by whole freights at a time), and, moreover, you must support troops to over-awe and keep them in a tractable state." This is not an overcharged sketch, but stubborn facts, which the parliamentary annual returns bear full witness to in the shape of the Roman initials £. s. d. And the argument is equally applicable whether we raise a few more regiments of the line; not so by embodying a portion of the Militias for a given period in rotation; and although you, Mr. Editor, do not consider there is much to apprehend from a Russian invasion, yet, without the wish to alarm the nerves of "Our women, our children, and beaux," the politics of nations might make some Power willing to try the "tug of war" with us, and the modern addition of the steam-engine might very materially assist to make their

"Flat bottoms in darkness get o'er," although, even should such an event take place,

"We should then let them see there were Britons on shore."

I really question by the above line of the inspiring sea-song I quote from, while the author was lauding our "Hearts of Oak," whether he ever dreamt of those yclept "the feather-bed Militiamen." Be this as it may, if the object be to provide for some unprovided Generals by forming a few Veteran Battalions, the more ready way would be to remove those men from the different regiments who are near completing their fourteen or twenty-one years, and who may still be healthy and willing to extend their services for this purpose, with the given understanding that it is only to be for a certain period, and that they will receive their pensions at the expiration of their original term, in addition to their veteran pay: thus you would have efficient men, and not be dragging forward a discontented band to be re-drilled in the new movements, and probably who, after every vain attempt to make them effective, be compelled to turn them adrift from ill health and incapacity, to seek their houseless wives and starving children. This is no exaggerated picture, for past experience has proved the fact; but let us hope the project is only a feeler for the speculation to answer some desired interest, and that there is not any serious intent to plunder the poor soldier of his hard pittance by his refusing to serve, or not obeying the summons (or inability from want of means) to attend the inspection, thereby carrying misery in its direst shape into the bosoms of those whose gallant fronts have braved every danger for their native isle. Should you give these suggestions a corner in your well-circulated columns, I shall have occasion to address you shortly on Militia officers.

MOLL FLAGON.

SIR,—An extraordinary character of the name of Jane Hall was brought before Sir Peter Laurie for some act of riotous conduct at a house of a Mr. J. W. Fry, who farms the poor (of St. George's parish, Hanover-square) in the Minories Borough. When it is considered that this poor creature, who is sixty years of age, and who was at the battle of Salamanca, Badajos, Torres Vedras, and every general battle during the Peninsular war, and that she saved the life of the Hon. Capt. Ponsonby in the first named action, by thrusting her neckerchief into his wound, thereby stopping the hemorrhage, which preserved that gallant officer's life, and that at the battle of Waterloo she was conspicuous in attending the wounded and dying, it is to be regretted that such a being should be consigned to such a miserable abode after her gallantry and humanity, when in general murder and plunder follow the track of a victorious army, by the heartless wretches who attend a camp. Many officers now living to enjoy the high rank which their merit so well deserves, can attest there are few of Jane Hall's stamp; this they can elucidate from Dunquerque to Waterloo, therefore though she to be allowed to perish in an asylum of the description alluded to? His Majesty, with a remembrance of gallant service in the humblest grade, has shown his gracious and humane consideration where merit was so truly conspicuous; therefore my object in addressing you is, in the hope that it will meet the eye of those who will rescue this poor creature from the wretched abode she inhabits, and allow her some small support to provide her those comforts which her declining age and habits require. However small the allowance may be, it will evince "national gratitude," and our stern economists will not reflect on the boon as unnecessary although they may put it into the juxta-position of the representative of Jeremiah Dyson, who has received fifty-eight thousand, nine hundred and eighty pounds, eighteen shillings, by sixty-six annual payments on the pension list.

NAVAL POLICE.—HIS MAJESTY'S DOCK AND VICTUALLING YARDS.

SIR,—During the recent prorogation of Parliament I have made a complete tour of all H. M.'s Dock and Victualling Yard Establishments; I found a very great improvement indeed by the New Police Establishment compared with the old Warders. In two of those establishments I found the Police all that could be desired;—at one, I observed a naval captain, or commander!! by his two straps for epaulettes, a Director of Police! at two others, the Directors quite out of any kind of uniform; in fact, in perfect "mufti." The POLICE GUARD ROOMS in some of those yards are most admirably and judiciously fitted with comfortable fires, seats, cupboards, tables, &c. in others, not a morsel of fire has been permitted during the late unequalled and most inclement weather, while the military guard rooms have excellent fires.

Mr. Editor, as a constant reader of your admirable Gazette, I beg, through its medium, and your kindness to solicit the cause, if you can any way ascertain why such difference of rank, dress, and comforts should exist in some of those Dock and Victualling Yards, to what I found to have been established in the others since the formation of the new police. I am, Sir,

OFFICER OF RANK.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 30, 1836.

THERE was an anecdote current in the Fleet shortly after the battle of the Nile, that Nelson having ordered a seaman, who was reported to have performed some highly gallant and perilous exploit during the action, to be brought before him, questioned him as to his services, &c., and then required to know how he could advance him, giving him, as he thought, the option of a Gunner or a Boatswain's warrant, these being the greatest distinctions to which the seaman aspires in the British Navy. Jack, however, took a higher flight; and, after thanking the Admiral (to whom he thought all things possible) for his kind intentions, he wound up with the request that he would be pleased to make him a Chaplain. Nelson expressed his astonishment at this selection, but smiling informed Jack that his demand was beyond his power, great as he supposed it, and, advising him to limit his prospects to something within reach, bade him mend his application. "Well, then, please your honour, you can surely make me a Captain of Marines?" and, upon Nelson good humouredly protesting his inability to do either, the fellow (who was a wag) exclaimed "then damn me I'll remain as I am, for these are the only two easy berths in the ship, every one else has plenty to do." Now, the berth of a Chaplain has ever been easy enough it must be admitted, and may still continue to be so; but however desirable the Captain of Marines' situation; and, however enviable his all-night in; no watch to keep; and nothing to do but receive the report, might have appeared in Jack's eye, there is, if we mistake not, work cut out for him, in case of another war, which will render his berth any thing but a sinecure.

We have been led into this train of thinking by perusing an excellent article in the United Service Journal for this month, entitled "On a Brevet Rank in the Navy," in which the writer advances some unanswerable arguments in favour of an alteration in the mode of seniority which regulates promotion from the Captains' to the Admirals' list. But if this reasoning applies to the Royal Navy, with how much greater force does it bear upon the Royal Marines, in which corps, under existing circumstances, it would be nearly sixty years before an Officer could hope for the command of a battalion on service, or a division on shore; and when near a score more are added to this for his presumed age when he obtained his first commission, and the wear and tear of even the indolent life which Jack's imagination envied, he cannot be supposed to have physical strength remaining at four score to perform the duty of command, whatever his energy or experience might be.

The case of Nelson has been instanced by Captain Marryatt, in the article which elicited the remarks in the United Service Journal; an article which, by the bye we join our excellent contemporary in condemning as full of false reasoning, and on that, and on other accounts, quite unworthy of its very talented author. The genius of Nelson could not be dispensed with in the perilous season during which he flourished, and, in order to avail themselves of it, the Admiralty were obliged to promote many Officers out of the way to give him a rank commensurate with the importance of the commands intrusted to him. The same thing occurred during the Peninsular War, when several Officers were shelved or removed to distant colonies to make way for the Duke of Wellington; and although these were wise measures on the part of the Government, and no expense could have been too heavy, and no sacrifice too great, to secure the talents of these indomitable leaders; still the system which rendered it imperative was a bad one, and should have been amended. To return to the Marines, (the promotion in which corps is regulated by a still stricter rule of progressive seniority, commencing from the first day that the aspirant enters the service), to become a Captain, and eligible to command the party on board a line of battle ship, he must serve at least thirty-nine years, which, added to his age at the time of joining, will approach fast on three score; this, then, (if the rise by seniority is to be still insisted on in this corps,) will be the maturity at which we may reckon upon Officers, to whom will be delegated the command under the arduous duties which must be performed by the Marines of the fleet in another war, and it is not too much to say, that in nine cases out of ten, however good the inclination, the physical stamina of the man will fall short of the design. It is now, then, that these and other matters connected with the system of progressive seniority in the Navy, Marines, and Staff Corps, should be brought under the consideration of those in authority, and a regulation adopted, under which the services of the best Officers might be secured to the country, without the necessity of shelving a batch of their superiors in rank, many of them good and valuable servants, for no other reason than because an inferior on the list, who showed a greater proficiency in his profession, could not be placed in authority over them. The junior of to-day may, by promotion, rank over the senior Commander on the Navy List to-morrow; and we have heard of a case, where a Lieutenant, who had mast headed a Mid., his afterwards served under him as his First in a sloop of war, and then taking a stride has become once more his superior by gaining his Post rank before him. The same thing might happen, and doubtless often has happened, in the Army. Why not, therefore, let Officers, after a stated service in each grade, be eligible for any rank or command to which their talents fitted them. The responsibility is so great, as our contemporary justly observes, and the success of our arms so important to a Minister in office, that there would be little danger of the abuse of patronage in this respect. Heroes of the calibre of Nelson and Wellington will, supposing such to exist, and must be selected in preference to others, whatever be the means by which their services are obtained.

WE have had several communications lately calling our attention to subjects connected with the Administration of the Army. One of these and which has frequently been animadverted upon is the total disregard paid to the suggestions of the Parliamentary Committee on Naval and Military Appointments, with respect to a periodical change of the Staff of the Army. At the Horse Guards, some Officers have held their situations for upwards of a quarter of a century, and become regular annuitants.

It is absurd, and indeed derogatory to the profession, to see the number of General Officers in comparatively subordinate posts at Head-Quarters one ringing the bell for another as if for an ordinary clerk or servant. At the present moment, there are more Officers in that department of the Army than there were during the most active period of the war, as will be seen on reference to the Army List of the present month and that of January 1812. In the latter there were, including the Commander-in-Chief, only three General Officers at the Horse Guards; whereas at this moment there are, Lord Hill included, no less than six. To us this appears an enormous disparity, comparing the amount of our Military Establishment with what it was during the war. It is true that there has been a decrease in the aggregate number of Officers employed in the several Military Departments, but this reduction has been but trifling, and in no degree proportioned to the decrease of the Army. In the Districts, on the other hand, the reduction has been unreasonably great, inasmuch as that, at this day, the Majors of Brigade of the several districts can with difficulty and considerable labour get through the routine of business allotted to them, they having, in some instances, the additional duties, but without any additional emolument, of the Quartermaster and Adjutant-General's Departments to perform.

Another subject on which we have been addressed, and to which we alluded in a recent number, is the invidious promotion of Captain Sir Henry Bethune, a retired Officer of the Madras Army, to be Major-General in Asia. Has this appointment, we would ask, been made with the sanction of the General Commanding-in-Chief? If so, we deplore the policy and want of consideration which could suggest, at a moment when the Senior Officers of the Army are told that they need not look for brevets, a measure so offensive to the veterans of both the King's and Company's Services.

IT is folly to talk of reigning over the vast and extensive territories of India by the mere force of opinion, and it is only by developing our Military resources, and the overwhelming strength of a large and well-disciplined Army, thereby demonstrating the hopelessness of resistance, that the various tribes of India can be kept in due subjection. A reference to the events of the last forty years, to Vellore, Benares, Bangalore, and even to the recent melancholy instances of successful or attempted assassination of high public functionaries, and a consideration of the absence of all principle, as well as the total disregard of the most solemn treaties, which have been so often evinced by the Native Princes in their transactions with European Governments, must convince every one that India is not a country to be ruled by mere opinion.

The extreme difference of manners, customs, d habits, aided by the powerful influence of goted religion, both indeed as respects Mahoedan and Hindoo, necessarily create an almost reeoncilable hatrad towards Europeans; kindness d coucilintory conduct towards them may in some egree moderate that hatred, but nothing will ever adicate it.

Such being the posture of affairs, it is of the most importance that the Officers of the Indian my should be made satisfied and contented with eir situations. It was by the Army that our dian possessions were aequired, and by the Army ona can they be securely and permanently reined; the time, too, may arrive when their most alous exertions will again be required, and probly be more justly appraciated; but, unfortnately, in times of war and danger only is the eed of applause bestowed on the soldier; the oment the necessity for his services ceases then s claims are forgotten.

In order to recommend the claims of the Officers the Indian Army to the serious consideration the Court of Directors, we will contrast the esent emoluments of the Service with some of ose of 1798, when regimental rank commenced. t that period Officers, serving in the Nawaub of ude's dominions, received an allowance of double ll batta, equel to 240 rupees per mensem, making Lieutenant of Infantry's monthly receipts equal about 420 rupees or more, including the charge a company, and which most of them possed, from the paucity of senior Officers present th their regiments. Lord Wellesley, then Gornor-General, abolished this allowance of double ll, granting in lieu of it half the amount, or full tta at all the stations of the Bengal Presidency an equivalent; and, had even this innovation en adhered to, much discontent would have been evented; but the well known "Half Batta' der, which applied to several of the stations at engal and Behar, reduced the full hatta again e-half, or to sixty rupees per mensem to a Lieunant. In those days, Officers in charge of dechments of one or more companies of Sepoys, hen marching in charge of treasure, or any other ties, were allowed fifty rupees per mensem for guides and hurcarahs," whilst a similar allowce, though on a larger scale, was granted to ficers commanding out-posts, where detachents were stationed, and one hundred and fifty pees a month when there was more than one ttalion; these have ceased altogether. Boat lowance, to a larger amount than at present, as allowed on all occasions to Officers joining rps, or on being removed from one to anhar, whereas at present no Officer, except the instance of his first joining a regiment proceeding on duty by water, can receive that lowance,—he must now furnish his own means of nveyance. Staff appointments have been reced in number one-half, and the allowances of ose remaining materially curtailed.

n former years, too, our possessions were so limited extant, compared to the present, and the reliefs of rps so seldom, that little expence, comparatively eaking, was incurred by Officers for marching tablishments; how different is the case at present, hen regiments are frequently ordered from one xtremity of our Indian territories to the other, arching for three months or more together, at ormous expence; and if Officers, so circumanced, chance to be married, or have families, e expence is absolutely ruinous to their finances, whilst it is utterly impossible (with any regard to health) for Europeans to move during the hot winds, or periodical rains, without good weather-proof tents, and other indispensable requisites.

The frequent abolition of Military stations has justly been considered a serious grievance to the Army, occasioning the total loss of bungalows to many Officers, frequently involving them in great distress and embarrassment, and often putting it out of their power to procure other habitations at the stations to which their regiments have been so suddenly removed. Many Officers have, during a long service, been forced to sacrifice no less than two, three, and sometimes more bungalows.

If, with an increase of about forty-five regiments of Native Infantry, six of Cavalry, and a proportionate increase of Artillery and Engineers, as well as an addition of from thirty-five to forty Colonels to the infantry, since 1798, besides the advantage derived from the retired list of General Officers, as well as the numerous casualties occasioned by extensive wars, not likely at all events immediately to occur again; if, after all this assistance to promotion. Officers, who entered the service in 1797 and 1798, have only reached the rank of "Colonel" within the last three years, how hopeless must be the prospects of the Officers of the Indian Army at the present day, and how indispensably necessary are measures for their amelioration!

Although we cordially agree with most of the observations advanced by our much valued and respected correspondent A. C., we must still adhere to the opinion expressed in our paper of the 16th instant, on the subject of the Commander of a ship's share of Prize Money. We think the proposition of A. C., that all the Officers of a ship should be liable, in proportion to their shares, for the costs of detaining a vessel, would lead to bad consequences, be totally subversive of discipline; in fact, however plausible in theory, it could not be acted on without palpable injury to the Service.

If the second, or third in command even, was liable to pay his share for unlawfully detaining a neutral vessel, it would be but reasonable that he should be entitled to have a voice as to the propriety thereof; and a little reflection will convince any one that it would be easy to imagine a case, when an occasion of this kind would call forth difference of opinion; and we hold it a maxim that, as the Captain of a ship has never been accountable, or responsible, to the Officers under his command for his conduct, when in the execution of his duty; and as all attempts at subverting, or questioning his authority, have at all times been most properly visited on the offenders with severe punishment; it would be a fatal innovation to admit of any check to his supremacy, in this or any other case. Let the responsibility be upon him as heretofore, and as he incurs the whole of the risk of cost, it is but reasonable that he should be also entitled to a large portion of the Prize-Money. Neither do we admit that a line can be drawn between different description of captures, for although they are sufficiently distinct in extreme cases, in others their complexion is so nearly alike, that it would be hard to distinguish them.

In sharing Prize-Money between a fleet co-operating with an army on shore, or an army co-operating with a fleet for the reduction of hostile towns or settlements, we see no difficulty. An Order in Council may assign to each branch of the Service the proportion it merits, and this could be divided amongst the different classes, according to the scale already provided in their respective corps. It is when Marine Officers of rank sufficiently high to command a division of three or four thousand of the corps belonging to, and contained within, the fleet and doing the usual duty of Marines, but ready at all times to disembark at prompt occasion, with all the materiel of Staff, field-pieces, &c. complete, a flying army, in fact; it is, when the necessary number of Officers of the rank of Brigadiers and Colonels which should accompany this force to render it effective, come to be classed as to their share of Prize-money, that the difficulty will arise, if some means are not now adopted so that they may be satisfied that they are not injured, or the service which they are prepared to render under-rated or under-valued; for such a supposition must engender discontent, and disturb that cordiality and harmony which it should be the policy to cherish by every means between our Sailors and Marines, more particularly when co-operating on hazardous service,—wanting which no enterprise could be undertaken with any prospect of success.

By the present regulation, Field Officers of any degree would share but with the senior Lieutenant of ships, and although ranking with the Captains and Commanders of the Squadron, or even with a Commodore or Rear-Admiral, they would be excluded from sharing with those classes. Now although we maintain we have shown good reason why the Chief who is responsible for the proceedings of the Ship or Fleet under his command should, on that very account, have a far more considerable portion of Prize-money than Officers who were not liable for the consequences which such responsibility, whether great or small, entails; we do think that the superior Officers of Marines, or of the Army, if serving on board should have a larger share than the senior Lieutenants of the Fleet, so much inferior to them in rank. It is a matter of extreme difficulty, we admit, but as we doubt not a large number of Marines will be attached to a Fleet in future wars, and these, with the assistance of Steam-vessels, be frequently able to accomplish great undertakings in presence of the Fleet, a proper provision must be made for the Officers who command such Forces, suitable to their rank, and corresponding with their brethren of the same grade in the Army, otherwise the evil consequences predicted by A. C. will be sure to ensue.

We had intended offering some remarks at the time that we published the letter, in our impression of the 9th instant, setting forth the extraordinary circumstance, that a distinguished regiment has been refused permission to bear on its colours and appointments the word "Quebec," on the plea that Canada was a conquered colony. Viewing, as we daily do with pride, the testimonies of a similar kind, which are so deservedly borne on the banners of our different regiments, in lasting proof of their valour against the enemies of their country, we cannot understand what can have been meant by the refusal in question.

It is to perpetuate the glory won by our brave soldiers on the fields of those enemies that these honours are bestowed, surely then, the names of those possessions, which their victorious arms have conquered, are the most proper and most just to be inscribed upon the colours and appointments of the regiment, or regiments, that have gained the renown. So satisfied are we of the advantage likely to arise from the continuance of these tinctions, as infusing fresh ardour into the hearts of our gallant defenders, that we would also, that our ships of war should, in like manner, have inscribed upon their ensigns the names of the most celebrated battles in which such ships had been engaged, and if only with single ships of the enemy, of superior or of equal force, that the name of the conquered vessel should be placed on the colours ever after to be borne by the victor as long as she floated. It is trophies like these which must inspire increased vigour into our brave soldiers and sailors, each and all of whom would feel individually, as it were, bound to defend with their life's-blood the national flag thus hallowed by this reward of former deeds of fame.

Under every consideration, then, we earnestly hope that the distinguished regiment alluded to will at once be permitted to inscribe on its banners and appointments the word "QUEBEC," and we would likewise fain place over this memorable trophy a scroll with the undying name of "WOLFE."

THE more we consider the very hard case of those Mates and Midshipmen, who have passed their examinations for Lieutenants eight, ten, and some we are grieved to know as much as FIFTEEN, years, the more do we feel convinced that some regulation ought to be established, by which to amend the present heart-breaking system, which boons a gallant and highly-deserving young man, of merit and respectability, to twenty and, in some instances, even to twenty-five years' services as a non-commissioned officer.

We would suggest, that until the whole of the hundred and twenty Mates and Midshipmen, actually serving, who have passed above five years, were promoted, that the half at least of the Lieutenants' commissions that were to be conferred should be bestowed exclusively upon these poor fellows according to their seniority, provided their characters were unimpeachable. This arrangement would at once cheer their drooping spirits, and under it they would behold the certainty of at length obtaining that rank which they now almost despair of ever receiving. A correspondent has sent to us the names of a few of the senior of the Mates and Midshipmen now serving in our ships of war and revenue cruisers, and amongst them we observe the following:—

| | Entry into the Navy. | Date of passing for Lieutenant | Name of the ship now, or lately, serving in. |
| Coppinger | 1810 | 1817 | Rainbow. |
| hn Murphy | 1811 | 1819 | Kite, Revenue Cutter. |
| m. Robinson | 1811 | 1819 | late in Cameleon Rev. Cut. |
| attw. Pappie | 1812 | 1819 | lately in the Caledonia. |
| m. Markland | 1813 | 1819 | |
| m. Cumming | 1813 | 1819 | |
| ter Steg | 1813 | 1820 | African steamer, we believe |
| harles James | 1816 | 1824 | Harpy, Revenue Cutter. |
| Hippesley | | | |
| ames Allen | about 1812 or 1813 | about 1824 or 1825 | Fox, Revenue Cutter. |

We here find even the junior of these, and who we understand is the son of an old and meritorious officer (and himself, too, a highly deserving person, as we are told his honourable testimonials fully confirm), above ten years passed; Mr. Allen was a Mate of the Grana, moreover, in the battle of Navarino. With these facts before us, we cannot but submit to the First Lord of the Admiralty the justice of promoting a certain number, say twenty-five, of those young men every year that are still in our ships of war or in the revenue cruisers, beginning with the one of the longest service always, whose certificates are satisfactory, Lord Melville, we believe, uniformly promoted a few of the senior passed Midshipmen annually; hence we feel satisfied that an equal degree of liberality will be manifested by the present liberally-formed Board, whose warmest desire we know to be to make all under their controul sensible that FAIRNESS and IMPARTIALITY in all their measures is one of the first and most anxiously sought objects that they have in view.

ABOUT a month ago, in making some observations on the Coast Guard Service, we expressed the opinions of several of our Correspondents relative to the injustice of selecting the Officers for the annual promotions in this establishment exclusively from the Coasts of KENT and SUSSEX. Again, we are told that this has been done as though no other part of the United Kingdom called forth the energies and exertions of the Commanders and Lieutenants employed in this service, whereas we have been assured that equal zeal, and equal success too, have been often manifested on other coasts, as well as those of Sussex and Kent. We are not prepared to say, however, at this moment, that the Officers who have been just now promoted from the Coast Guard in these favoured Counties, as the reward of good conduct, have not been those who have made the most seizures, and thereby shown the most zeal and activity, during the preceding twelvemonths; but as we learn that an influential Member of the House of Commons means to move for detailed returns, showing all these facts separately and clearly, and not by lumping them, as we find some former Coast Guard returns have been made to the House, to the great indignation of those who sought the information required for the Public, but which data will speedily, we hear, be moved for again, we shall, when they are all laid before Parliament, be enabled to speak more fully on the subject of these complaints of injustice and partiality somewhere (not in the First Lord of the Admiralty, however, it is obvious), which have reached us from various quarters, and which we therefore must believe are not without some foundation.

We have many cases in our possession in support of these facts, but we will not allude to them more particularly at this time than to mention that of the promotion of the Mate of a Revenue cutter to the rank of Lieutenant, about two years ago, as the reward of merit, when this Officer's claims were manifestly inferior to dozens' in the Coast Guard Service.

THE following extracts from a letter that was published in our * Naval and Military Magazine in 1828 seem to be not inapplicable to the present time, and certainly show how deplorably the interests of the Indian Army have been neglected:—

"The general complaint throughout the Service has been the very limited number of officers to the Native Regiments, a misfortune that has been most severely felt during the wars in India. During the last Mahratta war, the 1st reg. of Madras Cavalry was left without a single European officer, the command consequently devolving on the Subadar Major of the regiment, and at a time when this corps was in the field, a circumstance that any intelligent Native Power could have availed themselves of, and might have paved the way to our ultimate defeat and expulsion. The 6th reg. of Madras N.I. was opposed to the enemy with no more than three European officers, one of whom was afterwards attached to a pioneer battalion. We may look to a more recent period, when the Madras regiments employed in Ava were obliged to borrow from those regiments remaining in garrison, to enable them to place every company under the command of an European officer, and consequently, in numerous instances, the Sepoys were commanded by officers totally unknown to them, led into action by entire strangers and could not feel that confidence in them they would naturally have felt had they been brought up in the same corps together. This is a consideration of the deepest importance,—one that the Honourable Court should seriously weigh; for in an Army constituted like the Native Service of India, words cannot sufficiently express the absolute and immediate necessity of eradicating so injurious and dangerous a system.

"That something will be done towards improving the Service I have not the least hesitation in believing, and that before the period for agitation of the renewal of the Charter arrives; permit me then, to propose an arrangement that would prove most grateful to the Army. The Colonel is invariably detached from the regiment, the Lieut.-Colonel or Major having the command; and in cases where both the Field Officers are absent, either on staff duty, on furlough, or sick leave, the Senior Captain presents commands, but I know several instances of corps having been commanded by a Subaltern. Even now we have several regiments where a Lieutenant is the second in command; to every regiment of Infantry and battalion of Artillery attach 1 Colonel, 1 Lieut.-Colonel, 2 Majors, 8 Captains, 12 Lieutenants, and 8 Ensigns; and Cavalry regiments are of less strength, 1 Colonel, 1 Lieut.-Colonel, 2 Majors, 6 Captains, 10 Lieutenants and 6 Cornets. Effect this, and every regiment in the Service of the Honourable East India Company will be efficient, the present number of officers away on staff duty and furlough will be but little felt, and the Army will be capable of being successfully employed against any Power that shall ever be opposed to it."

This letter is dated eight years back, but instead of any such increase of European Officers as the writer did confidently anticipated by its author, there were in the following year reduced two Lieutenants and one Ensign, a measure that has not yet been recovered by the Junior Officers of the Service, which a reference to the Army List will sufficiently demonstrate, having several Ensigns of nine, ten, eleven, and one of nearly twelve years' standing. Ensign J. Campbell, 21st Madras Native Infantry, whose date of commission is 14th May, 1824! and before this year closes we calculate there will not be less than seventy Brevet Captains in the Madras Army alone! Subalterns of fifteen years standing being, according to the constitution of the Indian Army, entitled to that rank.

Our correspondent then proceeds—

"According to the present regulations of the Service the situation of Interpreter is attached to the Quartermaster's department. It would greatly benefit the Army to make the Interpreter a separate appointment, to be held by the best Hindostanee scholar in the regiment, Captain or Subaltern; nor should the Adjutant or Quartermaster be excluded, if duly qualified. There are many officers whose habits and turn of mind eminently fit them to perform the duties of Quartermaster with credit to themselves and advantage to the Service, but who may not be sufficiently versed in Hindostanee to admit of their making good interpreters. I would also propose that the superintendency of the bazaar should be transferred from the Adjutant to the Quartermaster, as it is an appointment nearly associated with his own, and when an Adjutant fully acts up to his duty he has not sufficient time to devote to the interests of the bazaar, and when to the field such an establishment, if well conducted, is of the highest importance."

We agree with our correspondent here also, and only hope that something will be done to restore the Native Army to a proper state of efficiency; but as we have repeatedly said, the Officers who are in England, and some of them professing to have a great influence with their brethren, show a terrible apathy in not exerting themselves more in their own behalf. We have had no augmentation since 1824; these were reduced again in 1829; but we must date the last to 1818—eighteen years ago.

OUR readers may recollect that, at the commencement of the last Sessions of Parliament, a great outcry was raised by certain party Journals distinguished for their inveterate animosity

* We say our, because the Naval and Military Magazine, which warmly advocated the Indian interests, originated with, and was conducted by, the Editor of this paper.—ED.

the Surveyor of the Navy, respecting the infeority of his ships, tho imperfection of his system,
c. &c.; and these denunciations grew at last so ud, and had, by constant repetition, become so miliar, that it appeared as if the authors them-lves, made bold by impunity, began to believe ere must be some truth in what they had ed-nced at hazard. At length they were embol-ened, in an evil hour, to challenge the production f Official Reports, and by false statements had imulated some Members of Parliament, who ere either too indolent to inform themselves, or o ignorant to judge of the relative merits of ips, and took the case upon their showing to em-race their cause; and the subject was introduced d most unfairly commented on during the disssion of the Navy Estimates. The Vernon, being dmitted by all competent judges to be the finest an-of-war that ever swam, was the ship against hich envy was, and still continues to be, princi-ally directed. Now it might have been supposed hat, had any Member of the House required to atisfy himself of that ship's reported merits or emerits before he commented thereon, he natually could, through the courtesy of the Lords of he Admiralty, have availed himself of an inspec-on of every existing document which related hereto, furnished by the Officers of the Fleet.
We will not impute motives to any one, but cer-inly such a course was a proper one, and recolecting what had passed, we can assign no reason hy it was left for Sir James Graham (after these ostile demonstrations had been manifested and nfavourable opinions drawn from distorted and alse statements ostentatiously delivered) to move hat the Official Reports relating to the points in uestion should be printed. The production of hese utterly confounded the traducers of the urveyor for a while, (we had infinite pleasure in ublishing them and commenting thereon in our aper of the 18th July last), and they proved, by he testimony of Sir Josias Rowley and also of he Commanders of the competing ships, the ndoubted superiority of the Vernon in all respects ver every ship in the Mediterranean Fleet, during series of trials in all weathers, and on all points f sailing. It would appear that the same game s to be again acted this Session, and we confiently assure our readers it will be attended with he same results. Let it not be left for the suporters of the Surveyor—and we have ever been roved to do justice to Sir James Graham for the anliness, the discrimination, and the constancy f that support to which our Navy owes the regeneracy of its construction,—let it not be left, we ay, for his friends to move for the production of ll reports relating to the Vernon, or any other of he Surveyor's ships, whether transmitted by Sir
Pulteney Malcolm, Sir George Cockburn, or Sir Josias Rowley; but let the champions of the School move that they be printed, and the world will judge whether the opinions of these and other distinguished Officers are not of more weight than he nonsensical fabrications concocted for selfish urposes, and put forth by these gentlemen. We epeat that the more this matter is sifted, and the ruth elicited, the more favourable will the ships f Captain Symonds appear, and he has now adanced so far that the envy and malice of his traducers cannot prevail against him, notwithstanding hat they scruple not to blame him for the injuries which, under the dispensation of Providence, the lements commit against his ships, as if it were in the power of a human being to construct a vessel capable of withstanding the fury of a hurricane, or the concussion of a rock, when driven against it under circumstances with which the mould of the ship has nothing to do, but even under these perilous situations the strength of the structure has been the happy means, in several instances, of preserving both ship and crew.

Whilst commenting on the proposed for establishing a "National Asylum for Merchant Seamen" in our paper of the 26th ult., we could not help expressing a fear that the formation of so desirable an institution, separate from that of "Greenwich Hospital," and the "Merchant Seamen's Fund" (to which latter the Seamen are now bound by law to contribute one shilling per month), would lead to disputes between the conductors of the latter and the new society, and we indulged a hope that means could be found to assimilate the proposed fund to be raised with the latter, if not with the former, and thus create one great national establishment, under the protection of which worn-out or disabled Seamen might be maintained and pensioned when incapable of earning their living, and their relicts provided for. We cannot help thinking that an attempt at something of this kind would meet with the approbation of the Government and the Legislature; and we are sorry to perceive the opposition of interests, which we had predicted, has already commenced by the expression of some uncalled-for remarks respecting the new institution in the report of the "Merchant Seamen's Fund," which has called forth some caustic observations from Mr. G. F. Young, in a letter addressed to the Times journal? We believe the scheme of the proposed institution is still in embryo, but, supported as the intention is by the aforesaid talented gentleman, and most of the leading ship-owners and brokers, we put it to him and them whether it would not be more desirable, and of greater benefit to the Seamen, to blend all these institutions into one great national establishment, to which the Seamen might be compelled to pay a certain portion of their wages, leaving it optional to those who chose to contribute in a higher degree, and who should thus become entitled to a proportionably greater amount of benefit in the shape of temporary relief or pension, paid to them weekly (there are obvious reasons for this) in any place where they chose to reside. We consider the reports of jobbery in the purchase of the ground for the intended building to be quite unworthy of credit, seeing the great respectability of the gentlemen who have connected themselves with the undertaking.

A petition to Parliament is in course of signature in Portsmouth, Portsea, and Gosport, to sanction a Bill to compel the East India Company to pay Mr. Buckingham, in conformity to the unanimous vote of the Committee of the House of Commons on 4th Aug., 1834, such compensation as he may be entitled to for the loss he sustained in India.

The number of British residents in Jersey, in 1823, was about 7,000, and their expenditure 60,000*l.* a-year. Their numbers have now swelled to 16,000, and their expenditure is calculated at 300,000*l.* a-year.

We have to announce the death of Viscount Hood, of Whitley (where he died), in Warwickshire. His Lordship, who was in his 83rd year, had eight children; the six eldest are dead. He is succeeded in his titles and estates by Samuel Hood, eldest son of the deceased Viscount's eldest son, the late Lieut.-Col. Hood, who died in 1814. The present Viscount is his son by Caroline, only daughter of the late Sir A. S. Hamond, and was born in January, 1808; his brother is a Captain in the Grenadier Guards. The late Viscount's father was the first Peer, and was ennobled for his eminent naval services. The youngest son of the deceased Viscount is Lord Bridport.

East India Maritime Service.—A meeting of officers excluded from the scale of compensation, took place on Wednesday at the Carolina Coffee-house, for the purpose of considering the minute of the Court of Directors, inserted in our last. Captain J. Barber presided. He read the report of the Committee, in which, among other things, it was stated, that after anxious deliberation, the Committee could only come to the following decision:—'That the scheme propounded is wrong in principle; at direct variance with the 7th clause of the India Bill; and its application would be to substitute charity for justice.' The report was adopted, and resolutions in accordance with it carried. The matter will come before the Court on Wednesday next.

Statements have been frequently current in the course of the last 12 months of a loan having been concluded for Don Carlos; but if any contract has been entered into and any stock created by it, it must be in very few and select hands, for no notice has been taken of it in the money market of this or any other European capital as a negotiable security. Reports of the kind have become more definite within these few days, and it is now said that a loan has been contracted for a sum nominally 4,000,000*l.*, of which 6 per cent., making 240,000*l.*, is to be paid, and 30 per cent. more, in various instalments after the entry of Don Carlos into Madrid.

Railroads.—The great benefits which this country must eventually derive from the general introduction of railroads, more particularly in the facility with which the government will be able to despatch troops to the out-ports or into any disturbed district, induce us to give publicity to the following remarks of a Correspondent.—"As many persons are prevented from investing their money in railroads, by the vast amount of capital erroneously supposed to be required to complete these undertakings, it may be proper to state that scarcely one half of the schemes now before the public can ever receive the sanction of the legislature. It is calculated, indeed, that with the total rejection of some, and the delay attending other railways, little more than three millions per annum for the next few years can be actually expended; while the mere "deposits" at the Bank of England amount, by the last returns, to upwards of 19 millions, and if we reckon 20 millions for other London banks, and much more for the country banks, here is a mass of unemployed capital in England alone, of near 60 millions sterling. It was justly observed by Sir R. Peel, on the subject of railroads, that we could not stand still while other nations were so rapidly on the advance; and it is to be regretted that after the completion of the railway from Manchester to Liverpool had established both the practicability of such undertakings and the superior advantages they offered for the investment of capital, it should have remained so long passive. The public, however, is at last roused, and, as if to make amends for its late apathy, patronises every scheme without sufficient investigation either as to its own merits, or to the capacity and respectability of its projectors; we therefore deem it necessary to recommend some caution in entering into the Branch or other minor railways, without a perfect knowledge of the commerce and population of the neighbourhood; but in those magnificent undertakings which connect Liverpool and Birmingham, Birmingham with London, and London with Bristol, capital may be vested with every prospect of the most ample profits; it s indeed asserted by those best capable of forming a cor- rect estimate, that the shares in these three companies must, in a very few years, be each worth from 4 to 500*l*. We shall, perhaps, be accused of partiality in giving pre- ference to the latter, or as it is called "The Great Western;" but we do so from the well-known facts, elicited during the Parliamentary inquiry, not only that the number of passengers out of London by the Western road considerably exceeds that of the Northern, but that the superior level of the country between London and Bristol to that between London and Birmingham, causes a vast saving in the annual expense of keeping up the embankments. Nor can much more than one-half of the capital be actually required from the shareholders, as the company have then the power to borrow, which they can do at 3½ per cent. The estimates, too, are calculated at a price beyond the cost of similar work on the Birmingham railway, while the completion of that portion from Lon- don to Maidenhead in the summer of next year, and shortly after of that from Bath to Bristol, will enable the Directors, out of the profits of these portions, either to make a very early dividend, or by applying them to the remainder of the work diminish the amount of future instalments.

Knights of St. John of Jerusalem.—This Sovereign Order, esteemed the most renowned of the ancient insti- tutions of chivalry, and whose declension was occasioned by the various convulsions caused by the French revolu- tion, is gradually recovering its consequence in the several states of Europe. On Christmas-day the church of St. Francis, at Rome, belonging to the Knights, for a long time abandoned, and within a short period carefully repaired, was re-opened to the public. There were pre- sent at the celebration of High Mass, in full costume, M. le Bailli Carlo Candida, Lieutenant of the Magistry, the professed Knights, and several Knights newly re- ceived. On the 1st of January the brotherhood, headed by their Chief, set out from the church to wait upon the Sovereign Pontiff, who gave them an audience, and the formal assurance of his protection for the order of which they formed a part. There are eight languages or nations in the distinguished Order of St. John of Jeru- salem, governed by one general code of laws or statutes, and acknowledging one Chef Lieu, and one Grand Mas- ter. According to Vertot, the Order is divided into three classes, viz. Knights of Justice, Ecclesiastics or Chap- lains, and Serving Brothers. Of these none but those of the first class are qualified to be advanced to the dignities of Bailiff, Prior, or Grand Master. The Clergy, there- fore, are not eligible to fill any of these stations. Each language is free from the control of states, kings, and princes, and enjoying its own government, laws, and council, elects its members, and performs every other act of independency. The sixth language, many years in abeyance, but recently resuscitated, now forms the English branch. To this no foreigner can belong; it is open to the admission equally of Protestant and Catholic, and its members are exempted from the vow of celibacy which is enjoined to most of the other languages.

Loss of the Bride.—The following statement has been received by Messrs. Wilson, Hudson, and Co., in a post- script to a letter from Capt. Wharton, of the Swift, of this port, dated Rotterdam, Jan. 19, 1836:—"I have opened my letter to announce the appalling intelligence of the loss of the Bride, of Hull, with 12 of the crew. The survivors are the Carpenter and James Russell. Capt. Bennett died 15 days previous to the vessel being fallen in with. The sufferers on board were then in such a state as not to be able to take hold of a rope thrown to them; they had been 21 days on the wreck, and had sus- tained life by gnawing from time to time the dead bodies of their shipmates, and drinking salt water. The vessel, with survivors, has arrived in the Texel from Cuba."—Hull Gazette.

Orange Institution.—The criminal information against Mr. Haywood, at the instance of Lieut.-Col. Fairman, has been dropped, in consequence of the sudden death of the former.

At the Reform dinner to Mr. O'Connell at Birming- ham on Thursday last, the number present was little short of 1,000.

The reports of the death of Mr. Wood, the banker, of Gloucester, celebrated for his great wealth and liberality, are wholly untrue.

The venerable Lord Stowell died on Thursday, at Early Court, near Reading, in his 91st year.

The strength of the Auxiliary Legion under Lieut.- Gen. Evans in Spain this month, is 8,500 men, com- prising the Commander-in-Chief, 4 Brigadier-Generals, 6 Cols, 23 Lieut.-Cols., 4 Brigade Majors, 33 Majors, 2 Cavalry Regiments, 1 Rifles, and 10 of Infantry, not including the Artillery force.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—The public debt of France has increased since the accession of Louis Philippe, upon an average of 40,000,000 francs per ann.; and it appears that Ministers will not be able to meet the present exigencies of the state without an extraordinary grant of 17,000,000 francs. Some economical measure is therefore indispensable.

SPAIN.—The Sentinelle des Pyrénees states, respecting the affairs of the 16th and 17th, between Salinas and Vit- toria, that after two days' fighting, in which there was a certain number of killed and wounded on each side, both parties returned to their former positions. On the side of the Christinos, Col. Narvaez was wounded, and two Cols. on the side of the Carlists. Gen. Cordova highly commends Col. Bernelle, who commands the Algerine Legion. It is affirmed, adds the same paper, that in consequence of some disagreement at the head-quarters of Don Carlos, the Gen.- in-Chief, Eguia, has been suspended from his functions.—Accounts from Bayonne, evidently from parties interested in the success of Don Carlos, represent the affairs of the 16th and 17th as having ended in a manner highly favourable to the Carlists. They state the loss sustained by the Queen's forces is upwards of 1,000 in killed. It is pretty clear, however, that the combined forces of the Government had returned to Vittoria on the 17th.

RUSSIA.—The Emperor Nicholas has agreed to bestow the hand of his eldest daughter, the Princess Olga, on King Otho of Greece.

NAPLES.—The Queen gave birth to a Prince the 16th inst. His Majesty will form a camp in the neighbour- hood of Naples early in the ensuing spring; and the several corps of the Neapolitan army will be assembled there.

GREECE.—The King of Bavaria arrived on the 7th ult. King Otho hastened to meet his father, and, after an affec- tionate embrace, the two sovereigns entered King Otho's carriage, and proceeded to Athens, where were triumphal arches of laurel and myrtle, and all the population hastened to cheer them.

The Court.

Their Majesties will come to town next Wednesday. Their departure from Brighton will be preceded by that of the Duchess of Gloucester, who will leave either on Monday or Tuesday. It is expected that the Queen will honour the two winter theatres with her presence; and his Majesty will pass an evening with the Duchess of Gloucester and a distinguished party at Gloucester-house. Her Royal High- ness will not return to Brighton this season; but, accord- ing to present arrangements, their Majesties will return on the Monday after the opening of the Session, and remain till within a day or two of the first levee. The Princess Augusta, the Landgravine, and Prince George of Cam- bridge, will remain at the Palace till the return of their Majesties.

The King will hold a Council on Tuesday next, when the speech for opening the session of parliament will be sub- mitted to his Majesty. On the following day Lord Mel- bourne will give a grand entertainment to the Duke of Leinster, the mover of the Address, and other peers, to whom the King's speech will be read after dinner. It is understood that his Majesty will open the session in person.

We learn by accounts from Hanover, that the Duchess of Cambridge is so much better that no bulletins are issued.

The Duke of Cumberland, soon after his arrival at St. James's Palace on Monday, left town to visit their Majesties at Brighton, where he was received by the King and Queen and Princesses with the most affectionate cordiality. The Royal Duke communicated to his relatives the pleasing in- telligence that sanguine expectations are entertained by the faculty, that the sight of his son Prince George will ulti- mately be restored.

The Landgravine of Hesse Homberg, on her return to town from the Pavilion, will reside in the apartments of the Duke of Cumberland, in St. James's Palace.

The King has granted unto Sir Keith Alexander Jackson, Bart., Captain in the 4th Light Dragoons, his Royal licence and permission that he may accept and wear the insignia of the Persian Order of the Lion and Sun, of the second class, which the Shah of Persia has been pleased to confer upon that Officer, in testimony of his Royal approbation of his conduct and services while attached to the Persian army.

Theatres.

KING'S THEATRE.—The opera will open with La Straniera on the 19th inst. In addition to the arrivals already announced, Madame de St. Romain, a celebrated dancer, whose talents have been appreciated at Pa Manich, and Berlin, is come. The guarantee requi by Madame Pasta has been offered, and no doubt will effected.

COVENT-GARDEN.—Otway's tragedy of Venice P served was played at this theatre on Wednesday eveni for the first time this season, in order to afford M Helen Faucit an opportunity of appearing in the ardu character of Belvidera. Before we enter upon the s ject of the performance, we must be allowed to offe few remarks upon the cast of the tragedy. In the fi place, we are at a loss to conceive what could induce M Osbaldiston to thrust himself forward as the represe ative of the bold and daring Pierre. There are a f actors in the company who could have sustained this p with at least some degree of animation and spirit, we should indeed be found sleeping on our post were to neglect informing Mr. O. that he is a very sorry presentative of Pierre;—fine feathers do not alw make fine birds. Could not a more respectable set Conspirators have been found in this establishment? never saw such a set on the boards of Covent-Garden, such a scene as that before the Duke and Senators. lar the most perfect performance of the evening was Jaffier of Mr. C. Kemble. This gentleman has m this character exclusively his own, for which (notwi standing his years) he is most peculiarly adapted, m tally, personally, and physically. Jaffier was alw considered by Mr. Kemble's admirers as one of his b piest efforts; and, as long as he sustains it in the perf manner of Wednesday evening, we desire to see no oth Mr. Osbaldiston's Pierre was a very sorry attempt, ba conceived, and worse executed; his daring of the c spirators, scene before the Duke, and quarrel with Jaf were cold, tame, and spiritless scenes; indeed, his defe are so glaring, that we fear he will never succeed in character that requires the least excitement. Miss F cit's Belvidera was by no means so perfect or pleasi performance as her Julia; indeed, upon the whole, were more disappointed than pleased with it. It w very uneven piece of acting, possessing several beau and many glaring defects. Her performance of the cond act was the best; she must follow the advice offered in our last notice, and study to improve her d very in passages requiring rapidity of utterance. T house was crowded to suffocation. Mr. Kemble Miss Faucit were loudly called for at the end of tragedy.

QUEEN'S.—Mrs. Nisbett has engaged the Fre company of actors just returned from Dublin: there several clever artistes among them; Cloup we are g to see among the number. The performances at Queen's will consist of three English burlettas and t French dramas every night, and we are glad to learn t the fair manageress will be supported by most of former subscribers to the French Theatre. Sev novelties are in active preparation. Mr. Elton is gaged, and will appear on Monday week in a new seri drama. Such pieces as The Twins will keep money of the theatre, Mrs. Nisbett. Get good English pie and with your combined forces you will make your the not only the most fashionable, but the most profitabl the metropolis. On Thursday a new burletta in act, called Borrowed Feathers, was produced, and pro successful, owing to the admirable style in which principal characters were supported by Mrs. Nish Miss Mordaunt, Mr. Parry, and Mr. Penson. T piece is a translation from the French, and its c merit consists in the smartness of the dialogue. Is miserably deficient in incident and situation. It is work of Dr. Millingen.

CHIT-CHAT.

A new comic drama, of broad farcical incidents, been accepted by the lessee of Drury-lane. The pi we understand, is quite original, and is written PEAKE. Messrs. Farren, Harley, Bartley, Meado Cooper, and Brindal; Mrs. Glover, Mrs. Humby, Mrs. C. Jones, have parts. Report speaks highly of wblin of this piece.

MEMORABILIA.

Movements.—The guns of the garrison, after a q repose of some fifteen years last past, are just risen fr their beds, and may be seen slyly peeping over the parap with open mouths, ready for a breeze. An expedit to the Poles is in contemplation, it is said.

Political Economy.—The scheme of Malthusian Br for sweeping off the pauper population of low degree, withholding relief, has been greatly improved on in reg to those of the superior grade, and bears the stamp liberality, premiums being offered to half-pay officers expatriation to the Colonial charnel houses, with gilded title of stipendiary magistrates; and, howe paradoxical, this has proved a most politic plan for creasing the "dead weight" by adding unto it.

Unfounded Rumour.—There is no foundation wh er for the report that, in the late phrenological examiion of the head of a celebrated economist, the bump compassiunate feeling was found. We understand n good authurity that great doubts exist as to the sence of even a heart.

A Hottentot Feature, or Dialogue of the Deck.—" Hoy! omono!" " Who' you want Massa Buckero-man? " end me your nosa to scrub a hammock on, Quono?" " Go long you hongmon-tief."

Knight-Errantry.—When famine cast a deadly gloom r the city of Oporto, during the siege, Capt. Lurra, pits of shot and shell, succeeded in landing o boatload pigs. The swinish auxiliaries were received on the ch with becoming respect by the Anglo-Portuguese gion, who turned out to a man, and presented arms as y passed.

Spain.—A Morine Legion of British blue-jackets, it aid, are about to join the regicides of Spain; each n, with a blunderbuss, mounted on a jackass, will ur the beach about St. Sebastian, and occasionolly r d-privateering in the interior, for the benefit ut ocent Queen.

Black Game.—A pleasing pastime for the pe Ireland has been found in parson-shooting by affurds as much sport for the peep-o'-day boys, ck cock and grouse do for their betters in the Highds of Scotland. Capt. O'Blarney, the great Irish ger, has at command a choice band of Papist pistoln, who can bring down o Protestont parson, though ched on the pinnacle of a tithe-rick.

Tropical Habits, or a Creole Sketch.—" Quashcha, you ger!" " Ma'am?" " Come here, Quashcha, and l my hand in out of de rain; and afterwards move my s for me while I eat a sugar-cane, yerree?" " Yes, sey."

Encouragement of the Arts.—A professor has lately n added to the establishment of the dock-yard, for the runction of the mechanics in the science of Architural Drawing, at the liberal salary of five shillings at is, twopence per head, being about thirty in number) a week. Not having seen the contract, we are une to say at whose cost pencils and paper are to be nd, whether that of the professor or the pupil. We t, however, Mr. Hume will not feel it necessary to ng the case before Parliament.

Novel Architecture.—It has been suggested, we hear, t, as the principles of ship-building have undergone siderable alteretion, it would be but prudent precau- wore vessels in future furnished with scuttles over ir bottoms and sides, so that when turning the turtle give their keels an airing, the crew may be at no loss an exit.

Perspective.—Messieurs the Captains Boniface, yal Ordinary afloat, are looking with delight spect of resuming the gentleman and resigning ter to reare befitting tavern-keepers on board kets; and the oceanic kings of Grease, who h g held sway as purveyors of soap and candles, are ally rejoiced at the hope of relinquishing the huckstergo of biscuit and butter dealers in detail, as well as conscience-compelling caution of furnishing every man with additional shores on departure, and, like careful undertaker, see that each D.D. is duly debited h a new suit, in which to be decently deposited in vy Jones's Locker.

Specimen of an Apology.—" You are a thief," says A. to the latter having taken to himself the whole plate of nuts which A. had paid. F. rose with fury in his face, and le a demonstration to chastise him; but A. threatened how fight, when in popped a brother bully, with as little etite for a fray as either of the non-combatant blusers, and found no difficulty in inducing F. to be satisfied with an apology, which A. consenting to, tendered the owing, viz. " I said F. was a thief: it is true, and sorry for it." This has been considered high ory, and A. is to have the nuts restored on. The mediator, we hope, will come in for lls at least.

NELSON AND HIS VALET.

Some are born great, others achieve greatness, and ers have greatness thrust upon them;"—but there is another class, who, by the quiet unobtrusive discharge laily duties, near the persons of the really celebrated, come in a measure identified with the heroes themves, and eventually acquire a lustre, which, though rowed, is yet scarcely undeserved. There are many ances on record of such lesser lights, and I would add he list a name, which has already been tacitly admit—that of my friend Tom Allan, the long-tried Valet de Chem," as he styles himself, of Lord lson.

t may be imagined with what a species of veneration hero's veteran domestic was received in a small ge in his native county, where he unexpectedly took his abode some eight back, in the service of one of his late master's relatives, who had most kindly charged himself with the care of the old man, and in whose household he enjoyed all the privileges with which years and fidelity ought always to be invested. Tom was, indeed, fully conscious of the important part he had played in the world, and was not at all inclined to lay aside his consequence, even though the source whence it was derived had so long been stopped. He always asserted that, had he been with his master during the action of Trafalgar, the fatal shot would never have been so correctly aimed. "Because, you see," he would say, "I used always to take care that he was dressed properly. When he was going into action, he used to say, 'Tom, I shall put on that coat,' (meaning the one decorated with his orders,) and I used to answer, 'No, my Lord, you won't,'—and when the battle was over,—'There now, don't you think this coat looks better than if it was drilled through with bullets?'" No man is a hero to his valet de chambre, and it is not improbable that the faithful solicitude of the servant might once more prevail over the hardy daring of the master, who preserved a life invaluable to his country. He intended to join Lord Nelson, and was on his road to Yarmouth, but the last ship had sailed before he reached the place, and he never beheld his master again. He did not, however, save his Lordship's life by an accidental circumstance. Before the battle of the Nile, Nelson had a new hat, which was too large for him; his servant accordingly stitched in a pad, just over the temple, in order to make it fit the head, and this pad prevented still further mischief from the shot which destroyed his eye; the hat was preserved by the Queen of Naples in a glass case,—forming rather too distant a pendent to the uniform at Greenwich.

To my great regret, I had but few opportunities of drawing upon the fund of anecdote and adventure that the old seaman's life must have afforded. One of his peculiarities was, that nothing could induce him to enter a boat, and though his services were often required on the water by the ladies of the family, he always said "he did not understand rowing." The hatred to foreigners also, one of the mainsprings of action in the minds of Nelson's men, was carried by Tom to a laughable extreme: his constant cry, when I knew him, was, that "no good could come to England while she was governed by a foreigner"—because the Duke of Wellington, then at the head of affairs, was an Irishman. The genial influence of hot brandy and water unlocked his [illegible] and his to[illegible] and I recollect, one evening, whe[illegible] favo[illegible]rage by his side, he comment[illegible] r[illegible] of "Old Boney." "Yes, [illegible]s the plate I have change[illegible] ave handed to Boney, when we [illegible]off [illegible]d he carried the flag of truce between [illegible]rench. He then offered his services to us, b[illegible] seen up to some of his tricks already, and we [illegible] nothing to say to him.—we little thought, whe[illegible] landed him at Leghorn, what he would come to;*—'twas off Leghorn too, that we fell in with Captain [illegible]. He was pressed one night, along with ten others, aboard my Lord's ship, and made a foremast man. But in a little time my Lord said to me, (he was leaning on the capston,) 'Tom, I see —— keeps a journal; go and ask him if he will let me see it;' so I went, but —— said, 'I wonder what he wants to overhaul my book for.—I wish he'd let me go.' 'Tis not likely he'll do that,' said I, while he wants good sailors.' When my Lord saw ——'s book, he said, 'Tom, this fellow keeps as good a journal as any officer on board his Majesty's fleet—he shall walk my quarter-deck.'" In a week's time he did so; was shortly after sent home in a captured vessel, appointed to the command, and has reached the head of his noble profession, proving both his own innate power, and Nelson's penatration in discerning it. "Ah," said he, with a sigh, as he finished his story, "if I had but been a scholar," as my Lord often said, "I might have been as high as Sir Thomas Hardy† or any of the rest of them—but I had no learning." Poor Tom! I scarce know whether to lament or exult, that you too, in a life of useful activity, should be brought to acknowledge the truth of the axiom, that knowledge is power.

Allan always reminded me of the shattered mast of one of his former dwellings; his face was seared by wind and weather, but there was an unyielding strength about his short stunted frame, that seemed to defy the attacks of time; his long hair was almost as black, and his eye as piercing as when he was in his youth, and might, according to his own belief, "have had either of the princesses of Naples, if he had been so minded." He was an excellent specimen of the untutored and undaunted British sailor, and maintained a due ascendancy in his master's kitchen till his death, when the hardy veteran, having faithfully served two masters, to whom, I believe, he was with reason equally attached,—and his country, for which he had fought "in sixteen skirmishes, and fourteen regular engagements," to use his own terms, has at length come to an anchor in the Hospital at Greenwich, where he appears perfectly happy, and where, I dare say, he "fights all his battles o'er again," and considers himself much more elevated above his companions in repose, than did his honoured master above his fellows in arms.—United Service Journal.

* Is it possible my old friend's memory may have played him false here? Has this circumstance been ever mentioned? If true, it presents a curious instance of the trifles upon which the fate even of nations sometimes depends. I have often thought that, if Nelson had been Napoleon's instead of King George's Admiral, England would not have been saved, for a fleet was all the tyrant wanted. On the other hand, if Allan's statement be correct, it is possible that the short experience thus acquired of Nelson's inflexibility of purpose, courage, and quickness of decision, may have taught Napoleon that he had, in the British Admiral, an enemy who could cope with him, and inspired him with the unusual dread of consequences that certainly saved England.

Literary Notices.

Memoirs of Don Manuel de Godoy, Prince of the Peace, formerly Prime Minister of the King of Spain, &c. Written by Himself, with an Introduction, Historical and Biographical Notes, &c. 2 vols. Bentley.

This biography is one of the greatest importance—Godoy's rapid elevation to unlimited power—the daring and decided character of his measures—the eventful period during which he wielded the destinies of Spain, have assigned to him a station in modern history more conspicuous, perhaps, than that of any other individual, with the sole exception of Napoleon Buonaparte. That he should have been able so long to maintain in a firm grasp the fortune so unexpectedly placed in his hands, is a mystery, towards the solution of which rumour, with her hundred tongues, has for many years been busy; and accordingly more strange surmises, more wanton inventions, more fingitous asperalons, have taken him for their object, than ever before assailed a public man. His career has been a problem, which remained only the more inscrutable in proportion to the efforts made to raise the veil. And why was the secret of his history thus long-lived? Why did the Prince consent to linger in utter silence whilst the world was busy with his name and with his honour? Condemned by the court factions of Spain to be a fugitive from his native country, he yet dared not even in his exile, utter a single word to clear that which was obscure, or to vindicate his tortured reputation and all this suffering he was content to endure, rather than be deficient in respect to the memory of his late sovereign, Charles IV., who had repeatedly enjoined him not to publish his memoirs during the life of Ferdinand VII. The premature death of the latter Prince has, however, unsealed the lips of his father's former Minister and numerous disclosures, various and startling in their character, are at length laid before the world, and Godoy has the unexpected satisfaction of witnessing them in his; for, being much older than Ferdinand, he could at one time have looked to posterity for the justice he will now win from his contemporaries.

The present work is, in fact, the private history of Spain during the greater part of the last half century, declared in the attractive form of the autobiography of its Prime Minister. All the celebrated characters who figured at the court of Charles IV. and his Queen are depicted to the life, and illustrated with abundant anecdote. The projects of Buonaparte, as regards the Peninsula, have a new light thrown upon them; and, above all, the reader's curiosity will be stimulated by a succession of revelations connected with the dark and mysterious power of the Inquisition, whose infamous proceedings Godoy endeavoured, and not altogether without success, to crush.

The volumes before us are altogether so replete with the appearance of interest, that we are impatient for those by which they are to be succeeded.

A Table of Arcs for facilitating the Computation of the Latitude by Double Altitudes of the Fixed Stars for the Years 1835, 1845, and 1855, with Annual Variations for intermediate Years. By Charles F. A. Shadwell, M. Rivingtons.

A GREAT book, we say not how truly, has been designated a great evil; but, if this be generally true, we are sure that it is especially and indubitably so in all cases that concern the seafaring portion of the community. To that most important part of this nation, the little brochure before us, in 12 octavo pages, contains matter calculated, by rendering navigation more safe, to do much good. Small though the book be, it may prove no small benefit to those whose business is in great waters, and "those who go down to the sea in ships."

The practice of ascertaining the latitude by two altitudes of the sun taken before, after, or on each side of noon, the elapsed time being measured by a watch, has long been established, much having been done to shorten the calculation, and leave to the mariner time for other important duties, by the use of extensive tables, which most of our naval readers will not fail to remember, when we mention the columns of half-elapsed time, middle time, and log-rising. Such, we believe, were invariably used until Dr. Inman gave a short direct method, to which, in a recent edition, facility was added by the use of log. haversines. The Doctor's method is applicable to all cases of double altitudes, whether of one heavenly body at different times, or different heavenly bodies at the same time; but, nevertheless, obtaining the latitude by double altitudes of the fixed stars has not crept into practice, being found to involve lengthy and tedious calculations, with consequent liability to errors in computation. The author of this little work (Charles F. A. Shadwell, R. N.) has therefore selected twenty couplets of the fixed stars well known to sailors, and from their accurately ascertained positions in declination and right ascension has for each couplet computed two arcs to seconds of a degree for each decade of years up to 1855, with the annual variation in each arc for correcting to intermediate time. These arcs, with the declination, or polar distance of one celestial object, and the altitudes, or zenith distances of each, form data by an easy operation, in which the most common logarithmic tables may be used. To those who are provided with an edition of Inman's Tables, containing log. haversines, the calculation will prove still more easy. In each case, however, a third arc is necessarily calculated by the navigator, from the application of which to one of the arcs given in Mr. Shadwell's table, a fourth arc is found; and to prevent a difficulty which has occurred to many in using Dr. Inman's method as to that application being by addition or subtraction, the proper sign + or − is given in this table for each couplet of stars, varying only with their position north or south of the observer's zenith. When it is considered that errors of observation will not produce a corresponding error in latitude, we should not be surprised if navigators hereafter preferred double altitudes to the meridianal altitude of a single star, or even to one on each side of the zenith. We have experienced great advantages from stellar observations, and can easily imagine the frequent recurrence of circumstances under which every means of ascertaining the latitude at night would be anxiously sought, and carefully essayed by men and therefore do we recommend this table, with the explanation, rules, and examples attached, to the use of every mariner, and to the attention of every practical astronomer.

"Whose march is on the mountain wave, Whose home is on the deep;"

Boswell's Life of Johnson. Vol. X. John Murray.

This volume concludes a very unique and beautiful edition of Johnson. It is embellished with a full-length portrait of Boswell, with a very admirable vignette of Johnson; and its contents are the anecdotes and lucubrations of the Doctor's life, many of which have not before appeared in print. It is the most complete and entertaining volume that could have accompanied "Boswell's Life:" it is worthy of the memory of one of the proudest pillars of English literature, and it will add to the reputation of Mr. Murray as promoting, by valuable sterling publications, the literature of the country.

Cherville's First Step to French. Effingham Wilson.

M. De Cherville's little work is intended for beginners, and for those who only know the French language as it is written. His design is to give a comprehensive view of French by means of connected examples, easy to be recollected by the young pupil. By this familiar and interesting method an elegant pronunciation may be acquired, and study made both amusing and rapid. We like the plan, and recommend the book to parents and teachers.

The Soldier's Help to the Knowledge of Divine Truth. By the Rev. G. K. Gleig. Rivingtons.

In this volume, containing twenty-four sermons, the object of the reverend and gallant author has been to reduce to the level of the private soldier's capacity the whole scheme of man's redemption; to make plain to him that the religion of the gospel is a religion of love; and that it is not opposed either to the duties of the noble profession of arms or to the frank and manly courage which those duties create. We do not know anything more calculated to impart religious and honourable feelings to the soldier than this excellent little work, and we hope to find it in every regimental library.

The English Bijou Almanack. A. Schloss.

This beautiful little gem has just claim to be considered among the "Curiosities of Literature." It is a wonderful typographical production, containing, in the small space of three-fourths of an inch by half, the usual information of an almanack, with six portraits, and also poetical illustrations by L. E. L.

COURT-MARTIAL.

Assistant-Surgeon J. D. Grant, 82nd Regiment

On the 21st inst. a Court-Martial was held at the Royal Barracks, Dublin, upon Assist.-Surg. J. D. Grant, 82d reg. The Court was composed of Col. Lord Saltoun, C.B., Gren. Guards; Lieut.-Col. Jones, 12th Foot; Maj. T. Cubitt, R.A.; Maj. F. Maunsell, 85th; Maj. F. Copland, 2d Dmg. Guards; Maj. T. Falls, 93d; Majs. J. Ross and W. H. Elliott, 51st; Maj. E. B. Cotteis, 7th Drag. Guards; Capts. J. Banner, 93d, J. Pascoe, R. A., G. H. F. Campbell, Gren. Guards, H. I. French, 85th, Sir R. A. Douglas, 12th, W. Austin, 51st. The Dep. Judge Advocate and Judge Martial, D. Walker, Esq., officiated. The following are the charges:—1st, For being indebted to Serjt. Wynne 20*l.* 15*s.*, with having promised repeatedly to pay the same, but had not done so. 2nd, For being indebted to James Salmon, shop-keeper, Mullingar, for goods, 8*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.*, and for having, by false representations, induced him to give him cash on a bill for 30*l.* on Messrs. Armit and Borough, who had no assets of his in their hands at the time. 3d, That he became indebted to Joseph Roan, shop-keeper, Mullingar, 3*l.* 6*s.* 10½*d.*, and also with getting from him 12*l.* on a bill on Armit and Co., but which he never paid. 4th, That he was indebted to Messrs. N. W. Brady and Co., Dublin, 18*l.* for certain goods, and that he gave them a bill to accept in discharge thereof, same purporting to be a bill of exchange drawn on one Garman, of Backlane, London, for 25*l.*, out of which he had given them 7*l.* in cash, but remainder not paid. 5th, That he was indebted to Dr. Ripon, of Chatham, sixty guineas for a horse and phaeton, for which he gave a promissory note, but had not satisfied same. Witnesses were produced to substantiate these charges. The defendant declined entering into cross-examination. The Court granted an adjournment till the 26th to enable the prisoner to prepare for his defence, when Mr. H. Walshe read the declaration of the prisoner, who avowed, in the most solemn manner that he was innocent of any intention to act dishonourably; he stated that he was married, had only one child, and fervently solicited that the honourable Court would weigh well the charges against him before they consigned his name to reproach and ignominy, and branded his wife and child with the stigma of his dishonour. Dr. Young, Dr. James Millar, 51st, and Fiddes, 85th, with others, gave the defendant an excellent character, and the Court closed.

A Cannibal's Tribute to Valour.—The natives of New Zealand manifest their respect for European valour in a peculiar and characteristic manner. A chief, [illegible] that the natives of Tawmake had lately killed a European, and eaten him; but that they would not eat the lower part of the arm and hand, as a compliment to his bravery.—Asiatic Journal.

In 1770 officers in the army were ordered to discontinue the practice of carrying fusees, and to wear their sashes round the waist, after the German manner, and not over the shoulder, in imitation of the Highlanders, who still continue the old custom, at well as our Indian officers, for the ease and convenience it affords.

Lazy Lubber.—The origin of this celebrated sea term is not generally known. In the time of Ethelred, the Danes yearly invaded England for the tribute which they had imposed upon the English, which one year amounted (at that period) to the enormous sum of 40,000*l.* As these plunderers did not work, but received all the gains of the Britons, they gave them the name of "Lur-dans," by way of reproach, which signifies "Lazy Lubbers."

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL,

unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in curl under the different varieties of atmosphere. Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO., Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 62, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and art is there well known to succeed in outrivalling even the far-famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found undeviatingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if lost from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY, sustain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed in dye Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fœtid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off: for, minute as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury; and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff comb, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3*s.* 6*d.*, 6*s.* 6*d.*, and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 12*s.* each.

YOLAND'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION is the most wonderful Medicine ever discovered by man, for the cure of GONORRHŒA, GLEETS, STRICTURES, WHITES, Pains in the Loins, Affections of the Kidneys, Gravel, Irritation of the Urethra or Bladder, and for all Urinary Diseases in both sexes.—This Medicine is patronised, prescribed, recommended, and sanctioned by the Most Eminent of the Faculty, not only in England but on the Continent; and stated by them, from experience, to be the only Medicine that can be relied on for the cure of these complaints, and they invariably resort to it when their own remedies fail.

YOLAND'S SCRIPT SOLUTION cures both sexes in all times sooner than any other known remedy, with the most triumphant success, after every Medicine of the present day has proved ineffectual, so that this justly celebrated specific has arrived at the acme of perfection, surpassing every thing of the kind that ever bore the name of medicine, frequently curing some of these serious diseases in a few hours. Those who have suffered from any of the above diseases for many years (such as strictures, &c.) will find upon taking this medicine for a short time, that, if not entirely cured, they will no longer feel inconvenience from the trifling complaint that remains.

References to respectable Surgeons, who are in the habit of prescribing this medicine extensively, will be given on application to the Proprietor's Agents.

Sold in Sealed Packets, with full directions, so that any one may cure themselves with perfect safety and secrecy, sent to any part of the world by HANNAY and Co., 63, Oxford-street, the corner of Wells-street, London, to whom dealers in the country are requested to forward their orders direct; and Retail by all respectable Medicine Venders. TESTIMONIALS.

From JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba.

From BRANSBY COOPER, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success.

"New-street, Spring Gardens, April 13, 1835."

From WILLIAM HANTSCH, Esq., House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine to very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of, the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly,

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.

FAMILIES in want of really good Servants

of every description, both Male and Female, will decidedly find their interest better consulted, and their object much sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, No. 134, OXFORD-STREET, near Hollis-street, established in 1830, than through the adoption of any other method whatever; as Domestics, with good characters, are in waiting to be hired from 10 to 5 o'clock.

Many persons are prejudiced against an Establishment for Hiring Servants; but if the Servant possess a good character, it certainly is perfect nonsense to suppose that it is injured by the readiest method having been taken to procure a Situation.

THE HISTORY of the OVERTHROW of the ROMAN EMPIRE, and the Formation of the Principal European States. From Original Sources, Oriental and European, and comprising the latest elucidations of the Continental and English Antiquarians and Scholars.

By W. C. Taylor, L.L.D., M.R.A.S., and F.S.S.

"Dr. Taylor has diligently availed himself of the recent researches, and incorporated their results with his judicious labours. By this means he has given much additional value to his performance, and especially in all that relates to the eastern empire of Rome, its connexions and vicissitudes. He has, indeed, supplied the public with a volume which we cannot too highly recommend."—Literary Gazette.

PORTSMOUTH, Feb. 5.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Vestal, Alert, and Messenger arrived on Monday from the eastward. The Messenger having completed her coals, took the Erebus in tow, and proceeded with her to Woolwich. The Pique taken out of dock, and the Benbow hauled in. The Numa transport sailed to the eastward. The Mastiff surveying vessel, Lieut. Graves, arrived on Wednesday, at the Motherbank, from Tangiers; she is still in quarantine, but orders are in the port for her to go into harbour to be paid off, so soon as she is released. The wind having drown round to the northward, enabled the Alert to proceed to Falmouth, and the Stakesby and Bristol transports to Cork on Thursday. The Seaflower and her tender, the Cracker, have also sailed for the protection of the Jersey fishery, and the Speedy cutter to Plymouth. The Vestal's crew were paid wages on Thursday, and she sailed this day (Friday) with despatches for V.-Adm. Sir G. Cockburn. The Vestal goes direct to Bermuda. The Romney was taken into dock on Friday. Ships in port—Mastiff at the Motherbank. Britannia, Melville, Royal George yacht, Excellent, Romney, Parmelia transport, in harbour.

MILFORD HAVEN, 1st Feb.—(From our own Correspondent.)—It has blowe a gale here from the westward during the greatest part of last week, which has driven many merchant vessels into the port, among others the ship Linton, bound to Bombay from the port of Liverpool. She had a narrow escape in passing The Hats and Barrels. A small vessel was wrecked in Dale roads, near the mouth of the harbour. All the crew, except the Master, were saved. On the 28th inst., in honour of his late Majesty's accession, the Pembrokeshire United Service Club held their annual ball at Pembroke. The grand doings took place at the Town Hall, which was not only tastefully, but elegantly, fitted up for the occasion. At one end of the room the stern of a line-of-battle ship was faithfully represented; the Vanguard, I believe, one of the crack ships of Surveyor Symonds. This composed the orchestra; at the other flags, and various et ceteras formed a Field Officer's tent, at which an artilleryman in full uniform was stationed with bayonet fixed, walking sentry like, "his lonely round." Bayonets, sabres, and such like destructive weapons, were arranged round the walls in form of stars, suns, and moons too, I believe, which, together with festoons of flowers, had a most imposing effect. Things remained thus till half-past 11 o'clock, when, by the raising a drop curtain, the tent above described, as if by magic, changed into a table of all the luxuries imaginable. The repast, for such it may well be called, consisted of every delicacy that could please the tastes of the female, as well as the male, part of the "gay and festive throng." Thus far of the entertainers and their entertainment, and now for the entertained. Here description fails; but if we can suppose a scene graced with all that delicious softness for which beauty is so notorious, together with an astonishing share of pretty faces, for which the Welsh ladies have ever been so justly celebrated, then, indeed, a faint picture of the assembly may be imagined. But to fully appreciate the reality, nothing short of an actual inspection could accomplish. The mixture of uniform of the united services had a most pleasing appearance. There were the officers of the Royal Yacht, of the Marine detachment, and the Royal Engineers. Pembroke never before witnessed such a spectacle at any of her balls. There was nothing wanting that liberality and the most decided inventive talent of the Stewards could accomplish, and certain must it have been the case, that hearts, hitherto, perhaps, invulnerable, and that have defied the "cannon's rattle," have yet to be cured of the pangs inflicted by the delightful fascinations of Pembrokeshire's beautiful daughters. None present, surely, could answer in the affirmative to the question "Is there a heart that never loved?"

Orders have been received at Pembroke, in common with all the other dockyards, for the mechanics to work an additional half-day in the week. Both here and up at the dockyard conjecture is alive as to this unexpected proceeding. How this will effect Mr. Bardwood's plan, which he proposed to the Admiralty more than two years back, for the educating the apprentices in these establishments on Saturdays, is unknown, but it is likely, as the Board of Admiralty have but lately acted upon his suggestions, that the arrangements will still be carried into effect for that purpose. It is one of the best plans that has been thought of for many years for preparing proper and efficient persons to fill situations of trust and importance in our dockyards.

PLYMOUTH, Feb. 4.—Belleisle, 74, is to be fitted in every respect as a damnonstration ship, in the room of Kent, 78, which has been found defective. Belleisle was sent round to Pembroke yard, and had a thorough repair about 3 ye since. San Josef, late flag ship at this port, is to be rigged, and her hold cleaned, preparatory to being laid in ordinary. Royal Tar steamer, which came in here last week for a supply of coals, is still lying off the West m She is bound for St. Andero, with officers, soldiers, and horses for the British Legion in Spain. Donegal, 78, hauled off from the Dock Yard on Monday to be maste the fore and main masts were put in on Tuesday, but fr the heavy wind nothing further is done. Implacable, 76 to be docked this day, weather permitting. Everet, Lieut. Bosanquet, has captured two vessels, fitted as slave having on board 3,000 doubloons. The Leveret and prizes were about to proceed to the Cape. The Leve took out the new orders, under which vessels fitted out slave ships, without any slaves being found on board, to be detained, a measure which will totally destroy t detestable traffic. Letters from his Majesty's s Curlew, off Sierra Leone, 6th Dec., all well. Lieutenant Norcott has taken command, having arrived in Pylades from this port. H.M.N. Yard, Cape of Good Ho 19th Nov.:—The Admiral is gone down the Coast fo month or two, and on his return all his establishment w be reduced and officers sent home. The Victualling sto of the Naval Hospital and houses belonging thereto are all the "Skeleton" will be where is now the yard. Armstrong is gone home, and the Mate, Clerk, Matron, leave on the 31st December. The Spitfire steamer ordered to proceed to the West Indies immediately. may be expected to call in here in about ten days, on way down Channel. In Hamoaze—Royal Adelaide, Ha Prince Regent transport, Royal Tar, with horses bound Spain. At the Island—Pluto under quarantine.

PACKET STATION.—On Tuesday week a meeting of landed and mercantile interests took place in Dublin, take into consideration the establishment of a packet stat on the western coast of Ireland, and to adopt such measu as might seem most effectual in order to have ascertai which harbour was fittest to be selected for such obje Sir Henry Maredyth was called to the chair. The Kni of Kerry said, that of such general and vast importance the object to Ireland, that he felt it would be a pity it sho be defeated by any particular interest—(hear). If, the fore, the particular place (Valentia) should not be fixed he sincerely desired that some other port in Ireland mig He feared there was no intention in England to prevent departures for America from the coast of Ireland. He wo suggest a petition to the House of Lords, as no inquiry fore them would be on oath. Col. Gore said he we prefer having an investigation before a public board in I land. It did not strike him that Berehaven was a harbo at all suitable for so extensive a purpose as that conte plated. It was, he understood, suggested to Captain Eva to examine what harbour would be best adapted for a pac station, and that he had examined Berehaven alone, a decided on it. More caution should have been used. Everard said it would be well to have the instructions which Capt. Evans acted. It was then agreed that petition be referred to both Houses of the Legislature.

The Vestal and Alert had a partial trial of sailing their passage from Sheerness. The packet behaved remarkably well, but owing to the stormy weather, she was, might be supposed, not carried by the larger vessel.

The Childers, 18, was at Tarragona on the 16th ul the squadron in that quarter consisted of this ship, Rodney, Tyne, Clio, and Jaseur.

ROYAL MARINES (Woolwich).—A private belonging Woolwich division having received 200 lashes, "drummed out" last week, and another on Monday l both of them for selling their "Kits," the latter five time

WOOLWICH DOCKYARD POLICE.—A new code of regu tions has been transmitted by the Admiralty to the Hig efficient director (Lieut. Pearse, who, by-the-by, is the n gentleman left holding this important post who held situation of warden). Upon the last master of the for it was intimated to the men that a fresh contract was out the supply of clothing, and that strict attention would paid to the fit and material.

The Alban st. v., Lieut. Brown, was paid off on 29th ult., at Woolwich dockyard. It is not yet determin whether she is to be sold, but if she is employed again will require very extensive repairs.

Spitfire st. v., Lieut. Kennedy, will be out of Woolwi Dock immediately, and is expected to leave for her destin tion, the West Indies next week. She did not lose a sin hand on her late service on that station.

Lieut. W. Southey, R.N., Coast Guard, No. 31, Low Rye, has been presented, by the Society for saving li from shipwreck, with a gold medal, for saving the crew o French brig last October, and the crew with 10*l.* that we in the life-boat with this brave and humane officer.

Forty-seven labourers have been recently entered Devonport Dockyard, and five oarmakers at Sheerness.

The Assist.-Master Attendant at Sheerness proceeded the Messenger steamer to Portsmouth, to bring round Erebus, to be fitted for the Arctic seas.

Several vessels are undergoing survey, preparatory to bei taken up to remove the convicts from England next mont Commander Sharer, R.N., Coast Guard Service, Sussex, made a third class Knight of the Hanoverian Guelphic Order.

The late Adm. Ferrier was a man possessed of eccentric of the most kindly feelings of a brave and rough seaman. He married, about two years since, Mrs. Leach, of Deal, widow of the late Capt. Leach, R.N., late Ordinary Service, Devonport, whom we understand he has left in most affluent circumstances and no issue.

The Melville is fitting very fast at Portsmouth; she is expected to be ready for sea by the 1st March.

Vera Cruz, 19th Dec.—The Sheldrake packet has not returned from Tampico.

The Surveyor of the Navy, Capt. Symonds, visited Portsmouth dockyard yesterday, to inspect the Benbow, Pembroke, and Pique. The two first are in dock, and ordered to be fitted for sea, not demonstration; the latter is in the basin. Twenty-five rope-makers' labourers were entered for that department.

Royal Artillery, Woolwich.—At a meeting held on the 30th Dec. last, the committee for conducting the affairs of the Library, determined on increasing the insurance (hitherto 1500*l.*) to 3000*l.*, of which notice was given to the Sun Office by the Assist.-Librarian, Serj. Murphy, the policy of which has been effected. The army accoutrement makers are exhibiting a shoulder-strap of a new pattern to that at present worn, being wholly composed of brass plates, and the ornament of the hand grenade in the centre of the crescent, instead of being in silver, is composed of the former metal. It will be as well for officers giving orders to their clothiers, to pause upon this. Of course the Horse Brigade being Light Cavalry will remain in statu quo.

East India Intelligence.

Bengal Civil Fund.—A correspondent of the Calcutta Courier states the following astounding fact, that the liabilities of the Civil Fund amount in round numbers to 18 lacs of rupees, the assets to 13, leaving a deficit of five. The entire accounts have been submitted to Mr. Curnin, and the above is the melancholy result, on the accuracy of which the subscribers may depend. The conduct of the trustees and managers must have been extremely negligent for having allowed the fund to fall into such a state without bringing it to the notice of the service. By Mr. Curnin's calculations, in order to place it in a state of solvency, it will be necessary to reduce the pension to each widow now on the fund and hereafter from 300*l.* per annum to 150*l.* The correspondent recommends the following propositions:—1st. That no one family now on the fund, or who may hereafter come on the fund, receive more in the aggregate annually from the fund than 500*l.* 2ndly. That Mr. Curnin be requested to state what additional subscriptions will be necessary from each subscriber to maintain the fund at its present rates of pension to widows and children. 3rdly. That he be requested to frame a scale of additional subscriptions, on payment of which in future subscribers wishing it may continue to secure the present benefits of the fund to their families. 4thly. That the Court of Directors be earnestly solicited for a transfer to the Civil Fund of a small portion of the enormous unappropriated Annuity Fund. 5thly. That the salary of the Secretary be reduced immediately from 500 sicca rupees per mensem to 250.

The following is the scheme for modifying the Civil Service Annuities in Madras, submitted by the Court of Directors to the Board of Controul. The particulars are stated to have been extracted from the Court's letter to the Indian government, sent up to the Board for approval. 1. Pensions to be granted to civil servants of half their value, if compelled by sickness to quit the service, as follows:—after 15 years service, 500*l.* per annum; after 10 or less than 15 years', 250*l.*; less than 10 years' a donation of 500*l.* 2. The number of unaccepted annuities at the close of the year to be declared; two-thirds of them to be appropriable to subscribers, duly qualified in order of seniority, as respects applicants within three months after surplus declared, on payment of one quarter instead of half value; if the subscriptions of applicants exceed one quarter, the excess to be returned, the remaining third, and such of the two-thirds as may not be claimed to lapse to the fund. 3. Pensions may be paid in India to those wishing to reside there after resigning the service. 4. Annuities to be paid quarterly, and up to the period of decease, on condition that the sums paid by annuitants be increased in proportion. The additional sum to be equal to the whole, not half, of the increased advantage. 5. The local government to place out of employ such inefficients as have served 22 years, and will not take their pension.—Madras Gazette, Oct. 3.

The Deputy Post Master of Benares, the veteran Gervaise Robinson, has gone the way of all flesh, after a residence, we believe in India of about 50 years; Mr. J. Palmer and he were Midshipmen together on board a man-of-war, and he will hear with regret of his friend's demise. The duties of the department have been confided to Capt. W. Murray, 22nd N.I., who cancels his former appointment of Assistant to the Commissioner in the Sangur and Nerbudda territories.—Sup. to Madras Gazette, Sept. 26.

We have ascertained that most of the indigo factories in the neighbourhood of Allahabad expect to do very well this season, and much better than the last, which also turned out favourable. The produce in the commencement of the manufactory was good, but in consequence of the heavy falls of rain has decreased, otherwise the factories, it was anticipated, would have actually realised a "bumper season."—Ibid.

By the overland despatch from India, which left Multan 11th Jan. in H.M.S. Pluto, we have letters from Bombay to Nov. 9, from Madras, Oct. 30, and Agra, Oct. 24. By them we learn of the safe arrival at Madras of the Bishop of Madras by the Exmouth; also of the bad health of Sir F. Adam, in consequence of which he has gone to the hills, with the intention of returning home at the expiration of two months, if not recovered. His private secretary and son-in-law, Capt. Boileau, may be expected home immediately.

Mr. William Fairlie Clark, formerly of the Bengal C.S., and afterwards for many years a partner in the firm of Ferguson and Co. until the time of its failure, died 24th Sept. This is the second member of this firm who has died within the last three months. Mr. Clark was a gentleman of retired habits, but of most amiable character, and was much esteemed by the mercantile community.—Englishman, Sept. 25.

The Jeypore mail was stopped on the 9th inst. by an artillerymen named Rigby, who knocked the Harkara down, and possessed himself of a small packet addressed to Capt. Anderson, which, from its size, probably appeared to him to contain something of value. He did not long enjoy his prize, being seized by some Zumeendars and delivered to the Ketwal of Agra, from whom he made an ineffectual attempt to escape. He is now confined in cantonments, and will be tried by a General Court-Martial.—Ibid, Sept. 24.

H.M.S. Jupiter, having Lord Auckland and suite on board, touched at Rio on 17th Nov., and proceeded on her voyage.

Literary Notices.

Hints on Etiquette. Longman and Co.

WE have been much pleased with this little brochure, portion of which, we understand, is from the MSS. note ook of a lady of rank: it is calculated to smooth the path into society, and to give to many very necessary information. The subjects discussed are, introductions, marriages, dinners, smoking, snuff, dress, dancing, visiting, tattling, &c. Etiquette, as our author says, is a barrier which society draws around itself as a protection against offences the "law" cannot touch—a shield against the intrusion of the impertinent, the improper, and the vulgar—a guard against those obtuse persons who, having neither talent nor delicacy, would be continually thrusting themselves into the society of men to whom their presence might (from the difference of feeling and habit) be offensive, and even insupportable. We will extract some advice, and first of Introductions.

"Never 'introduce' people to each other, without a previous understanding that it will be agreeable to both. There are many reasons why people ought never to be introduced to the acquaintance of each other, without the consent of each party previously obtained. A man may suit the taste, and be agreeable enough to one, without being equally so to the rest of his friends—nay, as it often happens, decidedly unpleasing; a stupid person may be delighted with the society of a man of learning or talent, in whom in return such an acquaintance may prove an annoyance and a clog, as one incapable of offering an interchange of thought, or an idea worth listening to.—But if you should find an agreeable person in private society, who seems desirous of making your acquaintance, there cannot be an objection to your meeting his advances half way, although the ceremony of an 'introduction' may not have taken place; his presence in your friend's house being a sufficient guarantee for his respectability, as of course if he were an improper person he would not be there.—Should you, whilst walking with your friend, meet an acquaintance, never introduce them.—In making 'introductions,' take care to present the person of the lower rank to him of the higher; that is, the commoner should be presented to the peer, not the peer to the commoner; Dr. A. to Lord B., not Lord B. to Dr. A. Observe the same rule with ladies—the lady (as a female) claiming the highest rank, it is to her the gentleman must be presented, not the lady to the gentleman.—Be cautious how you take an intimate friend uninvited even to the house of those with whom you may be equally intimate, as there is always a feeling of jealousy that another should share your thoughts and feelings to the same extent as themselves, although good breeding will induce them to behave civilly to your friend on your account.—Friendship springs up from sources so subtle and undefinable, that it cannot be forced into particular channels; and whenever the attempt has been made, it has usually been unsuccessful.—Never make acquaintances in coffee-houses or other public places. As no person who respects himself does so, you may reasonably suspect any advances made to you.—An adherence to Etiquette is a mark of respect; if a man be worth knowing, he is surely worth the trouble to approach properly.—It will likewise relieve you from the awkwardness of being acquainted with people of whom you might at times be ashamed, or be obliged under many circumstances to 'cut.'—It is, however, understood in society, that a person having been properly introduced to you has some claim on your good offices in future; you cannot therefore slight him without good reason, and the chance of being called to an account for it."

From this we come to Letters of Introduction:—

"If you have letters of introduction from one friend to another, do not take them, but send them, with your card of address. If he be a gentleman, he will return your visit as soon as possible; at any rate it will give him an option, which by taking your letters in person you do not do, but rather force yourself upon him, whether he will or no. If your letters be on business only, no ceremony is necessary—take them at once. In all such matters never trust to a second that which may be so much better done by yourself.—There cannot be a more awkward situation for both parties than whilst one is reading a letter with the endeavour to discover who the other can be, or a position in which the bearer looks so foolish, or feels so uncomfortable,—then comes the bow, a cold shake of the hand, with the few civil words of course,—and all because you come upon a stranger who is unprepared; therefore give him time to read the letter you bring, and to consider how he may best show his regard for your introducer by his attentions to yourself.—If a gentleman be the bearer of an 'introduction' to you, leave a card with him without fail, if it be only as an acknowledgment of having received your friend's letter; there is no rudeness so great as to leave it unnoticed,—it is a slight to the stranger as well as to the introducer, which no subsequent attentions will cancel; you are not obliged to invite him, as that is a matter of choice.—For the same reasons, a letter should never remain unanswered a moment longer than is absolutely unavoidable. Should you not have time to answer it fully, an acknowledgment merely is better than no notice taken of it at all.—An adherence to these rules will prevent your exposure to any coldness or slight you might otherwise incur.—Do not imagine these little ceremonies to be insignificant and beneath your attention: they are the customs of society; and if you do not conform to them, you will gain the unenviable distinction of being pointed out as an ignorant, ill-bred person. Not that you may care the more for strangers by showing the civility, but you should scrupulously avoid the imputation of being deficient in good breeding; and if you do not choose to be polite for their sakes, you ought to be so for your own."

The rules and suggestions in regard to Dinner Parties are not less deserving of note:—

"Of the etiquette of a dinner party it is extremely difficult to say anything, because fashions are continually changing, even at the best tables; and what is considered the height of good taste one year, is declared vulgar the next; besides which, certain houses and sets have certain customs, peculiar to that clique, and all who do not conform exactly to their methods are looked upon as vulgar persons ignorant of good breeding. This is a mistake commonly fallen into by the little 'great' in the country, where the circle constituting 'society' is necessarily so small, that its members cannot fail to acquire the same habits, feelings and observances. However, a few hints may not be thrown away, always recollecting people can only become ridiculous by attempting to be too fine. I am, of course, supposing my readers to be acquainted with the decencies of life.—When the members of the party have all assembled in the drawing-room, the master or mistress of the house will point out which lady you are to take into the dining room, according to some real or fancied standard of precedence, rank (if there be rank), age, or general importance, that is, the married before the single, &c. &c.; or they will show their tact, by making those companions, who are most likely to be agreeable to each other. Give the lady the wall coming down stairs, take her into the room, and seat yourself by her side.—If you pass to dinner merely from one room to another, offer your right arm to the lady.—Remember that it is the lady who at all times takes precedence, not the gentleman. A person led a princess out of the room before her husband (who was doing the same to a lady of lower rank); in his over-politeness, he said, 'Pardonnez que nous vous precedons,' quite forgetting that it was the princess and not he who led the way.—The lady of the house will of course take the head of the table, and the gentleman of the highest rank will sit at her right hand; the gentleman next in rank will be placed on the left of the hostess, so that she may be supported by the two persons of the most consideration (who will assist her to carve).—The gentleman of the house takes the bottom of the table, and on each side of him must be placed the two ladies highest in rank. You will find a party of ten convenient, as it admits of an equal distribution of the sexes—neither two men nor two women like to sit together.—It is considered vulgar to take fish or soup twice.—The reason for not being helped twice to fish or soup at a large dinner party is, because by doing so you keep three parts of the company staring at you while waiting for the second course, which is spoiling, much to the annoyance of the mistress of the house. The selfish greediness, therefore, of so doing, constitutes its vulgarity.—At a family dinner it is of less importance, and is consequently often done.—Do not ask any lady to take wine, until you see she has finished her fish or soup.—This exceedingly absurd and troublesome custom is very properly giving way at the best tables to the more reasonable one of the gentleman helping the lady to wine next to whom he may be seated, or a servant will hand it round.—At every respectable table you will find silver forks; being broader, they are in all respects more convenient than steel for fish or vegetables.—Never use your knife to convey your food to your mouth, under any circumstances. Feed yourself with a fork or spoon, nothing else,—a knife is only to be used for cutting.—Fish does not require a knife, but should be divided by the aid of a piece of bread.—Eat PEAS with a dessert spoon, and curry also.—Tarts and puddings are to be eaten with a spoon.—As a general rule—in helping any one at table, never use a knife where you can use a spoon.—Making a noise in chewing, or breathing hard in eating, are both unseemly habits, and ought to be eschewed.—You cannot use your knife, or fork, or teeth, too quietly.—Do not pick your teeth much at table, as, however satisfactory a practice to yourself, to witness it is not a pleasant thing.—Finger glasses, filled with warm water, come on with the dessert. Wet a corner of your napkin, and wipe your mouth, then rinse your fingers; but do not practise the filthy custom of gargling your mouth at table, albeit the usage prevails amongst a few, who think because it is a foreign habit it cannot be disgusting. Never pare an apple or a pear for a lady unless she desire you, and then be careful to use your fork in hold it: you may sometimes offer to divide a very large pear with a person or for them.—Do not suppose that it will exalt you in the opinion of others, by speaking harshly or imperatively to servants, or add at all to your consequence. Never order other people's servants about. At a strange table, say 'if you please,' and 'thank you;' it may be said in a manner that will not encourage familiarity.—Nothing indicates a well-bred man more than a proper mode of eating his dinner. A man may pass muster by dressing well, and may sustain himself tolerably in conversation; but if he be not perfectly 'au fait,' dinner will betray him.—Invitations to dine should be answered to the lady. Invitations to a ball should be in the lady's name, and the answer of course sent to her.—It is customary, when you have been out dining, to leave a card upon the lady the next day, or as soon after as may be convenient.—Attentions of this sort are not to be expected from professional men, as Doctors, Lawyers, &c., their time being too valuable to sacrifice in making visits of mere ceremony; therefore, do not attribute such omission to any want of respect, but to its proper cause —time more usefully occupied.—When a man is about to be married, he usually gives a dinner to his bachelor friends; which is understood to be their congé, unless he choose to renew their acquaintance."

There are many other "Hints" well deserving of attention; but having already far exceeded our usual limits, we must conclude with two or three anecdotes:—

"An unfortunate Clerk of the Treasury, who, because he was in the receipt of a good salary, and being also a 'triton amongst the minnows.' of Clapham Common, fancied himself a great man, dined at the B—f S—k Club in company with the Duke of N—we—le, who, desirous of putting him at ease with himself, conversed freely with him, yet probably forgot even the existence of such a person half-an-hour afterwards. Meeting his Grace in the street some days after, and encouraged by his previous condescension, the hero of the quill, bent on claiming his acquaintance, accosted him in a familiar 'hail fellow-well-met-ish' manner, —'Ah, my Lord, how d'ye do?' The Duke looked surprised, 'May I know, Sir, to whom I have the honour of speaking?' said his Grace, drawing up. 'Oh! why—don't you know? We dined together at the B—f S—k Club, the other evening! I'm Mr. Timms of the Treasury!!' 'Theo,' said the Duke, turning on his heel, 'Mr. Timms of the Treasury, I wish you a good morning.'"

"Be cautious how you indulge in badinage in the presence of dull, common-place people; they will either get out of temper in consequence of taking what you say literally, or else will stare and wonder at you for being such a 'strange man.' 'Poor Susan!' said a gentleman to a pretty girl. 'Poor, indeed!' replied the lady, with an indignant toss of the head; 'not so poor as that comes to. Pepa can give us something.' What an anticipation for a sensitive aspirant!"

"The fear of being thought vulgar often drives meritorious people, who have risen by their own exertions into the opposite extreme, and causes them to be superlatively delicate. Such persons are shocked at the sound of 'breeches,' will substitute 'inebriated' for 'very drunk,' and cannot be brought to allow there are such animals as 'women' in the world.—A friend of mine being at a musical party in R——ll-square, at the house of some exceedingly wealthy persons, who had 'come westward' (i. e. from Norton Falgate), and where the majority of the company, although they had 'sprung from nothing,' were really well-educated, accomplished people, entered into an argument with a young lady, in which he had occasion to use the generic terms 'men' and 'women.' A son of the master of the house, who had been listening, shocked at such a breach of decorum, took my friend on one side, and said, 'Tompkins, I am astonished you should talk of 'women!' 'Women! Why, my dear fellow, what the d—l should I call them?' 'Ladies,—ladies, of course,—we always talk of 'women of the town.' 'And I,' said my friend, 'always speak of ladies of the pavé,'—so there's the difference.'"

We recently recorded the Court-Martial and honourable acquittal of Captain Seymour, his officers, and crew. The Challenger sailed from Rio Janeiro for the Pacific in April, 1835, with orders to touch at Conception, and was wrecked on the Western Coast of South America in the following month. In one "breeze a heavy sea struck the bows and cutwater, and with a most singular result, for it carried away the crown of our figure-head from the forehead upwards; and the ominous remark of the person who reported the circumstance to the officer of the watch, was, 'Sir she has lost her brains.'"—The details of this disaster, the sufferings of the crew, and the excellent conduct and good discipline of all on board are of deep interest; and not less so is the account of the subsequent encampment of the officers and crew during seven weeks on the South Coast of Chili. The information it contains with respect to the currents cannot but prove valuable to future navigators upon this dangerous coast.

The Doctrine of Proportion, or Geometrical Admeasurement by Similar Triangles, practically applied to Drawings. Ackerman and Co., Strand.

This little work affords an exemplification of one of the numerous and important advantages to be derived from a knowledge of trigonometrical science. Its peculiar merit seems the geometrical precision of the system employed to accomplish either an enlarged or diminished copy of any given drawing, whether landscape, portrait, map, or plan, by the application of the theory of similar triangles, instead of the usually adopted quadrangular method. The rules relative to perspective therein recommended are likewise good and satisfactory.

The engravings are very explanatory, and the rule clear and comprehensive, so that the work will be intelligible, amusing, and instructive to the young student, as well as a useful instrument in the hands of artists and engineers. The author is evidently a man of reflection, and displays much acquaintance with mathematics.

The Parliamentary Vote Book, or Elector's Guide, for 1836. E. Wilson.

This design of this little work will sufficiently recommend it to all who take an active interest in the proceedings of Parliament, and the conduct of the representatives. It proves with how much diligence, as evinced by the number of their attendances at divisions; with what fidelity, as shown by the correspondence or otherwise between the votes given by them upon great public questions in Parliament and their professions at the hustings, all Members executed their trust during the last Session. It is a capital Election Manual.

Edith of Glammis. 3 vols. Smith, Elder, and Co.

This story is of the time of James V., and after the model of Walter Scott. Its prominent feature is the extraordinary trial and execution of the Lady of Glammis for witchcraft, and which historical event the author has sketched with very considerable skill and fidelity. The volumes cannot fail in exciting considerable interest, and are highly creditable to the talent of the author.

Japhet in Search of a Father. 3 vols. Saunders and Otley.

These volumes are worthy of the gallant and talented author of "Peter Simple." They abound in incidents and that sparkling humour which invariably distinguish the graphic pen of Captain Marryat; and though a portion has appeared in the Metropolitan Magazine, the work, in its new and more complete form, cannot fail of being sought after with great avidity. It is the story of two foundlings, and every page is full of interest.

A New Historical and Practical Musical Grammar, adapted to the present state of the Science. By J. A. Hamilton. R. Cocks and Co.

By way of introduction, Mr. Hamilton gives a general history of music. He next explains the theory of musical notation, adapted to the present state of the science; treats of harmony and counterpoint, and sketches the doctrine of rhythm or melody. The little book concludes with a list of the best modern theoretical and elementary works, exercises, studies, &c., with some very sound criticisms on their comparative merits. This list will be found very valuable to students and teachers; but they should also possess themselves of Messrs. Cocks and Co's. catalogue of new foreign music for all instruments.

BRITISH AUXILIARIES IN SPAIN.

My Dear—, We are doing but little here. The fact is that Cardova, who is the Com.-in-Chief, is a cunning diplomatist. He knows but little of the profession of a soldier, but he possesses a most devouring ambition, and he will take good care that Evans gets as little of the glory as possible. Take my word for this, if there is anything to be done he will do his utmost to prevent us from doing it. He is too deep for Evans, and I would not mind wagering a round sum that there will be a quarrel between them before the war is over, or the latter will expose himself to such gibes and jests as will make the House of Commons a very uneasy place for him. Sickness is prevailing to our army to an alarming extent; already have 4 officers and upwards of one hundred men fallen victims to the fever; five hundred more are in hospital, and many officers look nothing like their former selves, worn out by fatigue, bad fare, and bad lodging. Miserable cold rooms without fire-places are not calculated for English constitutions, and many are paying the penalty of the fatal change to which they have subjected themselves. About a month ago a paper was sent round to all the officers requesting them to sign their acquiescence to a proposal of the Spanish ministry, which was that they should content themselves for three months with a third of their pay, the remaining part to be paid them at the end of the three months; this they agreed to, but even this miserable pittance has not been paid, and there is not, I would venture to say, 100*l*. among the whole legion, the General excepted. We are absolutely doing nothing here; within these few days they have advanced the legion to the villages towards the Carlist positions, but Salvatierra and the fortress of Guarra remain still in the possession of the enemy. A French General would have taken them both six weeks ago. The Spaniards I despise: they are the most wilfully ignorant brutes you can imagine, and their Generals are old women, and the whole of them are a nasty procrastinating set of twaddles. Every thing is frightfully dear, and the misery that some officers are now enduring is too disgusting to relate. Many of them have their only flannel waistcoat creeping, and neither money to buy another, or courage to leave it off in this dreadful cold weather. Two more officers died to-day.

ON THE OATHS REQUIRED FROM HALF-PAY OFFICERS.

Sir,—In one of your late numbers I read a letter signed Philotheorus; the writer appears to be an advocate for swearing, but I say "swear not at all." He grounds his argument by saying, that as the Royal Family, and others holding high offices, are not exempt from oath taking, the poor half-pay officer has no cause to complain. There is a wide difference in the two cases; oath taking on the part of high personages in matters of state, may be absolutely requisite to render the thing more solemn and binding, but where is the necessity of half-pay officers being dragged four times a year before magistrates, previous to receiving their scanty allowance? Let me tell the writer of that letter, that gentlemen brought up to the honourable profession of arms, have feelings more alive than he appears to be aware of, and I have no hesitation in saying, that it is both humiliating and galling, and I have heard many express their sentiments to that effect. He next attempts to force his argument by saying that magistrates possess property, and are qualified gentlemen, or something to that purport; one would conclude that he was a member of that respectable body. Officers of the United Service have too great a reverence for the laws of their country to object to its administrators. No; they wish to be relieved from the very great inconvenience, and, I may truly say, in many instances, the expense of hunting out magistrates. I have heard half-pay officers residing in the northern counties observe, that they have had twelve or fourteen miles to travel to a justice of the peace, and been sometimes disappointed after all. Let this harassing process be got rid of; retired officers and their signatures are as familiar at the Army Pay Office as the alphabet; there can be no fraud, and if any instance of such delinquency should occur, visit the offender with dismissal from the service. An officer who signs his declaration in his own apartment, on the word and honour of an officer and a gentleman, to him it is as sacred and binding as if in the presence of a magistrate, and, agreeable to my feelings in the matter, more so, for the very form and compulsion lessens the respect on the other hand. You have, Mr. Editor, all along been most strenuous in craving the indulgence, and, I may add, necessary change with regard to half-pay certificates, and I hope you will go on until the wished for end is accomplished. What do you think of a sick half-pay officer having had to hire a chaise for seven quarters past to carry him to a justice of the peace at —— Town, a distance of some miles, to have his declaration signed? There was no alternative but for the magistrate to visit him, that could not be expected!

[Philotheorus has evinced the proper feeling of an honourable mind, and made the amende for his error.—Ed.]

Sir,—It has ever been considered a task of considerable difficulty for human nature to acknowledge its errors, and far more frequently "honoured in the breach than in the observance." Notwithstanding all this I willingly and candidly confess the one into which I have been led, respecting the oaths required of Naval officers on half-pay;—aye, and readily do I attribute my conviction to the mild, gentlemanly, and persuasive arguments which appeared in your last week's Gazette by Tiphys. To him, en passant, I prefer my apologies for using terms which he considers not sufficiently courteous to the members of the Naval Service. I do assure him, that when I applied the terms "these individuals" to our "brave British tars," I did so without intending any mark of disrespect. No! that is a fault of which I can never be guilty, honouring as I do these noble defenders of our "iron-bound coasts." At the time I addressed you my hasty observations I was not aware of all the bearings of the case, but thought it was a claim set up by one branch of the service at the expense of another. Now, however, being better informed, I perceive the hardship of the regulation, and willingly raise my voice, feeble though it may be, to aid in its removal,—a regulation as oppressive as it is unjust, and as unnecessary as uncalled for. We all know the honour of a gentleman is dear to him as is his heart's last drop of the vital fluid, and "whether woe or woe betide," there is not an individual, who wears "the Navy Blue," but would with him of the "Royal Scarlet" as soon permit an enemy to his King and country to thrust him through the body, "carte over the arm," as violate that noblest of the human passions,—his honour!

Thus, then, I make the amende honorable to my respected opponent, Tiphys, who knows too well "the power of a soft answer to turn away wrath," ever to be severe, or even harsh, in his arguments, sorry am I to say such is not the case with Corineus. His style is hot, testy, tart and threatening, ever the ready concomitants of weakness and irritability,—aye, I say threatening, for he threatens me with the wrath of your able correspondent Tristram. Now, "if my name were liable to fear," there is nothing in a literary sense I should more dread than the animadversions of Tristram. But while I have a pen, and the privilege of your columns, even that does not appal me, supposing his good sense to be overcome by the persuasions of one who confesses himself, as Corineus does, so imbecile as to be asble to undertako the nffice. In spite of the attempted severity of his witty cumpusition,—I call it witty, for If brevity is the soul of wit" his letter must be witty in tbe rtreme,—I hasten tn answer the query be prepounds. The orkmaa is not sworn, nor ought the officer; if I may he lowed, eic parvis componere magna, as Virgil says. To his reply and inference I have been led by the gentlemanly emarks of Tiphys and not tho "would-be severe"-ones of Torinens.

CAPTAIN KING AND THE POLAR EXPEDITION.

SIR,—In answer to a paragraph that appeared in your last paper, I trust you will allow my asserting that an overland expedition is so totelly different to one uedertaken by sea, I am convinced the survey of tha coast eastward of Point Turnagain eed the settling of the long agitated question of the N. W. passage, by Regent's Inlet, will never be completed by Capt. J. C. Ross, or aoy other officer, inexperienced in canee travelliog.

If sincere in stating "the command should be bestowed on some person who has gained sufficient experience in the Arctic regions to meet the various difficulties, and on one who has youth end energy in his favour," you should advocate my cause, and not that of Capt. J. C. Ross, who, in connection with a land voyage, cannot claim such qualifications.

That part of your statemeot where you "imagine" the public, and particularly his companions, would beve more confidence in such e commander then in a euvice" is only intelligible upon the supposition that you have furgottan, or could nut have known, that the expedition from Lake Winnipeg to Winter Quarters, and from Winter Quarters to Englend, waa commanded by myself, an occupation of eleven months our of the thirty-two the expedition existed. At the same time I beg to differ from you as to the companions of such e Commander as Capt. J. C. Ross, or eny officer, having undertaken or accompanied the Sea Expeditione, only having confidence in him provided those companions were Canadians, or men accustomed to the toils and hardships of the country. I am certain they would oot accompany him at all; and if the men are to be raw hands the party would never reach the Great Slave Lake, much less the Polar Sea.

I cannot cooceive the attacks that bave appeared against me in the "Times," and your Gazette, merely arguing the right of preference to another in accordance with the liberality of the press. I should have thought the most correct way would have been by trying to show the impracticability of the plan; and, until that is shown, I leave myself in the hands of a discerning and generoue public; and if, by a subscription of a £1000, the power is granted me of making o further survey of the N. Coast of America, no personal interest shall stop me.

I have the honour to be, your most obedient humble servant, RICHARD KING.

COAST GUARD SERVICE.—LETTER I.

SIR,—The Navy is under an undoubted obligation to you, and ought, as it no doubt does, most heartily congratulate itself that it has such an efficient and disinterested advocate of its rights; and it is manifest that the good you have already effected by so ably exposing many acts of injustice, and pointing out the hardships naval men have to contend against, has rendered your Gazette a document of no ordinary importance, and, certainly, one of great value to the profession generelly.

I wish, Sir, I was more competent than I feel myself to be, to do justice to the subject upon which I purpose offering you some observetions, seriatim; suffice it, however, to say it involves the character, respectability, end standing in society, as well as the personal comforts of a large class of Naval Officers, who are at present unjustly and unwisely degraded by being given appointments incompatible with their rank, and thereby compelled to do duties deregatory to them.

The bearing of this letter, and of such as may follow it, will, of course, suggest to you that my present and future observatione apply to a service, upon the inconsistencies of which you have frequently and ably remarked; and certainly one of greater injustice never, I believe, existed in a free and independent state. It is an anomalous admixture of civil and military practices, combining ridiculous contradictions and absurdities, and so badly defined in its various ramifications, that an officer scarcely ever knows what is his precise duty in it.

It is sincerely to be hoped our present First Lord will forthwith turn his attention to it, with a view to its reorganisation; that he will cause every Naval Officer serving in it to be placed on a far more respectable footing than he now is, and throw around it, by his countenance and support, that dignity and respect which at present it does not possess, but which is so essentially necessary to render the service efficient; and this can only be effected by making its officers respected as gentlemen.

That the envy generally may understand how much it has been honoured by its connexion with this service, I will enter into a succinct history of its formation, &c.

The Coast Guard, originally termed the Preventive Service, consisted, at first, of small detachments of men, varying from five to seven, who were stationed at different points of the coast where the smugglers were most daring in their practices. This force was, previously to the year 1822, under the controul of the Treasury; the officers and men were appointed by that Board, and were generally such individuals as possessed some little parliamentary influence, reference being seldom had to their previous habits of life; the consequence was, that persons of all sorts were admitted into it as boatmen, such as gentlemen's servants, fishermen, sailors, labourers, tinkers, tailors, &c. To command these motley crews, reduced small tradesmen were generally appointed, and we find a greater proportion of broken-down publicans than any others. They were designated chief officers, or sitters. Such Com. Officers and such crews might well, forsooth, be expected to prove most efficient guardians of the revenue. It is a well-known fact they usually resorted to their former avocations, adopting the wise and prudent principle of live and let live, that is, they seldom or never interfered with the good living the smuggler was obtaining, provided he gave a fair tithe of what he brought over, and allowed them to live also.

In process of time an alteration in the service was deemed necessary, and a committee of the Commanders of Revenue Cruizers was called upon to revise it. They recommended that they themselves should be appointed Inspecting Commanders of these boats crews, with additional allowances, and several smaller vessels employed as tenders to their cutters to collect the journals of the stations on shore; but when it came to be discussed who were the persons most proper to be appointed as Chief Officers, or Sitters, it was suggested that deserving MARINERS should be nominated, it being then considered derogatory to a deputed or petty officer of a cutter to accept such a situation. No men, I presume, could be considered more competent to judge of the amount of importance due to the office of Sitter of a boat than those Revenue,—civilian at that period,—Commanders, and their consideration for those under them, was, certainly, highly commendable. Subordinate officers of cutters were, however, subsequently appointed.

It will thus be seen the description of men who were appointed previously to Naval Lieutenants; many of them are still in the service, the equals, in Coast Guard rank, of the Lieutenants, invested with the same power and authority, and by no means subordinate to them, although at an immeasurable distance in point of naval rank.

In the year 1832 the management of the Coast Guard was transferred to the Board of Customs, and the Admiralty was requested by the Treasury to appoint all officers to it. It has been shown of what materials the service was then composed, and it was to have been hoped the Admiralty would have evinced a little of the consideration the Commanders of cutters previously did towards their inferior officers, and have made some stipulation that the situation of chief officer should be made commensurate with the rank of a Naval Lieutenant, or Captain in the Army, and the respect due to this class of officers properly upheld. But no; they had no sympathy with the poor devils of Lieutenants, and were apparently ignorant there was any sort of affinity between themselves and those Lieutenants; certainly they evinced no scruples about their relative military rank, for they sent them, without compunction of conscience, to herd with the raggamuffin set I have herein described, and upon an equal footing, saving and excepting that they first docked the Lieutenant "Sitters" pay just 15*l* a-year, making it that amount less than the reduced small tradesman's.

PUBLICOLA AND LIEUT.-COL. DICKSON, 40TH FOOT.

SIR,—Should you conceive the following at all worthy of a corner in your valuable journal, it is at your service.

B. RUPVI, W.

To Publicola.

SIR,—In your letter, published in the Weekly Dispatch of the 10th inst., you have appeared in a somewhat novel character, and I opine that the thinking portion of your readers (seldom finding occasion to regard seriously your assertions, or to accuse you at any time of an over regard to truth or consistency) are apt to view your delinquencies in a manner which may lead you to suppose is favourable, but in this, your last letter, you have committed such an outrageous violation of truth and common sense, that I have been tempted to put to the test so redoubted a champion.

In commenting upon the facts of a Court-martial held upon Lieut.-Col. Dickson, you have taken occasion to draw the most unwarrantable inferences in regard to the justice and morality of the British military code; but it must be obvious to your readers that one object and intention is predominant in all your deductions, namely, that of producing a feeling of distrust and discontent in all classes of the community, towards those who legislate and direct; to weaken the confidence of the many in the ability and discretion of the few who guide and command, to induce them to look jealously upon their power, to murmur at supposed and imaginary grievances, and thus to weaken the moral strength of all who may be misled by the mischievous sophistry or flimsy reasoning of your class of discontents,—and amongst the weakest and of the thinnest guise is your own; but still, in the impotency of your repeated attempts at producing the effect desired, you retain enough of gall (vented, perhaps, in the disappointment, either of yourself or your political paymasters) to outrage, by language, all principles of honest investigation every institution which upholds our rights, and every law which is necessary to the preservation of our civil and religious liberty.

Your epistle is full of pointless invective. You exclaim that "the guilt, cruelty, crime, and folly of Russia can be expiated by pointing to England;" but does not the very fact of your being permitted to find a vehicle through which to pour your weekly torrents of ingratitude and abuse give a direct lie to your base assertion? And even here were I disposed to cavil at words, this expression of yours might be easily twisted to another meaning, or rendered meaningless, in the manner you have tortured various official expressions used in the proceedings of the Court-martial held on Lieut.-Col. Dickson.

Can guilt be aggravated or crime expiated by comparison? Can a nation control the immediate actions of a delegate, who may perhaps licentiously abuse his power, or can a people be immediately answerable for them? Russia's guilt, crime, and atrocity is authorised by her sovereign, but the instances which you point out in comparison with them, are the acts of men who are punished by the law of that people, whose confidence in their virtue and integrity they have abused.

After thus preparing your readers for folly,—I will not mention crime,—on the part of the British government you assert that Col. D. was dismissed the service for punishing females "without sufficient grounds, such punishment not being sanctioned by his superior officers." You then comment, in no very measured terms, upon the infamy attached to a service which admits of such disgraceful exhibitions, WHEN sanctioned by sufficient grounds, and from thence you launch out into that powerful style of invective for which you are so celebrated, and employ all your power in attempting to prove that the British army is nothing but a sink of infamy, and strive to hold up its members to the scorn and hatred of society.

I shall not attempt to follow you. In your flights to the regions of abuse and folly, but proceed to draw a line between your inferance from the case and its language, and the case as it actually stands; and first, I contend that Lieut.-Col. D. was dismissed the service, NOT for inflicting the barbarity in question without sufficient grounds, but for having inflicted such punishment on any grounds whatsoever, and I challenge you to produce from the code of British Military Jurisprudence ought that can suggest to the idea that the probability of such a crime was contemplated and provided for.

Your pretended quarrel is with words, not things, for you must be fully aware that the technical terms used in the wording of the charge were never intended to convey the meaning to which you have so ingeniously tortured them; and, in fact, your whole production is a tissue of falsehood and sophistry, and so far from bringing anything in the shape of argument in support of your attack, you have even discarded the aid of common sense; your whole case hinges upon a forced construction of words used in the charge, whilst you carefully keep in the back ground the well-known fact that the said words are only used in a technical sense, and have no more relation to the actual crime, its extenuation, or aggravation, than the numerous and superfluous aforesaids, &c., &c., &c., used in the composition of a civil indictment.

And let us suppose that Col. D. had been arraigned at a civil bar upon a charge of assault and battery (for offiance amounts to nothing more), what would be the probable result? He might have been, perhaps, if found guilty, fined damages to a certain amount, and in default of payment sentenced to imprisonment, and on the payment of such fine, or expiration of such imprisonment, he would be again restored to his former rank in society, and a few months of retirement would have nearly effaced all recollection of the offence. But what is now the actual state of the individual in question?—Why, degraded from his rank in society, his prospects blasted, shut out from a profession from which he had derived an independence, what existance short of death could have been more severe, what situation in life more wretched? You, however, think the punishment nothing, or, at least, insufficient, as an unprincipled person, like yourself, has lost,—the term honour,—may be accounted nothing, and consequently are no competent judge of the severity of his sentence.

I would not, I do not attempt to justify his offence, nor do I quarrel with the amount of punishment awarded but as you have thought proper to make this case the medium through which to convey the most disgraceful unfounded calumnies against the character of the British army, I feel it incumbent on me as a member of the profession, to expose the fallacy of your unwarrantable base assertions.

When your object has been to inoculate the army with disloyalty, discontent, and sedition, you called yourself the soldier's friend, and accompanied that declaration by an avowal of pretended attachment to their true interests; and now, when your object is to further the designs of a corrupt faction, by raising the passions of the mob, you stand forth as the accuser. When, again, your object has been to raise a clamour, to effect their reduction or disbandment, and thus facilitate the designs of revolution, anarchy, and plunder, you stand forth as the base calumniator of the whole British army, and hold up its members as fit objects of the scorn and execration of society; but the arrows of your malice, though steeped in their usual venom, have fallen short of their mark.

I have been often surprised at the effrontery displayed by your colleagues and yourself, in their representations of public facts; but depend, Sir, that the virtuous portion of the community have too much sense to be misled by the arts of a factious demagogue. And here, Sir, other duties compel me to leave you among the low, the base, and the sordid, who will doubtless be proud of such companionship.

I am, &c.

"THE SENIOR MATES OF THE NAVY."

SIR,—In the last seniority promotion of Mates in 1830, all were promoted who passed their examinations for Lieutenants prior to January 1819. Had Mr. Coppinger then (whose letter appears in your last week's Gazette) been employed in the navy or revenue service at that time, he would consequently have been promoted, instead of which he commanded a merchant ship, more fortunate, indeed, than the poor devils of his fraternity, who it seems fate has decreed "to be condemned to the desperate course" of unceasing servitude in the enviable rank of Mate. Mr. C. therefore cannot have the same claim to the sheep's-skin with those veteran "young gentlemen," who have stuck to the service so long "through evil report and good report."

It is hoped that the present popular Board of Admiralty will do something to alleviate the course of long service to which this class of officers is now subject. Even a revision of their present uniform, which, from its exact similitude to the coat of a flunkey, was always repugnant to them (see "Dress Regulations for Mate"), while their messmates, the Clerks, Assistant-Surgeons, and Second Masters, although inferior in rank, have assigned them an appropriate dress next of the rank to which they are aspirant; this is a favour which would cost nothing, and be considered a boon. Requesting, Sir, you will be pleased to give this insertion in your excellent paper when a spare berth occurs,

I am, Sir,

TRISTRAM CRACKING JAPIT'S NUT, AND TRISTRAM GREETING YORICK.

SIR,—In fileing your gazette regularly I have discovered that your correspondents would save themselves and your readers much inconvenience were they, in asking a question or holding an argument upon any matter under discussion, to place your columns before them for the purpose of knowing what has been already said or sung upon the subject; for it is evident that if Japit, after gathering nuts in the British Museum, had referred to my review of Captain Hassock's MANUAL, in your Number 152, he would there find I gave my opinion in the face of the King's regulations, and I should not have to inform him that I still insist that a "vote of the ship does affect the RANK at Courts-Martial;" that "I have not run a-head of my reckoning whilst commenting thereon," and that "I did not overlook that part in Italics of the following paragraph in the King's regulations," or to hint to him that a nut is but poor Christmas cheer without SALT and a bottle of wine. "If a Captain shall, under any circumstances, accept the command of a ship or vessel under the sixth rate, he shall, during such command, be considered as a Commander only, superior to all other Commanders, but subject to the orders of all Captains commanding posted ships (except with reference to sitting on Courts-Martial, on which occasion he is to sit as Captain as if he commanded a RATED SHIP), but this shall not affect his seniority on the list of officers of the navy, nor his rank and command whenever he shall afterwards command a rated ship."

It appears to me Japit supposes that, because the words "rated ship" are not mentioned in the naval "Articles of War," they are not APPLIED, but I contend they are; as, by the words in Italics of the two following clauses of the act, a Captain must be REMANDED as a Captain to preside as such at a naval Court-Martial, which he cannot be when present on commission as a Commander only. I therefore give it my unaltered opinion that a Post Captain is not PRESIDENT unless in command of his rated post ship.

"And it is hereby further enacted that from and after the 25th day of December, 1749, no Court-Martial appointed to be held, or appointed by virtue or this present act, shall consist of more than thirteen, or less than five persons, to be composed of such flag officers, Captains, or Commanders as are then and there present as are next in seniority to the officer who presides at the Court-Martial."

"Provided always, and it is hereby enacted and declared that in any case any Court-Martial shall, by virtue of this act, be appointed to be held at any place where there are not less than three, nor yet so many as five officers of the degree and denomination of a Post Captain or of a superior rank to be found, then it shall be lawful for the officer, at the place appointed for holding such Court-Martial, who is to preside at the same, to call to his assistance as many of the Commanders of his Majesty's vessels under the rank and degree of a Post-Captain, as together with the Post-Captains then and there present, will make up the number of five to hold such Court-Martial."

All cruising ships, whether frigate or corvette built, or ships of the line, fitted as troop, hospital, victualling, convalescent, receiving, or guard ships, are not considered SHIPS, but his Majesty's VESSELS only, if commanded by Commanders under the rank and degree of a Post Captain; hence, as the "King's regulations" since 1816 absolutely take away the authority of the superior post rank from that Captain who, "under any circumstances, accepts the command of a ship or vessel under the sixth rate during such command," he is bond fide Commander only of that vessel which does not give post rank; so that it is obvious the President of a naval Court-Martial can call to his assistance as Commander only that Post Captain in command of a vessel not giving post rank.

Come, Japit, answer me these queries. Can a Purser, serving as Clerk of one of his Majesty's ships, hold a survey as Purser? a Commander, as Secretary, take upon him the command of his superior rank? has he not given up his executive rank for that of a civilian? and, as a Secretary, will he not swing at the yard-arm with two epaulettes on for striking his superior (the Lieutenant with ONE)? If a Lieutenant in command of a cutter receive a Commander's commission for some sloop of war, can he, whilst in command of that cutter as a Lieutenant, preside at a Court-Martial as a Commander? How then can a Captain in command of a vessel under the sixth rate preside at a Court-Martial according to his seniority as Captain, when he is employed as a Commander only?

If Japit refers to the war "general printed instructions," he will discover, under head "military honours and ceremonies" that "Post Captains commanding ships and vessels that do not give post rank, rank only as Majors during their commanding such vessels;" and, again, under head "Courts-Martial," a junior officer commanding a post ship shall, in sitting at Courts-Martial, take precedence of his senior commanding a sloop."

Another query, Japit;—do the "articles of war" authorise the Admiralty or the King in Council to issue two orders, the one in war, the other in peace, diametrically opposite, and consequently one of the two in direct violation of the Act of Parliament, without explaining the right from the wrong?

"My dear Tristram," said she, "is not that one of thy figures of speech called a CLINCHER?" "It is, my love; and I can show you a figure which taketh away the speech." In a moment our arms were interlaced, waltzing round the boudoir, and as she drooped her head on my right shoulder I inclined my head towards her right shoulder, which brought our lips in contact, saltier-wise, as the anchors on the Pursers' buttons, of the late Victualling Office pattern. My good fellow, Mr. Editor, you can have no idea, unless you had actually felt the throbbing, how the amorous creature's heart went pit-a-pat, from the electrifying effect of Tristram's clinching kisses!!

In cracking Japit's nut, I will avail myself of the opportunity to exhibit to my brother sailors the probable serious consequences which in certain cases may happen to the discipline and good order of the Service by a Captain in command of a vessel, not a post ship, taking precedence at a naval Court-Martial as Captain. Suppose that in foreign parts two junior Captains in their respective post ships join their senior in command of a sloop of war and two other vessels with Commanders; the senior of the two in the post ships, by the "King's regulations" and the "articles of war," can alone order a Court-Martial to be holden, as the senior officer of the five—two ships and three vessels.* The senior officer's order for the Court to assemble being read, the Post Captain in command of the sloop of war will then, by virtue of the "King's regulation," become the President of the Court, being on the Navy List senior to the two Post Captains.

Behold! now the "fun of war." The senior of the post ships will say, I am the President because I am the senior officer in command, and have ordered, by virtue of my office, this Court-Martial to be holden. "I refer you to the 'King's regulations' for my authority to take precedence as Captain," replies the Captain-Commander of the sloop, "and as I am the senior officer by the Navy List I will preside as the President." "I am the senior officer of the squadron; so to your sloop, Sir, under arrest, for contempt to me your superior officer." "I will not obey you, Sir; presiding at this Court-Martial, I am here your senior officer." To defend each your right to the President's chair by contradictory regulations, draw swords, ye heroes, and cut and thrust agreeably to the "Excellent" system—"left cheek, first guard, first point, left parry." Bravo, Commodore! in beginning the attack, you have nobly upheld your post rank and superiority, and put hors de combat your mutinous inferior antagonist; the point has wounded his sword-arm, being stiff-wristed and slack in his left parry, having learnt à faire les armes à la Française, and not the "sword exercise à l'Angloise, as practised on board the "Excellent." Now Japit which of the two will suffer death by sentence of a Court-Martial for drawing his sword against his superior officer in the execution of his office. The Captain of the post ship, he being inferior (junior) to his superior at a Court-Martial. Japit, I beg your pardon; the Captain-Commander of the sloop will suffer death; serving as Commander, he is inferior to all Post Captains in or belonging to the fleet on any service whatever.

But suppose the senior officer of the squadron was tacitly to permit the Captain-Commander of the sloop to preside as President, let us see how the form of minutes will be affected thereby.

"Minutes of proceedings at a Court-Martial held on board his Majesty's ship Spitfire, at sea, in lat. —— N. and long. —— W., on the —— day of November, 1836. Present—Jonathan Wildgoose, a Captain in his Majesty's Navy, and Commander of his Majesty's sloop of war Wrangler, and by the King's regulations senior Captain of the Court-Martial here assembled, but not the senior officer of the squadron by the said regulations.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1836.

Not only is an increase of our Naval force recommended from the Throne, but the policy of such a measure is admitted and approved of by members of all parties, and, we may add, by the sense of the whole country. This augmentation has been some time anticipated, in consequence of the activity which has been displayed at our Naval Arsenals, where several ships of the line have been brought forward for commissioning; and, as there can be little doubt but that the legislature will cheerfully vote the necessary funds for this increase, when the Navy Estimates are brought forward, it is presumed that the entry of Seamen for the Fleet will be commenced without delay.

When we consider the existing force of rival nations, and the energy they have for a length of time displayed in the organisation and augmentation of their Naval resources; it becomes apparent, that, as the greatest Maritime State, it would have been culpable on the part of Government, from motives of economy, or indeed any other motives, to have delayed a demonstration which will have the effect of placing us in the position we have long held, and by such wise policy shall ever retain. The increase, we have reason to believe, will comprehend full ten thousand men, and give employment to many Officers; and when we consider the magnitude of the interests to be protected, the growing importance of our Colonies, and the extension of our commerce, &c., we trust we shall never in future witness a reduction in the number of Seamen and Marines which shall be voted for the present year. We think that little difficulty will be experienced in raising this or a greater number of men for the Fleet, particularly at this season of the year, when so many thousand Seamen are out of employment; and it would certainly be advisable to commission the ships, and commence entering with as little delay as possible, before the Spring demand arises, lest the enlistment of this number of Seamen might have an effect on the wages in the Merchant Service, the shipping interest being already depressed by the necessity for competing with the cheap freights of foreign rivals. We trust that we shall have to announce the appointments of many Officers in the course of a week or two; and whatever may be the destination of the intended armament, we are sure that the most skilful and intelligent Officer will be selected to command it, without reference to his party opinions. The success of an expedition depends so greatly upon the conduct and ability of the Chief, particularly in these times, when the delicate duty of diplomacy so frequently devolves upon him, that the Minister will, for his own credit, select the Officer he considers most fitted for the command. Should a demonstration be intended in the Dardanelles, or the Black Sea, the whole Service would naturally hail the appointment of Sir Pulteney Malcolm as the most proper that could be made,—an appointment which would inspire confidence in all those under his command, from the great skill and ability he has already displayed, and the firmness and success with which he supported the honour and dignity of the British flag under very trying and difficult circumstances in the same quarter, on a former occasion. As we said in our last, whatever regulations may guide the Admiralty as regards ordinary appointments, they must be departed from on the occasion of the nomination to a command, the least want of skill or penetration in the conduct of which might involve the whole world in war; and we doubt not but that this material point will be well considered by Earl Minto, and an Officer of proved ability selected. The formation of a squadron of observation will afford a very favourable opportunity for trying the merits of rival ships, and we trust that some of all classes will be drawn together for this purpose.

We last week took occasion to make some remarks on the hard cases of those Mates who had passed their examination for Lieutenants from ten to fifteen years, with little prospect of promotion. At the head of the list is placed the name of Mr. Coppinger, as an instance of twenty-five years' service, eighteen of which as a passed Midshipman or Mate. We were not then aware, that this gentleman had at any time quitted the Service during this long interval; but it would appear, by a letter signed A Constant Reader, that such was the case.

Now, we are far from considering it objectionable, that Officers should accept command of Merchant vessels in time of peace; on the contrary, we think such a course should be encouraged by every possible means; and sure we are, that our Merchants and Shipowners would find it to their advantage to place Lieutenants, Masters, and Mates of the Royal Navy in charge of their ships making foreign voyages, at the same time, that such employment would be a means of their gaining experience in seamanship and navigation; in fact, retaining their abilities in their legitimate profession instead of affording it a chance of being diverted to other pursuits. Still we must admit, that the time so employed should not be reckoned to the prejudice of those who have toiled on in the Navy in subordinate situations. In fact, the selection for promotions out of this class must depend greatly upon circumstances, with which the indifferent observer, who merely refers to the date of entry into the Service, or of passing for Lieutenant, cannot be acquainted; and this should make us careful how we cavil at selections by the Board of Admiralty, who have the opportunity of examining the testimonials of every candidate for promotion. Had the system of limiting the number of young gentlemen, who are permitted to enter the Navy annually, been adopted shortly after the close of the war, the evil would long since have cured itself; and it is to us most astonishing to find Naval Officers advocating the liberal introduction of Midshipmen, who must in course of time become claimants for commissions, when at the same moment they are exclaiming against the magnitude of the list, and setting forth proposals for reducing it. Most old Officers entertain the idea, that the ships' duty, particularly in harbour, cannot be carried on without a large number of young gentlemen; and were it possible for any reflecting mind to suppose, that crews of the same description as those formerly collected, were to man our ships in future wars, it might indeed be necessary to provide a supply of Mids. sufficient to perform many duties which are much better delegated to petty officers before the mast. The wisdom of the Legislature has enacted certain measures in the seaman's favour, which will insure a supply of good men to the King's Service, when it becomes necessary to offer such inducements; and, although we do not advocate the reduction of young gentlemen in actual employment in time of peace, we think that were the limited to one-half of the present establishment, in each ship in time of war, their places could be profitably filled by petty officers before the mast. This system would not only provide superior ratings for seamen of good character, but induce a number of them, serving as Mates and Second Mates in Merchant ships, to enter the King's Service, and remain therein; and every one knows of what advantage it would be to have a large proportion of strong, steady, and skilful seamen, to whom the crew would look up for precept and example, who, when not employed, could readily return to the Merchant Service, until again required, instead of continuing a system which produces more candidates than can be provided for, and is consequently the cause of grumbling and complaint.

Having only in view the good of the Service we shall take upon us to compare the interest shown for the convenience of Officers and that of the soldiers serving in our Colonies. An Officer, after two years' service, in the enjoyment of good health is entitled to apply for leave of absence, and, if he plays his cards well, he can afterwards join the depot; or if he should suffer from extreme ill health, a Medical Board is immediately assembled and he proceeds home without delay at the public expense; not so with the soldier, who, if in tolerable good health (though now and then on the verge of death), is doomed to remain abroad the whole time which appears to be now fixed at ten years, or labouring under chronic disease, he may, after long delay, be sent home for discharge, or to be otherwise disposed of.

In making these remarks, we are actuated solely by the desire to see all soldiers (whether born with a silver or horn spoon in their mouths) dealt with as far as is possible, alike, and with the conviction that even-handed justice only is what all men, whatever may be their condition, look for.

On a former occasion we condemned the present system of keeping regiments ten years in a tropical climate. We except the East Indies, on account of the very heavy expense attending a frequent exchange of troops; still we think that ten years in India instead of twenty would be a more reasonable period. The Artillery, after five years West India service, are relieved; why not the line? The difficulty of finding troops to relieve regiments there, after a service of five years, is by many offered as an excuse, and by others the expense such an arrangement would lead to. Supposing the first to be a decided objection, we will here propose what would prove a remedy; the latter objection is unworthy of notice.

Depots of regiments are composed of four companies, with a staff of Major, Acting-Paymaster, Adjutant, Assistant-Surgeon (we would add a Quartermaster), Acting Serjeant-Major, and an Acting Quartermaster-Serjeant. After the Service Companies shall have been two years abroad, a company, completed to the Service Establishment (in addition to the number of men and officers required to replace casualties, which may have taken place in the Service Companies) should be ordered abroad, relieving a Service Company, to be formed from the sick, the sickly, soldiers who had served abroad before, and the oldest soldiers (at the time) abroad, to complete the number. From this arrangement men as well as officers would be relieved in their turn; by the first relief the senior Major and Assistant-Surgeon goes abroad, and the juniors join the depot; the following year the Acting Adjutant relieving the Adjutant, &c., and by similar arrangements all the Staff Officers and Non-Commissioned Officers, as well as Company Officers and men, may have, during the ten years, an occasional tour of home duty. As it is, many Staff Officers, Non-Commissioned Officers, and men are compelled to remain the whole time abroad, while many of the Non-Commissioned Officers and men at the depot stay the entire period at home. This arrangement would not, of course, affect Officers obtaining occasional leave of absence to return home on urgent private affairs.

The better to explain our views we will here add our idea of a Roster, attaching a form, and will suppose it to be kept at the depot of the 89th Regiment, recently embarked for the West Indies. Thus, in 1836 no change takes place; in 1837 a detachment only leaves the depot to replace casualties; in 1838 one company with the Senior Major and Assistant-Surgeon; in 1839 a company and the Acting Adjutant; in 1840 a company, the Junior Major, Acting Paymaster, and Assistant-Surgeon to relieve the Lieutenant-Colonel, Paymaster, and Surgeon, the Paymaster's seconities (if they be willing) becoming responsible for his deputy; in 1841 a company and the Adjutant; in 1842 a company, the Lieutenant-Colonel, Paymaster, and Surgeon; in 1843 a company, the Acting Quartermaster, the Quartermaster joins the depot not to return, as his services there will at this time be more useful than abroad; in 1844 detachments only embark; in 1845 or beginning of 1846 the corps returns home.

When the service of individuals abroad is by this, or any other better arrangement, shortened, and when the ranks are composed of such men, as we have suggested on former occasions, the British Army will be a much healthier and a happier body of men.

*The extraordinary appointment of Captain, or, as he is styled, Lieutenant-Colonel Bethune, of which we spoke in our last number, as well as in that of the 16th ultimo, has, as we supposed it would, called forth the severe animadversions of several Officers of rank belonging to the Indian Army now in this country. That an Officer holding but the Military rank of CAPTAIN on the Retired List of the Madras Establishment should at once be elevated to that of MAJOR-GENERAL throughout the Continent of ASIA, is as unprecedented as it is unjust; for, even allowing Sir Henry Bethune to have possessed the local rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, but of which, as we have before said, we can find no trace, either in the lists of the King's, or of the Company's Army; still, the passing over two grades at once, namely, that of Colonel and Brigadier-General, is, we believe, the most unheard-of occurrence that was ever announced in our Military annals.

The more we consider the dissatisfaction which this appointment must naturally create, the more do we hope to find that there has been some mistake in the wording of this nomination, and that we shall learn at an early period that Sir Henry Bethune's local rank is confined to PERSIA, instead of, as the Gazette of the 8th ultimo stated it to be, throughout ASIA.

This correction will go far to heal the smart which the first announcement has created, though we fear the precedent thus made of raising a Retired Captain to the local rank of Major-General, even in Persia alone, will continue to be regarded by the Officers of the King's, and of the Company's Army, as one which seriously affects the rank of Field Officer in both Services.

THE Hampshire Telegraph has intimated that a Committee of Inquiry will be moved for early this Session, in order to ascertain whether the principle adopted by the Surveyor of the Navy, in the construction of vessels of war, is the proper one; and also to examine into the relative expense of the old and new constructioo. Now, so far as relates to the latter question, a Committee of the House of Commons, composed of gentlemen of business-like habits, might be well calculated to investigate the truth of the matter; and from what has been already published, by order of the House, of the relative expenses of Vanguard and Clarence (two ships of equal gravity, built in Pembroke Dock-yard), it appears that there is a saving of upwards of £5,000 on the hull alone, besides the gain of more room, by dispensing with 8,482 feet of solid timber, or 169 loads, in the Vanguard, Captain Symonds's ship; at the same time that she is reported, by the official document of the Master Shipwright of Pembroke Dock-yard, to possess "infinitely more strength, durability, capacity, convenience, comfort, stability, and elegance than if she were constructed on the late principle of ship-building."

We think this settles the question of expense; if not, let more comparative official returns be called for; for, supposing a Committee to be voted, it is upon their returns and the examination of the persons who estimate them that they must make these report, and therefore we think their labour in this respect would be supererogatory. We have no objection to inquiry in its widest shape, because we have heard the almost unanimous opinion expressed by Naval Officers who have served either in, or in company with, the Surveyor's ships, and we know it to be greatly in their favour; and we presume the Officers who are to peril their lives and fame in action with the enemy in future wars will be allowed to be competent and scrutinising judges of the merits of the materials they are to work with; particularly when they have opportunities of contrasting them with the existing ships of other nations, which nations, by the bye, have already adopted Captain Symonds's system. To suppose that a Committee of the House of Commons can be found qualified to give a decided opinion on the art of ship-building, we mean in respects the mould, &c., an art which is generally admitted to be impossible to reduce to a science is what we are not prepared to give the Honour able Members credit for, neither do we anticipate that (with two or three exceptions) Members could be found willing to place themselves, (we say it with reverence,) in the position of a Committee of stone-masons examining Sir Christopher Wren as to his method of structure. The best evidence of the superiority of Captain Symonds's construction, are the ships themselves, and the evidence of Naval Officers in their favour; and it has more than once occurred that when a vast deal of scientific calculations have been got up to show that such a ship was incapable of performing such an action; the labours of the ingenious hypothesist have been suddenly interrupted by the announcement that the thing had been accomplished. The only reasonable objection that can be urged against the Surveyor's ships is the apprehension of their speedy decay, owing to the use of unseasoned timber, and the hasty manner in which they were built, in order to prove the principle of his construction. This will not of course occur in future more if one system than another when sufficient time is allowed for the ship to season on the stocks. It is well known that the insidious dry rot has ravaged many a fine ship which has never been at sea,—witness the Queen Charlotte, Nelson, Dublin, &c.; and the Northumberland, and another ship (we believe L'Achille) required a thorough repair at the commencement of the last war ere they had been launched three years. But the presence or progress of dry rot has nothing, we apprehend, to do with the mould of the ship.

The interest which we have long felt, and shall always continue to feel, for the welfare of every branch of the Indian Army, will ever make us alive to those representations which may reach us, setting forth how any part of this valuable Force can be improved or benefited. The facts shown in a letter signed A Sepoy Officer, in our number of the 9th ult., we earnestly hope will have met the attention of those in authority, through whom the evils therein so justly complained of can be remedied. Those who have served in India must well know the value of the Sepoy Troops, and that they well merit the consideration which the writer so fairly claims for them. That a gallant soldier, whether a Sepoy or a European, who has faithfully served the East India Company two-thirds of his life, deserves a higher rate of pay than the man who entered their Service but yesterday, all must admit; yet, most strange to say, each it seems is paid alike!—the raw recruit and the soldier of twenty years' service. If justice did not teach a different system, policy, we should think, would long ago have done so, for a regulation of this kind must naturally produce dissatisfaction and bad feeling throughout the Native Troops. It cannot be said that the Company are ignorant of those well-grounded complaints, because we find that the old and experienced Officers of the East India Army who were examined before the Committee of the House of Commons on Indian affairs, urged these measures on public consideration. It would be well, then, for the Directors to reflect seriously on the suggestions which have been submitted to them, and to hasten to reward the old and faithful Native soldier, by increasing his pay in accordance with the length of his service, and in like manner to confer boons on the old and meritorious Sepoy Officers, and thus secure their influence in favour of the Company when retired from active employment, and mixing with their countrymen in their native villages. Good sense and good policy alike dictate this course, which for the well-being of India we sincerely hope will, ere long, be adopted.

We are glad to find that Mr. Curnin has arrived in this country to advocate in person with the Board of Control and the East India Directors his plan for a Retiring Fund for the Indian Army. Mr. Curnin is a gentleman of talent and perseverance; and we earnestly trust that the Directors will not turn a deaf ear to those suggestions which his intimate acquaintance with the feelings of the Officers of the Company's Army qualify him to offer.

It is truly gratifying to us to find that our honest and zealous endeavours to protect and promote the interest of the Services of the East India Company have not been useless; and no one can blame us for the pride and pleasure we take in giving publicity to the following resolution:—

"At the final meeting of the Committee of the Hon. East India Company's Maritime Officers included in the scale of compensation, it was proposed by Mr. Copling, seconded by Capt. Prubyn, and resolved unanimously:—'That as a trifling token of the grateful appreciation on the part of the Hon. East India Company's Maritime Officers of the generous kindness and public-spirited gratuitous assistance of the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette, and the handsome manner in which he has, spontaneously and repeatedly, urged the justice of granting compensation to the Maritime Service upon the Legislature, the Government, the Company, and the Public, that gentleman be earnestly requested to accept a gold pen with ruby nibs, which may serve to lighten the labours of his writing cabinet, and sometimes remind him of the good which he has done so disinterestedly, and, at the same time so powerfully, as to give another remarkable instance of the incalculable value of a free press to every class of the community, especially to such as may be suffering under any grievance.—Signed, on behalf of the Committee, JOHN COPLING.'"

Accounts have been received of the death of the Earl of Stair, at Paris. His Lordship's successor in his titles and estates is Lieut.-Gen. Sir J. H. Dalrymple, Bart., who represented Edinburgh county in the first reformed parliament. The late Earl was born in 1784, he married in 1804 (when under age) Johanna, eldest daughter of Charles Gordon, Esq., but the marriage was annulled in 1820. He was not an English Peer. The present Earl Stair is Colonel of the 92nd regt., and was born in 1771; he married in 1795 Harriet, eldest daughter of the Rev. R. A. Johnson, who died in 1823, and he married secondly, in 1825, the Hon. A. Duncan, fourth daughter of the first Visc. Duncan, by whom he has no issue. North Dalrymple, Esq., his only brother, who has a son and several daughters, is heir to the peerage.

The death of the late Viscount Hood, at Whalley Abbey, was awfully sudden. He had been partaking of a luncheon with Lady Hood and Mr. Kirkby, portrait painter, with both of whom he had been engaged in cheerful conversation, when, in a few minutes afterwards, while in the act of walking from the dining-room to the library, he fell down, and almost instantly expired.

Seamen's Hospital.—On Wednesday a meeting of the subscribers to this charity was held at the London Tavern, for the purpose of hearing the Secretary's report and of passing the accounts. Sir F. Commanney in the chair. From a statement made by the Secretary, it appeared that no less a number than 25,532 seamen have been received into the hospital since its foundation, and the number of patients last year amounted to 2,341.

About half-past 11 o'clock on Tuesday morning Corporal Mercer, of the Fusilier Guards, while looking into the window of a china shop in Holborn, within a few yards of Gray's Inn-lane, was observed to turn suddenly round and fell backwards. On being raised a contusion was discovered at the back of his head, from which the blood was flowing profusely. He was afterwards conveyed to his residence, No. 53, Queen Anne-street, Cavendish-square, where he remains in a very dangerous state.

By the demise of Lord Stowell one of the few remaining links between our time and the era of Johnson, Burke, and Goldsmith has been lost; the venerable Peer was one of Dr. Johnson's most intimate friends, and executor named in his will. Lord Stowell presided for years with great credit to himself over the Consistory and Admiralty Courts, and one of his latest judgments in the latter, given a few years since, in the matter of the slave Grace, was as distinguished as those given in his best days for critical acumen and extreme nicety of discrimination. He had been twice married; in April 1782, to Anna Maria, eldest daughter and co-heir of John Bagnall, Esq., who died in 1809. In 1813 he married, when in his 68th year, Lady Louisa Catherine Howe, Marchioness Dowager of Sligo, and daughter of the celebrated Earl Howe; she died shortly after, in 1817, without issue. By his first marriage Lord Stowell had a son and daughter; the latter was married in May 1809, to Thomas Townshend, Esq., who died in 18 childless; and she was married a second time in 1820 to Viscount Sidmouth. Lord Stowell's only son, the Hon. William Scott, was born in 1704, and died a short time ago, somewhat suddenly. The title is extinct. Lord Stowell's next brother, who survives him, is the venerable Earl of Eldon. Lord Stowell retired from the Admiralty Court in 1828, having presided there for the term of 20 years. The late Baron was a Privy Councillor, Commissioner of the Land Tax, Master of the Faculties, a Bencher of the Middle Temple, D.C.L., F.R.S., and F.S.A. He is understood to have died very rich.

The agents of the Spanish Government in London have recommenced recruiting, with a view of sending out a reinforcement of 2,000 men to replace the casualties which may occur during the campaign, and to form a sort of reserve army. A depot has been established at Liverpool to recruit 500 men, and agents have been forwarded to Dublin for the same purpose.

Last week, a superior officer of one of the regiments in garrison at Paris left home, after dining with his wife and her brother, to go to M. Thiers' ball. On the way he was so tormented with the remembrance of some bill that had been given him of inveterate long standing carried on by the parties he had left behind, that he returned to his residence. He entered softly, and on looking through the keyhole, found his wife and his brother-in-law in such a situation as left no doubt of their guilt. Seizing a pair of loaded pistols, he rushed into the room and fired at the paramour, but missed him. The latter, however, fell on the floor, and the husband then beat bout the head with the butt-end of the pistol. He next red the other pistol at his wife; bot the brother having uabed hie arm aside, sbo merely received a wound to the rm, which is not dangerous. Tha brother, covered with lood, succeeded in escaping by knocking over every ing that stood in his way. A commissary of police, ent for by the husband, drew up minutes of the affair. 'he affrontery of tha woman may be conceived when it is tated that, on being reproached for her conduct, she plied—"'Tis in vain for you to do anything, for nothing the world shall prevent our living together." The ithless wife is 25 years of age, and her brother only 20.

Elopement.—Monday morning a gay young fox-hunter, on of a Captain in the Army, eloped with the only aughter of a gallant Colonel, from near Chesterfield. Their flight was discovered by a farm servant, who, in oing in the morning to work, observed something white anging from a bed-room window; this was a pair of heets knotted together, one and secured to the iron ancheon of the window. The man made known the circumstance to the family, when it was discovered that he young lady was absent without leave. The party arted at about two in the morning in a gig, and proeeded at the rate of 18 miles an hour to Sheffield, whence hey dashed along in a chaise at a slashing rate for Gretna, where the blacksmith speedily riveted them emly in the bonds of Hymen. The circumstance has een a source of disappointment to several gentlemen of he neighbourhood who were paying court to the lady.

The Court.

On Wednesday the King and Queen arrived in town from the Pavilion at Brighton. Their Majesties were received at St. James's by the Duke of Cumberland. His Majesty held a Court at two o'clock, and afterwards a Privy Council. The King having been pleased to appoint Lord Seagrave to be Lord Lieutenant of the county of Gloucester, his Lordship took the oaths appointed to be taken thereupon. Mr. Hanbury Leigh took the oaths, having been appointed Lord Lieutenant of the county of Monmouth. Mr. Williams also took the oaths, having been appointed Lord Lieutenant of the County of Brecon. The King pricked the Roll of Sheriffs for England, Wales, and the Duchy of Lancaster for the present year. A proclamation was ordered for the issue of a new silver coin of the value of fourpence. A proclamation was ordered for a new distribution of prize-money captured in the slave trade. Colonel Leith Hay was introduced to His Majesty, by Viscount Melbourne, for the honour of Knighthood.

On Thursday his Majesty went in state to the House of Lords to open the Session of Parliament.

His Majesty has conferred the distinction of Knight of the third class Hanoverian Order on Lieut. Col. Leslie, on Lieut.-Col. Paul Philips, and Major Hopkins, late of 99th Reg.

Yesterday the Address from the House of Lords was received by his Majesty. The King received their Lordships in the Throne-room, surrounded by the Great Officers of State, &c. The Lord Chancellor read the Address, to which his Majesty was pleased to make a most gracious reply. The King, as Sovereign of the Order of the Garter, afterwards held a chapter, when the Duke of Hamilton and the Marquis of Londonderry were elected Knights. In the evening the King entertained a select party at dinner.

The stay of the Court at Brighton will not exceed the 20th Feb. The King rises every morning regularly at 8 o'clock. His Majesty passes the mornings in business connected with the affairs of state, and in the afternoon he takes an airing for two or three hours. He retires for the night generally at 11. For some time a number of workmen have been busy at Windsor Castle in preparing for the reception of their Majesties and the Court.

Downing Street, Feb. 2.—The King has been pleased to appoint Colonel Sir John Harvey to be Lieut.-Governor of Prince Edward's Island, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence; Jeffery Hart Bent, Esq., to be Chief Justice of the colony of British Guiana; Andries Stockenstrom, Esq., to be Lieut.-Governor of the eastern division of the settlement of the Cape of Good Hope, comprising the several districts of Albany, Somerset, Uitenhage, and Graaf Reynet; Lieut.-Colonel R. Torrens, C. B., W. A. Mackinnon, M.P., W. Hutt, M.P., J. G. S. Lefevre, G. Palmar, jun., J. Montefiore, S. Mills, E. Barnard, J. Roberts, and J. Pennington, Esqs., to be His Majesty's Commissioners for carrying into effect certain parts of the act passed in the last session of Parliament, entitled "An act to empower His Majesty to erect South Australia into a British province or provinces, and to provide for the colonization and government thereof," the said Commissioners to be styled "the Colonization Commissioners for South Australia;" also to appoint John Hindmarsh, Esq., Captain R.N., to be Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the province of South Australia.

THE KING'S SPEECH.

On Thursday his Majesty opened the session in person. Soon after 2 o'clock his Majesty, attended by the great officers of state, entered the house, and the attendance of the Commons having been required, the Speaker, accompanied by a number of members, immediately appeared at the bar.

His Majesty then proceeded to read his speech, but, owing to the haziness of the atmosphere, his Majesty was unable to decipher the speech without great difficulty, and was compelled to pause several times. At length, when his Majesty had got about half-way through the speech, tapers were brought in.

His Majesty said, with great promptness—"My Lords and Gentlemen, I have been prevented, not being able to see, from reading this speech as I ought; but I trust that by now reading it again, I shall be able to call the attention of your Lordships and the Gentlemen of the House of Commons to the various topics which it contains."

"My Lords and Gentlemen,—It is with much satisfaction that I again meet the great Council of the nation assembled in Parliament. I am ever anxious to avail myself of your advice and assistance, and I rejoice that the present state of public affairs, both at home and abroad, is such as to permit you to proceed without delay or interruption to the calm examination of those measures which will be submitted to your consideration. I continue to receive from my allies, and generally from all foreign powers, assurances of their unaltered desire to cultivate with me those friendly relations which it is equally my wish to maintain with them; and the intimate union which happily subsists between this country and France is a pledge to Europe of the continuance of the general peace. Desirous on all occasions to use my friendly endeavours to remove causes of disagreement between other powers, I have offered my mediation in order to compose the difference which has arisen between France and the United States. This offer has been accepted by the King of the French: the answer of the President of the United States has not yet been received; but I entertain a confident hope that a misunderstanding between two nations so enlightened and high-minded, will be settled in a manner satisfactory to the feelings, and consistent with the honour, of both. I have still to lament the continuance of the civil contest in the northern provinces of Spain. The measures which I have taken, and the engagements into which I have entered, sufficiently prove my deep anxiety for its termination; and the prudent and vigorous conduct of the present government of Spain inspires me with the hope that the authority of the Queen will soon be established in every part of her dominions; and that the Spanish nation, so long connected by friendship with Great Britain, will again enjoy the blessings of internal tranquillity and union. I have given directions that there shall be laid before you the treaty which I have concluded with the Queen of Spain for the suppression of the slave trade.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons.—I have directed the estimates of the year to be prepared and laid before you without delay. They have been framed with the strictest regard to well-considered economy. The necessity of maintaining the maritime strength of the country, and of giving adequate protection to the extended commerce of my subjects, has occasioned some increase in the estimates for the naval branch of the public service. The state of the commerce and manufactures of the United Kingdom is highly satisfactory. I lament that any class of my subjects should still suffer distress; and the difficulties which continue to be felt in important branches of agriculture may deserve your inquiry with the view of ascertaining whether there are any measures which Parliament can advantageously adopt for the alleviation of this pressure.

"My Lords and Gentlemen.—I have not yet received the further report of the commission appointed to consider the state of the several dioceses of England and Wales. But I have reason to believe that their recommendations upon most of the important subjects submitted to them are nearly prepared. They shall be laid before you without delay, and you will direct your early attention to the Ecclesiastical Establishment, with the intention of rendering it more efficient for the holy purposes for which it has been instituted. Another subject which will naturally occupy you, is the state of the tithe in England and Wales; and a measure will be submitted to you, having for its end the rendering this mode of providing for the clergy more fixed and certain, and calculated to relieve it from that fluctuation and those objections to which it has hitherto been subject. The principles of toleration by which I have been invariably guided must render me desirous of removing any cause of offence or trouble to the consciences of any portion of my subjects, and I am therefore anxious that you should consider whether measures may not be framed, which whilst they remedy any grievances which affect those who dissent from the doctrine or discipline of the Established Church, will also be of general advantage to the whole body of the community. The speedy and satisfactory administration of justice is the first and most sacred duty of a Sovereign, and I earnestly recommend you to consider whether better provision may not be made for this great purpose in some of the departments of the law, and more particularly in the Court of Chancery. I trust that you will be able to effect a just settlement of the question of tithe in Ireland upon such principles as will tend at length to establish harmony and peace in that country. You are already in possession of the Report of the Commission appointed to inquire into the state of the Municipal Corporations in Ireland, and I entertain a hope that it will be in your power to apply to any defects and evils, which may have been shown to exist in those institutions, a remedy founded upon the same principles as those of the acts which have already passed for England and Scotland. A further report of the Commission of Inquiry into the condition of the poorer classes of my subjects in Ireland will speedily be laid before you. You will approach this subject with the caution due to its importance and difficulty; and the experience of the salutary effects already produced by the act for the amendment of the laws relating to the poor in England and Wales may in many respects assist your deliberations. I rely upon your prudence and wisdom, and upon your determination to maintain as well as to amend the laws and institutions of the country, and I commit these questions of domestic policy, to which I have deemed it my duty to direct your attention, into your hands, persuaded that you will so treat them as to increase the happiness and prosperity, by promoting the religion and morality, of my people."

His Majesty having finished, immediately withdrew, and the House adjourned.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Thursday, 4th Feb.—The address was moved by the Duke of Leinster, and seconded by the Earl of Burlington. The Duke of Wellington admitted the great importance of the Speech from the Throne, and of the subjects embraced. There was one part, however, to which he felt a strong objection. It was that which related to the Municipal Corporations of Ireland, and which went to pledge the House to the adoption of certain principles contrary to the usages of Parliament. After arguing at some length, the Noble Duke submitted an amendment in these words:—"That being already in possession of the Report of the Commission appointed to inquire into the state of the Municipal Corporations in Ireland, we will proceed without delay to the consideration of any defects or evils which may have been shown to exist in these institutions, for the purpose of obviating them, and ensure the impartial administration of justice."—Lord Melbourne defended the course pursued by Ministers in the paragraph to which the Noble Duke had objected. The Earl of Winchilsea declared his intention of supporting the amendment, but regretted that it did not go far enough.—The Marquis of Lansdowne was [illegible] with the importance of a [illegible] willing to make some sacrifice. He therefore proposed that his noble friend should agree to the amendment, on an express understanding, however, that it should not preclude them from applying the principles alluded to, in case it should be considered expedient.—Lord MELBOURNE having acquiesced, the address, as amended, was agreed to.

FRIDAY, 5th Feb.—The Duke of ARGYLL, as Lord Steward of the Household, informed their lordships that his Majesty would receive their lordships' address at half-past two o'clock. The Earl of SHAFTESBURY, in the absence of the Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench, introduced to their lordships a Bill for the abolition of capital punishments in certain cases. At two their lordships proceeded in state to present the Address to his Majesty.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 4th Feb.—Sir J. Wrottesley moved, and Mr. Parker (of Sheffield) seconded, the address.—Sir R. PEEL reviewed the different topics introduced into his Majesty's Speech, upon many of which he dissented from the views taken by his Majesty's Ministers, and took care to guard himself against being compromised by the vote he should give. He dwelt with considerable force upon the wording of the paragraph to which objection had been taken in the House of Lords, with respect to the Irish Corporations, and, confining his opposition to that one point of the Speech, he concluded by proposing an amendment similar in the one proposed by the Duke of Wellington.—A debate of considerable animation ensued.—Lord J. RUSSELL defended the address.—Lord STANLEY declared he should support the amendment.—Lord HOWICK supported the original address, and denied that the Administration had extended the power and sought the support of Mr. O'Connell. He admitted the power of that individual, and he was sorry that it existed; but he was not, and never could be, his personal friend.—Lord D. STUART said he should agree to the address, but he regretted that all mention of Poland was omitted.—Lord PALMERSTON contended that there was no ground for this complaint.—Mr. O'CONNELL exclaimed against the injustice of refusing a full equality of rights to Ireland, and vindicated the conduct of the Irish Government. He renewed the threat of repeal, in case his expectations should be disappointed.—Mr. SHAW replied to Mr. O'Connell.—The amendment was rejected, the numbers being—For the original motion, 284; for the amendment, 243.

FRIDAY, 5th Feb.—Mr. W. FINN gave notice of a motion, in consequence of the Grand Orange Lodge of Ireland having impeached the conduct of the witnesses examined before the Committee of that House, and also the Report of that Committee, in a document which appeared in the Dublin Evening Mail and the Dublin Warder. Mr. EWART moved that no business except of a formal nature should be entered upon after half-past 11 at night. After a long discussion the House divided—For the motion, 51; against it, 233.—Sir J. WROTTESLEY then brought up the Report on the Address, which, after considerable discussion, was agreed to without a division.—Mr. MACLEAN gave notice of a motion for returns of the quantity of warlike stores supplied by our government to that of Madrid; of the amount of payment hitherto made for them by the latter, and of the number of officers of the British service now serving under Lieut.-Col. Evans who are in receipt of half-pay or pensions from the English government. In reply to a question by Mr. ROBINSON, the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER stated that the arrangements entered into with reference to the British pension enjoyed by his Majesty the King of Belgium had been most honourably fulfilled. The House adjourned at half-past 8 o'clock, till 1 o'clock this day; when it will meet, merely for the purpose of going up with the Address to the King.

EAST INDIA COMPANY'S MARITIME OFFICERS.

ON Wednesday a Special Court of Proprietors was held at the India House, for the purpose of taking into consideration the minute adopted by the Court of Directors on the 17th ult., relative to the resolution of the last Court of Proprietors in favour of compensating those officers of the maritime service who have been excluded from compensation by the rule of time. The meeting was fully attended, J. Stanley Clarke, Esq, in the Chair. The Secretary read the minute as it appeared in the Naval and Military Gazette.—The Chairman proposed that the Court of Proprietors should concur with the Directors in the minute.—Mr. Sweet moved as an amendment—"That in the opinion of this Court, the case of every Commander and officer heretofore employed by or under the Company in the maritime service, who will make a declaration that he had not abandoned the service, nor engaged in business, and that his interest has been affected by the discontinuance of the Company's trade (agreeably to the 7th section of the Act of 3d and 4th of William IV., cap. 85), is such a special case as entitles a Commander or officer to a pension or gratuity, notwithstanding he may not have been actually in the service of the Company within five years antecedent to the 28th Aug. 1833. And that the Court of Directors be requested to grant pensions and gratuities to special cases, in conformity with the foregoing declaration, according to the scale, and from the period heretofore granted to other Commanders and officers, their widows and children, subject to a reduction of one-fourth the amount thereof."—Colonel Stanhope seconded the amendment.—Mr. Weeding expressed a hope that the Court of Directors would support the recommendation of the general Court. He could not agree to that part of the amendment in which it was recommended that a reduction of one-fourth of the compensation given to the other officers should be made. He suggested the insertion of the words "who have not abandoned the service, or relinquished it for the purpose of engaging in business."—After some observations from Sir C. Forbes and Mr. Twining, in favour of the insertion, Mr. Sweet said he had no objection to the words being inserted, and the resolution was altered accordingly.—Mr. Robinson, M. P., supported the amendment.—The Chairman said that if he could, consistently with what he deemed to be his duty, comply with the wishes expressed by many Hon. Proprietors, it would be more gratifying to his own personal feelings: and in that opinion the other Directors concurred; but, under all the circumstances of the case, they would be compelled, in the discharge of their public duty, however painful it might be to their feelings, to adhere to the resolution in the shape in which it had been submitted to the Court by them, and he hoped that the Court would concur in the minute so submitted to their consideration.—Sir C. Forbes said he was sorry to find that the Court of Directors could not agree to the amendment proposed, to which he could not see what serious objection they could entertain. He hoped, however, that they would even yet show a disposition to meet, in some degree, the wishes of the Proprietors, by modifying the terms of the minute. He knew that many parties had claimed who ought to have been ashamed to do so.—Mr. Fielder doubted whether, if the amendment were carried, it would be confirmed by the Board of Control, and for that reason he thought the Court had better adopt the minute of the Directors.—Mr. Twining expressed a similar opinion, and hoped that some plan would be adopted calculated to prevent any collision between the Court of Directors and the Proprietors.—The Deputy Chairman impressed on the Court of Proprietors the policy of adopting the original motion, for the benefit of those parties interested. Much had been said about compelling the excluded officers to accept of charity. But what the Court of Directors proposed was to give compensation to those who were in want of it, upon the principle adopted with regard to the Poplar Fund. He felt it necessary most unequivocally to declare, he knew it to be the determination of the Court of Directors not to depart from the sentiments expressed in the minute, under any circumstances. They would not change one iota; and however unpopular it might be to make the declaration, such was their final decision—(hear).—Mr. Marriott thought that the Court of Directors were best able to decide the question.—The question was then put from the chair, and on a show of hands the Chairman decided that the original motion was carried in the affirmative. A division was called for, when there appeared—For the original motion, 40; for Mr. Sweet's amendment, 60; majority, 20.—On the motion that the amendment stand part of the main question, Mr. Astell demanded a ballot.—The Secretary read the paper, which was signed by nearly all the Directors, and it stated that on behalf of the Proprietors and the natives of India, it was necessary that the question should be decided by the ballot.—Objections were taken by Mr. Weeding, Sir C. Forbes, and Mr. Robinson, to the insertions of any reasons in the paper demanding the ballot why such a course was adopted.—Mr. Robinson said that the effect of such a course would be that counter-statements must be put forth to the public, to show that the natives of India were no more interested in this question than those of Otaheite.—Mr. Wigram said he thought it his duty to the Proprietors and the people of India that a ballot should take place upon this question.—Sir C. Forbes expressed a strong hope that the Proprietors would rally round the excluded officers of the maritime service.—The Chairman then intimated that the ballot would take place on the 17th inst.—The Chairman said a letter had been received from the Board of Control, relative to the resolution of the last Court of Proprietors, in favour of Captains Newell, Barrow, and Glasspole, which would now be read.—The Secretary read the letter, which stated that the Board of Commissioners felt themselves bound to adhere to their former decision, and that the parties referred to were not entitled to compensation.—On the motion of Mr. Weeding, the correspondence upon this subject between the Court of Directors and the Board of Control was ordered to be printed, for the information of the Proprietors. This was agreed to, after some discussion.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—The Fieschi trial proceeds without exciting much interest, as the public mind is pre-occupied with the discussion of M. Gouin's bill for the reduction of the 5 per cents, which was expected to come on on Thursday. The only piquant incident in the Fieschi proceedings is the examination of Nina Lassave, one of his mistresses, who is described as what is generally called a pretty girl, plainly dressed in a cotton gown and brown silk bonnet, and who says she took the Infernal Mechanist's handy-work for a loom, and that he told her it was a machine for making silk cord.

SPAIN.—The 17th article of the Ministerial electoral project, relative to the mode of election in districts and provinces, had been so amended by the committee as to have undergone an entire change of character. Ministers opposed the amendment, and supported the original article. After a warm discussion, the original article was put to the vote, and rejected by a majority of 71 against 66. Several members refrained from voting. The Queen has in consequence dissolved the Cortes.

It seems that the affair of the 17th Jan. proved to be a decided victory in favour of the Carlists. The loss of the Christinos is stated to be a thousand killed. The French and English suffered most. One account indeed says, that "English legion did not stand a minute, they were gorged with brandy." Don Carlos meantime is constructing additional works round Sebastian, and raising fresh levies. A letter in this day's paper addressed to ourselves, gives a deplorable account of the state of the British Legion.

The Barcelona Journal of the 25th and 26th ult., states that Col. Sebastian had defeated at Ardura a division of Carlists, marching to relieve the Hermitage del Hort. On the 24th Brigadier Garnea reached Cervera with a large column, and, on the preceding day, the artillery sent from Barcelona to reduce that fort was to have arrived at St. Llorens del Pitens. No engagement of any description had taken place between the Christinos and rebels, from the 17th to the 27th, and both armies remained in their respective positions. Maj. Kirby and Col. Dixon, of the British auxiliaries, had passed through Bayonne on the 29th, with despatches for Gen. Alava and M. Carbonell. Don Carlos was still at Oaste on the 27th.

Theatres.

COVENT GARDEN.—The new operatic romance, entitled Quasimodo, or the Gipsey Girl of Notre Dame, was performed at this theatre on Tuesday evening with very indifferent success. It is, as our readers are aware, founded on that extraordinary novel of Victor Hugo's called "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." The novel was dramatised for the Surrey Theatre some time since, and the drama there produced was many degrees superior to the present work; but neither of them conveys the slightest portion of the overwhelming interest which is to be met with in almost every page of the novel. To those persons who have read the work, we can only say, that need not desire to see the drama, as nearly all the beautiful and highly effective portions have been most carefully omitted in it. Those finely wrought scenes which occur in the church of Notre Dame, in which Quasimodo and Esmeralda play such conspicuous parts have been entirely lost sight of, and in their stead we are treated with scenes "full of sound and fury, signifying nothing." The last scene was evidently intended to awake the tender sympathies of the audience; but as there is but one step from the sublime to the ridiculous the author overstepped the former, and landed safely on the latter: the result was, that where the audience ought to have wept they laughed immoderately. Of some portions of the performance we are bound to speak in terms of high praise; this alludes particularly to the very able acting of Mr. George Bennett, who sustained the part of Claude Frollo in a highly finished and most effective manner;—it was admirably conceived, and most faithfully pourtrayed: it was, indeed, the Monk of Victor Hugo. Wallack's performance of Quasimodo is also entitled to praise. Miss Romer was but an indifferent representative of the bewitching Esmeralda; matrimony, we fear, has not improved her voice. She was encored in two songs, and scarcely applauded for her best song—"Might I dwell in Gilded Palaces." The opening chorus of the third act is a beautiful composition, but justice was not rendered to it by the singers. Indeed, all the concerted pieces were badly, very badly executed. The Bohemian Ballet, the music by Mercadante, introduced in the second act, is a splendid composition. The dance was well managed and highly characteristic. Some of the scenes are very well painted, and we think the piece if reduced to two acts, might draw for a few evenings [illegible]piece. We omitted to say that the music has been chiefly selected from the works of Weber, but not judiciously.

QUEEN'S.—The Delusion, a translation from the French, and, we should say, originally to be found in the shape of a tale in Blackwood's Magazine, was produced here on Monday evening with success. The piece has not been well arranged, for there is no interest whatever in the first act. The second act is highly interesting, and, owing to the admirable acting of Mr. Elton and Mrs. Nisbett, was listened to with great attention, and their exertions frequently rewarded with well-merited applause. Mr. Aylliffe was not quite serious enough in the second act, where he discovers the fatal mark under his patient labours. The piece was announced for repetition by Elton, who was loudly called for at its termination. Is She a Woman? continues to increase in popularity.

ADELPHI.—Mr. L. Bulwer's novel of Rienzi has been cut into shreds by the scissors of Little Buckstone, the cetor and concocter of burlettas, to make a dramatic olla podrida for this theatre. Mutilation has done its worst! Paste and scissors never before produced a more perfect piece of patchwork! The burletta of Rienzi reminds us of the PENNY SHOW we not unfrequently meet in the streets, in which a pleasing variety of scenes are exhibited without the slightest reference to each other. We should suppose Mr. Buckstone's aim has been to string together a number of scenes for the sake of presenting us with show and spectacle; in this he has succeeded, for his drama of Rienzi has no connexion or continuity of plot to interest the spectator. Had he taken ANY 50 pages of the novel at random, he might have produced as clever a piece as that now acting at this theatre. The manager, the scene-painter, and the carpenter are entitled to more credit for this production, than the author, who was called for at the termination of this piece on Monday evening, to receive the applause of an audience for his plagiarisms. It is to be regretted that the spirited proprietors of this theatre do not seek for something worth expending good scenery, magnificent dresses, and clever acting upon. The acting of Mr. Elton, who played the part of Rienzi, is entitled to our warmest approbation, he is the best actor in his line that we have ever seen at this house; we wish he had a better part for the exercise of his talent. The piece was well received, and will, on account of its splendour, prove attractive.

ORATORIOS.—On Saturday evening there was an oratorio at Drury-Lane Theatre and at Covent Garden Theatre: they were both well attended. At Drury-Lane the singing of Madame Stockhausen and the splendid piano-forte performance of Madame Dulcken were the chief attractions of the evening. Braham was in fine voice, and Anderson could not sing at all. Balfe was [illegible]rerely well received. At Covent Garden, Handel's Messiah was indifferently performed, as regards the vocalists. Mr. Collins attempted Luther's Hymn, of which he made a sad mess, and got hissed for his pains. Madame Caradori Allen and Miss Turpin were the principal vocalists engaged: they acquitted themselves to the entire satisfaction of the audience. Mrs. Geesin made but a so-so business of it. The orchestra was numerous, and more effective than at Drury-Lane.

LORD WILLIAM BENTINCK AND THE INDIAN ARMY.

A more unfit person for a Com.-in-Chief than Lord William Bentinck it would have been difficult for any ministry to pitch upon, nor does it reflect credit upon the Court of Directors, the Board of Control, or his Majesty's Government, that for the sake of effecting a saving of some six or seven thousand pounds a year, the welfare and discipline of an army, on whose exertions the security of our Indian possessions are dependant, should have been risked, or their interests sacrificed. The character and theorising propensities of his Lordship were well known to the Duke of Wellington, so much so, that he foretold on the first appointment of Lord William to the Indian Government, that entire bouleversement of the established order of things which has taken place; illustrating the description of his Lordship's brain, by placing three wine glasses on the table in a right line, which he declared, if Lord William was seated before, would in five minutes be removed, so as to form the point of a triangle; it is therefore easy to conceive that his Grace had little to do in recommending or supporting the appointment of a "civilian" to so high a military appointment. Lord William Bentinck can scarcely lay claim to the name of a soldier, he has neither done duty in the junior ranks or been employed in the senior, while the occupations of his life, whether in diplomacy or farming, have left him but little time and less inclination to study dry details of drill, discipline, and the interior economy of the service. His Lordship's aptitude at learning, however miraculous it may have appeared in some departments to which his attention was turned *, would seem to have failed hire in his military career; and a reasonable doubt may be entertained, whether on his retirement from the command of the Indian army, he could have put a file of men to the right about.

Lord William Bentinck entered the service as a Lieut. in the Coldstream Guards 27th Jan., 1791, obtained his troop in the Scotch Greys 1st May, 1792, (fifteen months a Sobaltern), a Majority in the 28th Foot in February, 1794, a Lieut.-Colonelcy in the 20th Dragoons in March, 1794 (not one month a Major), and was made a full Colonel 1st Jan., 1795, being less by some few days than four years, from his first entering the service. From that period his Lordship's promotion has been according to the regular gradation of theservice, and he was accordingly raised to the rank of Maj.-Gen. in 1805. He was employed in 1799, for a few months on the staff of the army in Holland, and on the breaking out of the Peninsular war, he was nominated to the command of a brigade in the army under Sir John Moore, the latter appointment, was intended as a blind, his Lordship being employed in the diplomatic line; he was unsuccessful in his negotiations and joined the army the evening previous to the battle of Corunna. He was present with his brigade (it would be a misnomer to say he commanded) during the action, and embarked with the retreating army. His Lordship's military career previous to his appointment to the command of the India army, is almost comprised in the foregoing brief summary, and it is curious to contrast the rapidity of his rise with that of the officers afterwards under his command, and the contempt shewn by the Major-General of 13 years' service, towards old Captains (some of 29 years' standing), who were declared by him, ineligible from incompetence for the situation of Deputy Adjutant General. The military reader will easily conceive how utterly impossible it was for his Lordship, in the short periods of his actual service, to acquire that knowledge of the habits, manners, and wants of the Soldier, so indispensably requisite in the individual at the head of the army.

The ruling passion of Lord William Bentinck was an overwhelming ambition, and however moderate his abilities on ordinary occasions, yet when self-interest was concerned, his plans were too often laid with a cunning that wore the deceptive appearance of talent. From the very first day of his arrival, he coveted the glory of re-uniting the two high offices held by the Marquis of Hastings, and on a reference to the faithful chroniclers of the times, it would seem that his Lordship landed on a rainy afternoon at Champaul Ghaut "dressed in full military uniform," a compliment to the Ramjanees and Peer Buxes of Calcutta, never on any one occasion paid to the army under his command. The new Governor General by resorting to every description of petty annoyance †, at last provoked the Earl Dalhousie to send in his resignation, but was disappointed in the attainment of the main object, in consequence of Sir Edward Barnes having in his possession a conditional nomination to the command of the army. The ungarded conduct of Sir Edward soon after his arrival from Ceylon, held out hopes that an opportunity might arise for recommending his recal, and, when the opportunity did occur, it was seized upon in a manner quite characteristic of his Lordship's mole like method of proceeding. Sir Edward Barnes was unconscious of the game the Governor General was playing, until the order had absolutely arrived, and the Indian community could scarcely have been more surprised at the announcement, than the principal party concerned.

It will be in the recollection of most of our readers that Sir Edward Barnes proceeded Dawk to Calcutta, ostensibly for the purpose of taking his seat in Council, but in reality to adjust a dispute which had unfortunately sprung up between himself and the Vice-President in Council, consequent upon a letter countersigned by the Military Secretary, that had been opened at the office of the Post Master General.

"When lo! he stumbled o'er a pair of saxons."

The Senhor Don Affonso, could scarcely have been more surprised at the discovery of June's, by the bed-side of Donna Julia, than was the P. M. G. at this awful breach of the laws of franking. It was one of those little-great disclosures of a fraud on the revenue, that small minded men delight in, and like Scrub in the Beaux Stratagem, the man of letters smelt a plot. The shoe or shoes, went or were in transit to a China man in the Cossitollah, and as our relations with the celestial empire were at that time in a ticklish state, there was no saying what hidden meaning might lurk under the white satin slipper. The shoe got at last into Council, underwent as strict an examination as a shoe could undergo, and highly pleased their honours, who at last decided that for want of something better to do, they might as well have a game at hunt the slipper; pending a reference to the Commander-in-Chief of the Indian army, for an explanation of the very mysterious circumstance which had so unexpectedly been brought before them.

The absolute fact of the white satin slipper having arrived in Calcutta, under the frank of his Military Secretary, Sir Edward treated as it deserved, with ridicule; but the discovery involved a more important principle, in the question of whether the correspondence of the Com.-in-Chief was to be subjected to the scrutiny of the P. M. G.; and for the sake of adding a stray three or four rupees of the 21 million sterling of the Indian revenue, the details to his officers be rendered liable to a pernicious publicity. The dispute soon grew warm, and even the best friends of Sir Edward admit, that certain letters were couched in language that would have been better avoided. However, on his visit to Calcutta an explanation took place; the parties more immediately concerned were satisfied, and the Governor-General in virtue of his authority declared the dispute at an end, and allowed the intemperate letters to be withdrawn. The affair was altogether an unpleasant one, and Sir Edward Barnes left Calcutta, well pleased at what he supposed its termination. A fair, honest, straight-forward soldier, used to the free expression of his real sentiments; little did he suspect the duplicity that was adopted towards himself. He had scarcely arrived at Simlah before he was apprised, that the whole correspondence relating to the late dispute had been forwarded to the Home Authorities BY MISTAKE,—and on this MISTAKE of Lord William Bentinck's was Sir Edward Barnes's recal grounded and Lord William Bentinck appointed to the command of the Army, thereby saving some six thousand pounds a year to the Honourable Company, so that after all the satin slipper turned out a valuable item, if credited to the post office receipts. Sir Edward Barnes, on his passage down the country, made no secret of the underhand manner in which he had been treated by the Governor-General, or his dislike to the "quill driving schemes" pursued by the council of Bengal.

The first acts of Lord William Bentinck on assuming the command of the Army were taken with a view to reflect disgrace on the rule of his predecessor; and in pursuance of this system all descriptions of complaints were not only received but fostered at head quarters, squabbles long set at rest were carefully raked from their ashes, nourished into representation, inquiries, and Courts-martial, and the curious observer will find, that a large majority of the causes submitted to the decision of the military tribunals, were manufactured out of disputes that occurred in the time of Sir Edward Barnes. During the eighteen months that Lord William Bentinck commanded the Army, more Lieut.-Colonels were brought to Courts-Martial than in the preceding portion of the present century; and it is somewhat singular that his Lordship should have failed in every instance of procuring a conviction, at the same time that it shows how little consideration the individual cases could have been subjected to at head-quarters. The object, however, was to create an impression that his predecessor had left the Army in a state of insubordination, and to accomplish this, "Convictions" were unnecessary; while on the other hand, serious charges, involving not only the interests of individuals, but the character of the Army, originating in the mismanagament of his Lordship's advisers, or the unchecked violence of favoured individuals, were either decided on with a celerity that necessarily entailed injustice, discarded without a hearing, left unanswered, or replied to with a brevity that not only disgusted but irritated the parties concerned. There was no medium observed by his Lordship, and the capricious manner in which appeals were decided upon, completely paralysed the chief military authorities in command of divisions or stations; in no instance, however strictly they might be guided by the rules of the service, could they be sure of the approval of his Excellency; and at last, to shield themselves from censure, they were necessitated to forward the most trivial cases to the head-quarters of the Army. His Lordship loved to live in an atmosphere of complaints, and as long as he received a due quantity, considered that the Army must be progressing to a state of improvement, without considering that in depriving the local authorities of the powers to which they were properly entitled, he sapped the very foundations of discipline, and rendered the Generals and Brigadiers little more than cyphers, authorised to draw a certain number of rupees per mensem. In some instances, officers knowing the facility with which appeals against the decisions of their superiors would be received, became reckless either as to the opinion or censure of those placed immediately above them, and the length of time that necessarily elapsed pending the reference to Calcutta, together with the uncertainty, whether the subject in dispute would ever be noticed, served to cherish bad feelings and continued litigation, where, had the proper authorities been sure of the support due to their high rank, the improper conduct of the individuals might have been checked at the first offset.

* When his Lordship was about to start the Government Insurance Bubble, he borrowed from Mr. B——w a copy of Babbage's Insurance. The book was returned the next day with many thanks from his Lordship, who had read it through, and now fully understood the doctrines of Insurance.

† The following may give an idea of his Lordship's proficiency in the art of teasing. Lord Dalhousie, previous to leaving Simlah on his return down the country, mentioned to the Governor General his intention of visiting the King of Delhi; no opposition was offered by Lord William, though in the course of conversation, some remark was made on the order of the Court of Directors, limiting the customary present to thirty thousand rupees. Lord Dalhousie left Simlah, and the day after his arrival at Delhi, on telling Mr. Martin, the Resident, that he purposed paying his respects to the King on the following day, was informed, that orders had just been received from the Governor General, desiring that should Lord Dalhousie visit the palace, the Resident should on no account offer a nuzzur at his presentation.

THE LATE HON. SIR THOS. PAKENHAM, G.C.B., ADMIRAL OF THE RED.

We announce with regret the decease of this distinguished officer, which took place at his seat in Ireland on Tuesday last. The deceased, who was son of Thomas Lord Longford, was certainly one of the most distinguished officers of the British Navy; a man remarkable for talent, prompt decision, courage, and judgment. He first went to sea in 1770, in the Southampton frigate, with Capt. Macbride, and in 1774 proceeded to the Coast of Guinea with the brave Cornwallis; on his return he was appointed acting Lieutenant of the Sphinx, Capt. Hunt, and sailed for N. America. Early in 1776, Gen. Lord Howe had evacuated Boston, and Lord Cornwallis had arrived. It was of the utmost importance that he should be apprised of the circumstance immediately, and Mr. Pakenham was entrusted with the despatches of Gen. Clinton, and sent in the armed sloop General Gage to Halifax, which port he reached, having narrowly escaped capture by an American squadron. Adm. Shuldam was so pleased with his skill and ability that he instantly made him a Lieut. in the Greyhound frigate, in which he was actively employed and severely wounded. On the return of the Greyhound to England, Lord Mulgrave took Mr. Pakenham as Second Lieut. of the Courageux, from which he was removed to the Europe, Adm. Arbuthnot's flag ship, and proceeded with him to N. America. He was soon after made a Commander, appointed to the Victor, and despatched to the W. Indies with the intelligence that Count d'Estaing had arrived on the American coast with a large fleet. On his arrival at Jamaica, Capt. Pakenham was transferred to the Ruby, Sir Peter Parker's flag ship and was soon after appointed to the command of the Bristol. He then sailed with Commodore Cornwallis, and fought in those defensive actions which covered him with immortal honour. In these engagements Capt. Pakenham distinguished himself by his coolness and judgment, for which Sir P. Parker promoted him to the rank of Post Captain in the San Carlos, a ship taken from the Spaniards. His career was for a time suspended: the wounds he received in the Greyhound broke out afresh, baffled all medical skill, and forced him to return to England. As soon as he recovered he was appointed to the command of the Crescent, of 28 guns, in which he accompanied Admiral Digby to Gibraltar, and thence to Minorca, for the relief of the garrison. He returned in company with the Flora, Capt. Williams, and they fell in with two Dutch frigates of 36 guns each, which they brought to action. For two hours did Capt. Pakenham contend against the superior force, but having lost his mainmast the ship became unmanageable, and he was forced to strike; but Capt. Williams, having reduced his opponent, bore up to the assistance of the Crescent, and prevented the enemy from taking possession of her. Capt Pakenham came home in the Flora, leaving 103 either killed or wounded out of 198. The Court-Martial came to the unanimous opinion "That the Hon. Capt. Pakenham throughout the action behaved with the coolest and ablest judgment, and with the firmest and most determined resolution; that he did not strike till he was totally unable to make the smallest defence; and the Court do therefore honourably acquit him. They cannot dismiss him without expressing their admiration of his conduct, wherein he manifested the skill of an able and judicious seaman, and the intrepidity of a gallant officer." Capt. Pakenham was appointed to the Minerva in the Channel fleet under Lord Howe, and continued in her till the conclusion of the war. When the French revolution renewed hostilities, Lord Chatham gave Capt. Pakenham the command of the Intrepide, 74, and in the complete defeat given to the enemy on the 1st June, he bore a distinguished part. He was particularly mentioned by Lord Howe, and received a medal. Lord Chatham offered him his choice of the captured ships, and he chose the Juste, the one he had himself taken. In 1795 he was made Colonel of Marines, and served under Adms. Waldegrave, Cornwallis, and Allan Gardner. In 1799 he was advanced to the rank of R.-Admiral, in 1804 to that of V.-Admiral, in 1810 to that of Admiral, and in 1820 was created a Grand Cross of the Bath.

From JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba.

From WILLIAM HEWITSON, Esq., House Surgeon in the Free Hospital, Oreville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of: the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly, (Signed) "WILLIAM HEWITSON.

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.

FAMILIES in want of really good Servants

of every description, both Male and Female, will decidedly find their interest better consulted, and their object much sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, No. 134, OXFORD-STREET, near Holles-street, established in 1830, than through the adoption of any other method whatever; as Domestics, with good characters, are in waiting to be hired from 10 to 5 o'clock.

Many persons are prejudiced against an Establishment for Hiring Servants; but if the Servant possess a good character, it certainly is perfect nonsense to suppose that it is injured by the readiest method having been taken to procure a situation.

N.B. It will be particularly advantageous to send for a Prospectus.

CHESS.—Amateurs of this Delightful Game

will find, at the BRITISH and FOREIGN COFFEE-HOUSE and DIVAN, 60 and 67, Cornhill, opportunities of improvement and enjoyment unsurpassed even at the celebrated Café de la Regence of Paris. Merchants and Gentlemen staying in the City are respectfully invited to an excellent and very respectably attended Table d'Hote every Thursday at five o'clock.

NISBET, 30, Wigmore-street, has the honour to announce to the Nobility and Gentry, that he has been appointed, by Mons. Guerlain, Rue Rivoli, a Paris, SOLE AGENT, Wholesale and Retail, for the SALE of the above. An article of the highest reputo of the Toilet of Gentlemen throughout Europe, especially for Shaving, as from its emollient qualities it is far superior to the purest Naples Soap. It is also prepared in solid squares for the hands. Also Madame Cavaillon's Pomade Melainocome, a highly esteemed preparation for dying the hair, &c.

YOLAND'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION is the most wonderful Medicine ever discovered by man, for the cure of GONORRHŒA, GLEETS, STRICTURES, WHITES, Pains in the Loins, Affections of the Kidneys, Gravel, Irritation of the Urethre or Bladder, and for all Urinary Diseases in both sexes.—This Medicine is patronised, prescribed, recommended, and sanctioned by the Most Eminent of the Faculty, not only in England but on the Continent; and stated by them, from experience, to be the only Medicine that can be relied on for the cure of these complaints, and they invariably resort to it when their own remedies fail.

YOLAND'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION cures both sexes at all times sooner than any other known remedy, with the most triumphant success, after every Medicine of the present day has proved ineffectual, so that this justly celebrated specific has arrived at the acme of perfection, surpassing every thing of the kind that ever bore the name of medicine, frequently curing some of these serious diseases in a few hours. Those who have suffered from any of the above diseases for many years (such as strictures, &c.) will find upon taking this medicine for a short time, that, if not entirely cured, they will no longer feel inconvenience from the trifling complaint that remains.

References to respectable Surgeons, who are in the habit of prescribing this medicine extensively, will be given on application to the Proprietor's Agents.

Sold in Sealed Packets, with full directions, so that any one may cure themselves with perfect safety and secrecy, sent to any part of the world by HANNAY and Co., 63, Oxford-street, the corner of Wells-street, London, to whom dealers in the country are requested to forward their orders direct; and Retail by all respectable Medicine Venders. Price 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. Country Orders, Orders for the Continent, and shipping Orders to any extent, executed as usual on the day of arrival.

STIRLING'S STOMACH PILLS, for

Health and Longevity.—An eminent medical writer has remarked, and experience has proved the fact beyond dispute, that those who are attentive to keeping the Stomach and Bowels in proper order, preserve health, prevent disease, and generally attain robust, cheerful, and healthy Old Age. For that truly desirable purpose, STIRLING'S STOMACH PILLS are particularly adapted, being prepared with the Sulphate of Quinine, and the most choice stomachic and aperient drugs of the Materia Medica. They have in all cases proved superior to every other medicine in the cure of stomach and liver complaints, indigestion, loss of appetite, sensation of fulness, sick-head-ache, pain and oppression after meals, habitual costiveness, flatulence, shortness of breath, stomach coughs, spasms, worms, and fits in children and grown persons, and all disorders incident to the stomach and bowels. They are also truly efficacious in the cure of colds, ogues, asthmas, rheumatism, gout, jaundice, dropsy, and gravel, and an excellent restorative after any excess or too free indulgence at table, as they gently cleanse the bowels, strengthen the stomach, sweeten the breath, cheer the spirits, brace the nerves, induce a healthy action of the liver, improve digestion, and invigorate the whole system. Females who value good health and personal appearance, should never be without them, as they purify the blood, remove obstructions, pimples, cutaneous eruptions, sallowness, &c., and give the skin a beautiful, clear, healthy, and blooming appearance. Persons of a plethoric habit who are subject to head-ache, fits, giddiness, dimness of sight, or drowsiness, singing noise in the ears, which indicate too great a flow of blood to the head, should be particular to take them frequently. They are so mild and gentle in their action that children and persons of all ages may take them at any time, as they do not contain mercury or any ingredient that requires confinement or restriction of diet. Many healthy aged individuals, some of one hundred years and upwards, make it a rule to take them two or three times a week, by which they remove the causes that produce disease, preserve their health, and keep off the infirmities of age, retaining, in a surprising degree, all the energy, vigour, vivacity, and cheerfulness of their youthful days. They should be kept in every family as a remedy in case of sudden illness, for, by their prompt administration, cholera morbus, cramps, spasms, fevers, apoplexy, and other alarming complaints, which too often prove fatal, may be speedily cured or prevented.—Prepared only by J. W. STIRLING, Chemist, 86, High Street, Whitechapel, in Boxes at 1s½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each, and may be had of all the principal Medicine Venders in the kingdom.

phia.—Know all persons to whom these presents shall come, that I, Olliberl Robertson, Esq., his Britannic Majesty's Consul, do hereby certify that R. Warton, Esq. Inglis, Esq., another of the signers, and that he is a person of great respectability, and that I heard him express his unqualified approbation of the effects of Oldridge's Balm in restoring his hair. Given under my hand and seal of office, at the City of Philadelphia, Dec. 29, 1823.

(Signed) GILBERT ROBERTSON.

Oldridge, No. 1, Wellington-street, Strand, where the Balm is sold, price 3s. 6d., 6s., and 11s. per bottle.—N.B. The Public are requested to be on their guard against counterfeits. Extract from a letter from a Naval Officer —"I can with justice say that there was no such convenient piece of furniture on board my ship, being, from its construction, doubly useful in quality of a standing couch by day, and a swinging cot in bad or birching weather; it moreover occupies less space in a cabin than the ordinary hair-sofas, and, being exceedingly light and portable, is easy to be handled in shifting or taking on shore. My daughter's answered extremely well in travelling after her arrival in India. In fine, it is the best constructed thing of the sort I have ever met with." Royal Artillery.—A detachment of invalided men has landed from the Numa transport, from the Isle of Ascension. Serj. Tewin, 4th batt., has met with an accident in the course of duty, and is in hospital, and it is feared he must suffer the amputation of his leg. A source of complaint has arisen from the men's "Tommies" being served out hot. This we are aware certainly adds to the baker's weight but depreciates the soldier's, and is contrary to the regulations. The next point is the man being furnished with four pound loaves for four days. At the examination of the pensioners by Surgeon Fogo, only two were found serviceable.

For the last fortnight there have been arrivals almost daily at the Tower of the arms, accoutrements, and clothing of regiments of militia, with the exception of sixteen stands of arms and corresponding accoutrements, which are still retained at the head-quarters of each regiment when embodied. The order for these removals, it is said, is preparatory to remodelling the militia under new regulations.

General Order.—"In consequence of a communication from government, the general order of 19th Oct. and 17th Nov. 1835, are cancelled, and officers commanding corps and detachments are desired to refer all applications for military assistance in the collection of tithes or rent, or in the serving of or executing civil process or decrees in original to the Military Secretary, in order that the Major-General commanding may submit them for the consideration of government before the aid required is granted; the usual duplicate to be transmitted at the same time to the Major-General of the district. The officer in his application will state his opinion, grounded on his local knowledge and information, as to the extent of force it would be necessary to employ. There are, however, two cases in which military assistance may be immediately granted for the above purposes without any previous reference: that is, when the requisition for aid proceeds from the sheriff or sub-sheriff of the county, the other is when any competent civil authority calls for military assistance to suppress a riot which may have arisen in the collection of tithes or rent, or in the serving or execution of civil process or decrees, at which riot is actually going on at the time. By command of the Major-General commanding, George D'Aguilar, Deputy Adjutant-General."

A motion is to be made in the House of Commons for a return for the last twenty years of all officers of the army dismissed or cashiered by sentence of Court-martial, similar to that made the last session by Sir Edward Codrington relative to the navy.

Lord Hill's order, prohibiting officers and soldiers from attending Orange Lodges, is understood to apply only to that portion of the army which is on actual service, and does not include officers not liable to the provisions of the mutiny act, or to be brought to a Court-martial for disobedience of orders. The Duke of Gordon being Colonel of the Fusilier Guards, has felt it necessary to retire from the institution.

The Lords of the Treasury have ordered that the race horse duty should not be enforced in respect to horses used by the yeomanry cavalry.

The following students entered the Military College, Sandhurst, last month:—Capt. Napier, 46th; Capt. Gordon, 35th; Lieut. Symonds, 74th; and Capt. Harvey, late Lt. Dragoons.

PORTSMOUTH, Feb. 12.—(From our own Correspondent.) The Portsmouth and United States packet-ship St. James, Lt. Sebor, arrived at Spithead on Monday evening in 19 days from New York, bringing papers containing the second message to Congress of the President of the United States, relative to the differences between that country and France; which were immediately forwarded to London by express. The Capt. had not heard if the Pantaloon had got out, or if Congress had taken any steps in consequence of Gen. Jeck. son's recommendation. The Mastiff was released from quarantine on Tuesday, and went into harbour to be paid off, but on Thursday orders arrived for her to proceed to Chatham, and she will sail thither to-morrew. The H.M. sloop Satellite, Com. Smart, arrived from S. America on Tuesday with a freight of about 300,000 dollars on merchants' accounts. She left Rio on the 6th Dec. The Dublin was the only ship in the port with Sir G. Hamond's flag. On her passage from Rio to Babia the Satellite captured a slaver, with 245 slaves on board, and having put a Prize-Master and crew on board sent her to Rio. The Satellite left Pernambuco on the 7th Jan., and had a quick passage of 28 days to England. Mr. Curtis, Mid., and about 20 or 30 seamen and marines, late of the Challenger, came passengers. The Satellite sailed on Thursday to Plymouth to be paid off. The Strathfieldsay has shipped 200 convicts from the York and Leviathan hulks for conveyance to Sydney; she will sail so soon as the weather moderates. The Scout arrived this afternoon from Chatham. It is expected the Melville (reported to be ready on the 25th inst.) will be ordered to take on board her lower-deck guns, and have her full complement of seamen and marines. There are not yet any orders about the Vanguard, Pembroke, Benbow, Pique, or Madagascar. Ships in port—Britannia, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Mastiff, Romney, Parmelia transport, and Cap. Lyon's yacht, the Mischief, which arrived from the Mediterranean on Tuesday.

The General Evans sloop will sail from Portsmouth for Santander on Saturday with 120 recruits for the Spanish Auxiliary Force; some have been collected at Portsmouth, the others were brought round from London by the Zephyr steamer.

SHEERNESS, Feb. 12.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Tuesday 9—The Scout, 18, Capt. Craige, sailed for the Cape of Good Hope. The Black Prince, 74, went out of the basin, having had her masts taken out, and was towed to her moorings by the Government steamer. The Express, packet, Lieut. Croke, has been converted into a brig, and looks extremely well. Mr. Clark, Gunner of H.M.S. Tremendous, lying in the Medway, was unfortunately drowned this week, alongside his ship, by falling overboard from a small boat.

PLYMOUTH, Feb. 11.—Implacable, 74, was docked on Thursday. Diligence naval transport, arrived here from one of the eastern yards on Thursday, with stores for the yard and Pembroke. She took on board jury-gear for the vessel building there. Tortoise arrived on Saturday from Falmouth, and sailed the next day with volunteer seamen for the Melville at Portsmouth. Camel lighter arrived on Saturday from Falmouth, and sailed again on Tuesday with stores for the ships in the Tagus. Pluto was released from quarantine on Saturday, and came into harbour the same day to be repaired. She will take out the next mail to Malta. Phœnix steamer arrived on Tuesday from the north coast of Spain, and anchored in Barnpool. Stag, being completed by the yard, hauled off on Tuesday alongside the Captain hulk. Speedy cutter arrived on Friday from Sheerness. In Barnpool—Royal Adelaide, Harpy, Pluto, Diligence and Prince Regent transports, and Phœnix steamer. At the Island—Speedy.

NAVAL PRIZE MONEY.—The Gazette of Friday contains a proclamation directing that the Captains or Commanders of ships of war who make the seizure shall have one-eighth part of the whole prize, and that the remainder shall be distributed into shares according to a scale embracing seven classes, from Lieutenants down to volunteers and boys of the second class, who are to have one-third of a share each.

The Buffalo store-ship is fitted for the reception of 200 emigrants; of that number accommodation has been provided for 15 respectable families, and the remainder for the labouring classes. She is also fitted to accommodate a crew of marines and sailors, to the number of 110 men; and should she not ultimately be required for the purpose of conveying settlers to the new colony of South Australia, which is very likely to prove the fact, her fittings are so beautifully arranged for the conveyance of troops, that few, if any vessels employed on that service are to be found so admirably adapted as the Buffalo in every particular. She is now removed from the basin to the hulk on the west side of the harbour at Portsmouth, and will not be wanted these two months.

The Scout, 16, fitted out at the eastward for the Cape of Good Hope, has called at Portsmouth to take on board supernumerary marines and boys for the men of war on that station.

Mr. William Roy (1824), Assist.-Surg. R.N., has been appointed to that situation on board the Howe at Sheerness, the situation he held, as Assist.-Surg. of Sheerness dock-yard being abolished.

The Numa transport, Lieut. Howe, agent, is discharging her stores at Woolwich which she brought from South America and Ascension, and, when completed, will repair to Deptford to fit for other service. The Mary, at Deptford, is taking in recruits for Bermuda, and will proceed to Cork this week, on her way out.

Several of the ships in ordinary at the various ports have been condemned, and will be broken up in the ensuing summer.

The following Midshipmen passed for Lieutenants at the Naval College on Tuesday last:—Peter Cracroft, late Stag; Aug. Fred. J. Bowen, Briton; Peter Astle Scott, Thunderer; Thos. Geo. Drake, Volage; Ross Moore Floud, Canopus; Hay E. S. Winthorp, Melville; Chas. Spencer Norman, late Stag; John W. Dorville, Canopus; Sam. Hoskins Derriman, Confiance; R. John St. Aubyn, Excellent; Hon. J. W. S. Spencer, late Stag; Frederick Howard Vyse, late Challenger; Belfield Woollcombe, Thunder; Thos. Moyes Tapley, Pickle; Abdelhamid Effendi, an Egyptian, Castor.

The Queen Regent of Spain has given the Grand Cross of Charles III. to Capt. Lord John Hay, for his services in command of the British squadron on the North Coast of Spain. The last British naval officer who received this honour was Lord Exmouth.

The Comet st.-v. has hoisted a pendant under the command of Sec. Master Wright. She has been hauled out of the basin into the river at Woolwich, and is nearly ready for sea. Spitfire st.-v., Lieut. Kennedy, left Woolwich on Thursday, to take out the next mail to Malta. Investigator, surveying vessel, has been hauled into a dry dock for repairs. The shipwrights are on board repairing the quarter-deck of the Fairy, surveying vessel, but she still lays out in the river. Swift (new barque), packet service, has been rigged and fitted ready for service, and is expected shortly to be commissioned. Erebus, now lying at Chatham, it is supposed will be commissioned by Com. Belcher, as a barge was sent from Woolwich with his instruments and luggage.

East India Intelligence.

JEYPOOR.—We have late private intelligence from a correspondent at this place, by the Hugh Lindsay steamer, which left Bombay 10th Nov., by which it appears that Jotha Ram is in custody of the government Agent Alves. It seems that suspicion had only very lately attached to the ex-minister, because the queen-mother, who was known to be favourable to him, had appeared very anxious to find out the instigaters of the late murderous attack. It is now confidently believed that she was far from being ignorant of what was going on, so much so, that it is expected, from what has been discovered, that she will be removed from Jeypoor to Benares, and that a Political Agent will be appointed to take charge of the young Prince and the country during his minority. A letter was found on one of the accused parties with two lines written by Jotha Ram himself, which completely implicated him in the affair. Capt. Ludlow was in consequence ordered off with 50 irregular horsemen to endeavour to seize him, they made a night march of 35 miles through a deluge of rain which lasted 7 hours, and coming by surprise to the place of the ex-minister's encampment, Capt. Ludlow, having posted his men, entered his tent at once, and before he could recollect himself on rising from his couch, made him prisoner with several of his party, and safely returned with them to the Residency a service which was deemed very important. It had been clearly proved that four of the instigators undertook each to procure a man with a sword to use against the British party on the 4th June, from which it is manifest it was quite a chance who suffered. The suddenness of the seizure of the last assailant by Capt. Ludlow gave the others time to pause, and they then gave a false impression as to what had taken place, with a view of getting the mob to follow and murder poor Blake. He remained behind only a few minutes to give orders relative to the safe custody of the assassin, to which he owed his death, by that time Capt. Ludlow had hurried Major Alves far away from the scene, from an apprehension that he might bleed to death ere he could be got to the Residency, and obtain medical aid.

Our reports, via Calcutta, from Jeypoor have been of late somewhat contradictory. It seems now, however, to be understood that the ultimatum of our government has been at last given in by Col. Alves to the Jeypoor Durbar. We are told that Col. Alves withheld this energetic document from the treacherous Durbar for upwards of a month. We cannot pretend to say what the terms proposed by government are, but it is understood that the most ample atonement has been demanded, and it is very generally believed that such atonement will not be made by the Durbar, in which case we conclude the country will be taken quiet possession of by our forces, and retained, at all events, during the minority of the Rajah.—Central Free Press, Sept. 19.

We think that the previous paragraph sufficiently explains the apparent vacillating policy of Colonel Alves. The cavalry and infantry regiments now about to move on relief together with the 11th Dragoons and Cameronians, will form a force more than adequate for the conquest of that country.

The Hurkaru announces that orders have been sent for the execution of Shumshoodeen.

On the night of 5th Sept. the native brig Stree Jugadeeswara Swamy, was totally wrecked about 8 miles to the north of Bimlipatam. All on board perished except one Lascar. There were 42 persons in all on board, including Ens. Chas. Jas. Hoseason, 30th Madras N.I., and 4 native servants who embarked for Calcutta from Vizagapatam on the preceding Wednesday. Mr. Hoseason recently arrived out in the Elphinstone.—Madras Gazette.

In an action of crim. con., Grant v. Beatson, at Allahabad, the Hurkaru observes, it is so disgraceful to the parties concerned, that we have thought it right to hold up their names to universal shame. The plaintiff (the son of Col. Grant) was nonsuited in the Sessions Judge's ...tchery (where the case had been carried from the ...ajulary) on 16th Sept., and that Mr. Grant intends ...aling against Mr. Dunsmure's decisinn.

It is proposed to abolish the Allahabad Custom ...use, and make Mirzapore a grand station.

We learn that Sir John Awdry had a narrnw escape ...t July, a punkah (heavy enough to require six men to ...ry) having fallen on his head while trying a prisoner.

Murow.—An unfortunate accident lately occurred to ...s Beck, of the 68th. He had gone on a visit to the ...terfalls near this, and while passing one of them, fell ...n it, and was never seen again. His companion, Lieut. ...rwood, narrnwly escaped sharing a similar fate. He ...o fell at the same place with Mr. Beck, but succeeded ...extricating himself, and escaping with some severe ...ises.

Dr. Malcolmson, 19th Bo. N.I., is to be tried, as ...ncipal, for the murder of Capt. Urquhart, and Major ...alker and Lieut. M'Dermott as accessaries. From in...rmation conveyed in the Bengal Hurkaru, it would ...ear that a Court of Inquest had been held by Col. ...iltshire, which returned a verdict that Capt. Urquhart ...d been killed by a pistol-shot fired by some person ...known, and further investigation was likely to be ...de. The accessaries are admitted meanwhile to bail, ...t Dr. Malcolmson has been kept in confinement.

EXTRAORDINARY ACCIDENT.—HIGH PRESSURE.

One of his Majesty's occasional mail-carts was very unusually delayed after starting on Thursday last, and, while a sight of the yard, met with a serious accident. Besides the letter bags and valuable property generally sent by such conveyances, there was a heavy load of diamonds, of first quality, as well as a few inferior, outside and in; one bloody, and one light passenger, and a well-bred cur, carefully packed, and everything prepared for the journey. At the appointed hour, however, one of the stable-keepers was missing; as it was supposed, he had been keeping bad company, and, quite contrary to order, had slept out all night, and the other required to rest. And then a troublesome sort of a book-keeper in the concern, created a disturbance, and the top-sawyer of the drivers in the quill department took his part and blustered, and insisted that the coach should stop for some baggage of theirs. The coachman and guard whipped round to the head-master's for orders; he nodded 'twas all right, go on, and they touched their hat, as in duty bound, after an old custom, now grown out of fashion, and made a fair start down the road, carrying on full speed! Whether the head master took offence or altered his mind nobody can tell, but he called through his silent speaking machine; the coach came back, took a turn round the yard in decentish style, so as to put their heads the right way, end stopped. The inside passengers, as well as the out, were astonished, but very properly did not move from their places, and just had time enough to wash their mouths out. The driver took another look at his way-bill, and filled up the short interval of his time by reading aloud last dying speech of one of his Majesty's Commissioners, and so extract from an old Act of Parliament, "Anno vicesimo secundo Georgii Secundi Regis," when up came another partner in the same employ, who drives one of the heavy coaches, and, without any ceremony or fellow feeling, bundled the coachman and guard, whip and all, off the coach, and stuck up in front an incompetent cutter, and, in place of the guard, on acting dickey. The poor old driver, who had been, off and on, six or seven and twenty years in the service, and had a capital character from his last master, without any mittimus was sent to coventry; and, having nothing to do, and, excepting a bit of tobacco, very little to live upon, is content to wear his few old clothes out and chaw his quid.—Ex Levant Journal, 31st Dec.

REGIMENTAL BANDS.

Sir,—I was pleased to observe in your paper of the 22d Aug. last, No. 134, that "Bands of regiments are in future to be managed by Committees, instead of the practice adopted in some corps of allowing Commandents to be the sole managers of the money of others." There could hardly emanate from the Horse Guards a better order; and I sincerely trust that, not the band fund alone, but the mess, poor, or such other funds as may now or hereafter have their being in regiments, may also be placed under such superintendance, limiting such Committees to small expenditures. Where large sums are to be expended, the whole corps of officers should, by a majority of votes, be alone empowered to lay it out, for the following reason:—Regiments returning from India, the Mediterranean, or the West Indias, may, during their service abroad, have pursued a saving system, for the purpose (and very properly) of placing their mess, band, &c., on a respectable footing on their return to England. The Commanding Officer, from vanity or some other less worthy intention, mars the original object;—he may, for instance, proceed to London, and patronise some particular tradesmen; he sends a supply (according to his own taste) of mess furniture or band instruments to the regiment; he may or he may not have made a good selection,—it matters little; the very circumstance of his having taken the liberty (I cannot call it less) of spending "the money of others" on his own judgment and responsibility (which, when too late, officers are unwilling openly to protest against) creates unpleasant discussions, and dissatisfaction continues to be often afterwards expressed, so long as the transaction is borne in remembrance. A contrary line of proceeding would be advisable. We will suppose a regiment just returned home with money at its disposal; a meeting of all the officers is called, the state of the funds and the necessities are made known (the former, by-the-bye, should never be kept secret), the object for which the officers are called together is fully and patiently discussed; the majority decide; Committees of taste are voted in, the tradesmen are fixed upon, and the articles required are ordered, and when they arrive all parties are satisfied.

The expense to which officers are put requires some attention should be paid to their wishes and opinions, and that their money should be laid out in such a manner as will at least satisfy the majority, seems to me to be but fair and reasonable. This or some such arrangement will not only prove highly satisfactory to every corps of officers, but, by placing it out of the power of all Commanding Officers (I hope there are few) who imagine themselves all powerful and at liberty to apply the funds according to their whim or fancy, will tend to keep them in the enjoyment of that respect from the officers under their command which every reflecting and sensible Commanding Officer ought to value. You, Mr. Editor, are hardly aware how much grumbling has from time to time taken place amongst Regimental Officers at the lavish expenditure of Regimental Funds by some Commandants who fancy that their will and pleasure alone should be consulted. How ridiculous it must appear for a Commanding Officer, who has not ear enough to distinguish "God save the King" from "Paddy O'Rafferty," to undertake to be a judge of a musical instrument or of a piece of music; still there are a few such, and it is to them I partly address myself. The yearly subscriptions to the Band Fund amount to about 222*l.* 9*s.*; in India, to 271*l.* 13*s.*, or thereabouts, as will appear by the accompanying memorandum; the savings from which, during a residence abroad for the number of years regiments are now obliged to serve, cannot but amount to a large sum, particularly when we take into consideration the entrance fees of officers on appointment (twenty days' pay of their rank to the band, thirty days' to the mess), and that of officers on promotion in the corps (the same number of days, being the difference of pay between the rank promoted from to that promoted to), calls for a watchful eye over its expenditure. After our amiable Commander-in-Chief shall have issued the order which your paper already quoted speaks of, he would confer an additional boon on the Service (and I hope he will take it into his gracious consideration) by amending the order which limits the number of Band men to one Serjeant and fourteen privates. This number is at any time too few, but more particularly in tropical climates, where deaths are more frequent than at home, and where, from the limited number of men so employed, the death of two or three of the leading instruments, annihilates the band; in proof of which, I need only remark, in how very few instances have regiments returned from the West or East Indies with anything like a good band. When officers pay such heavy subscriptions, it is but natural they should like to have something for their money. Good music cannot be produced by twelve musicians (some may be ill) and three time-beaters. Witness the splendid bands of foreign corps,—fifty in some are not considered too many; thirty would satisfy me. I will here show you bands as they are, and bands as I think they ought to be:—

Whether there are fifteen men or thirty men in the band, the difference in point of expense is very trifling, and not more than the subscriptions will meet.

Now, to provide for the additional fifteen men which I have propose should be added to the band, I would take two drummers from the Grenadiers, one bugler from the light companies of regts., and the six men allowed by a very recent regulation to the depot—making nine, and I would add six boys. The six men at the depot cannot be taught an instrument away from the Band-Master; the fund will not allow of two Band-Masters. In proposing an increased number of men to the band, I do believe I shall not have the whole of the Army with me; but I will, if possible, gain over those whom I fear most (the old Martinet who neither cares for music or anything bordering on show), by proposing that the whole of the band should take one tour of duty in the week, which, on the score of relieving their comrades, will set aside the only objection to an increase of the present number to thirty, that I am aware of.

As all regiments and all companies of regiments not light are expected to understand the Light Infantry drill, and to be prepared to act as light troops, when required, every drummer ought to be furnished with a bugle in addition to his drum, the drummer being able to sound all the regimental calls, as well as the Light Infantry sounds, will be gaining a decided advantage over the present system; in fact, a drummer, to be of use, ought to play the fife, bugle, and drum, by note, and not by ear, as too many do, and until he can do this well, he should not be considered an educated drummer.

COAST GUARD SERVICE. (Letter 2.)

Sir,—The motives which induced the Treasury to place the Coast Guard appointments at the disposal of the Admiralty were twofold; first, economy, and secondly, as the honour and integrity of Naval officers could be relied on the revenue would be increased. These were motives which did credit to the Navy, but the Treasury could not, and did not, exact of the Admiralty that they should instantly degrade their officers by giving them appointments as they then stood and still stand. Had the Horse Guards been applied to for Serjeants to fill those appointments, the request would not have been complied with, without a material alteration of the situation, and the soldier would at least have had the full immunities of the place secured to him.

The idea of a Naval Lieutenant being appointed under the Merchantman cognomen of "Chief Officer" to some half dozen rheumatic Custom-house officers, ci-devant tailors, tinkers, &c., carries something so truly ridiculous upon the face of it, that it is beyond my power to restrain my risible faculties when I think of it.* But, although involuntarily laugh, I nevertheless feel most acutely the demerited indignity offered to my profession—a profession I feel proud in being a member of, and I frequently ask myself whether the Navy be indeed the right arm of the country?—whether England owes anything of her prosperity, happiness, and glory to her sons of the ocean? And if, as will be universally admitted, the Navy swept the seas of every enemy, leading our brave brethren of the sister service into those glorious triumphs which have given the world its present peace and tranquillity, then, Sir, I ask by what perversion of justice is she on all occasions humiliated and degraded, so oppressed and neglected?

* "If I be not ashamed of my soldiers, I'm a soused gurnet."

Let us now revert to the duties of our Lieutenant "sitter" with his Lance Corporal's command. He has to steer the best boat of the station when she goes afloat; in station his undoubtable heroes along the proportion of Coast assigned him to guard, generally a distance of five miles; then to remain up all and every night to patrol the beach to keep his men awake; to write the journal of the station, and then to read it to his men, in order that they may, if they please, tell him he has inserted a falsehood, and cavil with him upon a little difference of opinion. Bah!—to keep the store of the station; to conduct all correspondence; to drill his awkward squad at small arms; to walk over the station frequently in the day-time; to see that all be right; and lastly, though not leastly, to turn out at the head of his crew, sword in hand, as a guard of honour (a guard of honour indeed!) to receive Captain Bowles or Commander Samuel Sparshott, whenever either of them may choose to visit his station.

For all this he is entitled to the munificent pay of ten SHILLINGS PER DIEM!!! not quite so much, perhaps, as a journeyman tailor would expect for mending a Coast Guardsman's inexpressibles. And, again, deducting for a residence, which the Board of Customs usually find, (in many instances a paltry cottage containing four or five rooms,) for which they charge 9*l.* a-year rent, it will be seen that he gets about 6*d.* per annum, that is, provided he never gets a single day on leave of absence; for if he does, his paltry pittance of pay is immediately stopped. In no other department of the State, nor, indeed, in any other branch of the Customs, I believe, however well paid for far less fatiguing and harassing duties, is such a niggardly and iniquitous system pursued; neither is it in ships of war or in regiments; nor was it in the late Coast Blockade Service. Query—Is any portion of the high salaries of the Comptroller-General, Inspectors-General, their deputies, or the clerks, messengers, porters, labourers, &c. in their several offices, deducted while on leave of absence? Their duties may, on an average, occupy them from two to six hours a day, whereas the Lieutenant "sitter" can seldom or never consider himself exempt from his onerous duty one single hour out of the four-and-twenty, Sundays and public holidays inclusive. I think I may venture to answer my own question by a simple negative.

The chief boatman is paid at the rate of 64*l.* 15*s.* a-year, out of which he has to pay a rent of 5*l.* for his cottage, reducing it to 59*l.* 15*s.* The boatmen get 5*l.* a-year less, paying the same rent. So you see, Sir, the Naval officer is reduced almost to an equality, in point of pay, with his chief boatman, whilst the common boatman gets only about 10*l.* per annum less than his Lieutenant and Commanding Officer.

There is one class of officers, however, in this service, who are well paid and well equipped, and who have a pretty easy, and pleasant duty to perform; yet this class is universally acknowledged to be the most useless in it. I allude to those men who were originally called Riding Officers, but on the revised system (revised, indeed! 'tis high time, I think, that it was re-revised) Mounted Guard. They are divided into three classes, viz. Serjeants, Corporals, and Privates, and, in society, have the same rank that non-commissioned officers of a similar denomination would have in a regiment, with about the same appearance to keep up: there are generally three or four of them in a district, and, by the regulations of the service, are under the immediate command of the Chief Officer of the stations; but, so far as my knowledge upon the subject goes, this wholesome rule is, with few exceptions, abrogated by the Inspecting Commander of the district, who generally takes one of them as his clerk or orderly. Employing one as an orderly, however, is far more excusable than placing him in the situation of clerk, which the Comptroller-General ought, and no doubt would, if he was aware of such an abuse of power, immediately put a decided stop to, and for these two simple reasons;—first, he thereby becomes acquainted with all the secrets of the service, by having access to official correspondence of the most confidential nature, and from a knowledge of which, for the true interests of the service, he ought to be kept, because, unless he be, in every sense of the words, an extremely trustworthy man, the smugglers (and I have known instances of the fact) become acquainted, not only with the orders to the Commanding Officers of stations on shore, but what is still worse, with those under which the Commanders of the revenue cruisers proceed to sea. I can vouch for the truth of this, for I have seen such orders in the hand-writing of these men, which it was the boundden duty of the Inspecting Commander only to write as well as to sign. Add to this the lamentable fact that the feelings of the Lieutenants are often unnecessarily wounded by receiving, in the hand-writing of the very man, probably, under his command, copies of any reproof or admonition which the Board, whether justly or unjustly, may think proper to bestow on him, instead of his being kept in entire ignorance of the existence of such documents, the originals only of which ought to be forwarded to the Lieutenant for his perusal and signature.

This is rather a longer digression than I intended, so we will now come to the second reason, which is, the insubordination of most of these men, particularly when so employed, and which must naturally be expected to arise out of such a system, because they are cunning enough to know that the officers who so improperly and unwisely employ them, cannot make a complaint to the Board for any misconduct or breaches of discipline which they may from time to guilty of, for fears of their giving them the retort uncourteous for making them do that which, by the rules of the Service, is a task it is not intended they should execute; besides which, they in most, if not all cases, fancy themselves, when thus employed by the Inspecting Commanders, so completely independent of the control of their actual Commanding Officer, as not only to treat his orders with derision, by questioning his authority to give them, but his person with contempt, by withholding from him those unpaid marks of respect which all well-regulated services enjoin should be paid by the inferior to the superior; and the toleration of such a breach of wholesome discipline I hold to be most unpardonable, but it exists in this enormous service to a very serious extent in the class of men to which I am now alluding, and which, if not checked in time by the strong arm of superior authority, will tend to break down what remains of order and regularity in it.

The real duty assigned to these men, is to patrol the cross-roads branching from the Coast; but they are under no efficient check, for they patrol on horseback, while their Commanding Officer has to tramp on foot, and when once they have received their orders for the night from him, they may then plod their way, reckless alike of smugglers and command, and either spend their time in a public house, or otter it away on the most frequented and best road they can find, taking especial care not to be out one half the time he, their Commanding Officer, is expected to be.

Now, Sir, that I have shown the duty of this class to be comparatively, if not superlatively, easy, allow me to state to you how they are paid, from which you will at once perceive the gross injustice done to other parties.

The Serjeant gets 7*s.* per day, with 2*s.* additional for forage [illegible]; 127*l.* 15*s.* a-year, the Corporal 4*s.* 6*d.*, and the Private 6*s.*, with the same allowance each for forage. The Government finds them horses, saddlery, and pays Veterinary Surgeons' and Farriers' bills and the taxes

By way of illustrating my argument, I will place in juxtaposition the pay and allowances of these men and the Lieutenant "sitter," their Commanding Officer.

| Rank. | Pay. Per Day. | Pay. Per Year. | Horses. |
| | s. d. | £ s. d. | |
| Lieutenant Royal Navy, alias Captain in the Army. | 4 0 | 73 0 0 | NONE. |
| Serjeant, Mounted Guard. | 7 0 | 127 15 0 | One, With Saddlery, &c. |
| Corporal, Mounted Guard. | 6 0 | 118 12 6 | One, With Saddlery, &c. |
| Private, Mounted Guard. | 6 0 | 109 10 0 | One, With Saddlery, &c. |

Compare, Sir, these allowances and the respective duties of the parties, and say whether there is anything like JUSTICE in the case. "No!" I think I hear you indignantly exclaim, "the injustice is as manifest as the whole system is ruinously absurd." But, next in order, let me describe who were the men brought into this corps on the revised system. They were generally soldiers—men who had the Horse Guards to look to their advantage—men whose services were not to be obtained unless a sufficient guarantee was given that they should not be lowered in their position, nor put to apparently onerous duties without a commensurate reward. It is a notorious fact that, immediately on the introduction of soldiers into this service, the condition of those men who were then styled Riding Officers was materially bettered, and not, as in the case of the Lieut. "sitter," reduced, and it was the imperative duty of the then Admiralty to have followed the liberal example of the Horse Guards, by elevating the situation to the naval and military rank of the individual who accepted it, and not to degrade him to the level of the situation as it then existed and still exists. I hope, however, through your instrumentality and able co-operation, to see better days and brighter prospects dawn upon our gallant sons of the ocean, who have embarked in the service I am commenting on with a laudable desire, in these piping times of peace, to do something for themselves and their families rather than remain in inglorious idleness and inactivity.

I think I have clearly demonstrated that the position the Serjeant, Corporal, or Private of the Mounted Guard is enabled to maintain by his excellent pay and allowances is infinitely superior to that of his Commanding Officer; his appointment is therefore naturally looked upon by himself as by far the best of the two. Hence the comparative ease and independence of his situation makes him impatient of control, and he consequently does not feel disposed to pay that deference and respect to his Lieut. Commanding which, at all events, the difference of rank alone would seem to suggest as proper. It is, however, no contradiction of human nature for the vulgar, illiterate, and uneducated inferior, to look down with a species of contempt upon his ill-paid superior; and as it is an acknowledged truism that no valet ever yet regarded his master as a hero, so this class of well-paid gentlemen, knowing as they do the scanty emoluments but important duties of the walking Lieutenants, conceive no very exalted opinion of them, for which reason they come more frequently in collision with him than any other of his men, and are, consequently, oftener complained of, and most justly too, although, unfortunately for the good of the Service, these fellows get off with impunity, for the Inspecting Commander to whom the complaint may be made, is, for the reasons I have already stated, too frequently in their power.

A THEME FOR THE NAVAL SCHOOL OF ARCHITECTURE.

"Sages their solemn een may steek,
An' raise a philosophic reek,
An' physically causes seek,
In clime an' season;
But tell me Whiskey's name in Greek I'll tell the reason."

BURNS.

SIR,—In my text, I have given the gentlemen of the Naval School of Architecture a problem which, in their great profundity of scientific learning, they can doubtless solve. When they do so, I will present them with a plain axiom for ship-building, and a means of conforming a vessel's proportions to meet the different degrees of resistence she may encounter under the various changes of weather, and the interruption of a plane surface caused by the action of the elements. This I intend doing upon a peculiar expanding and collapsing principle, for which I have procured a patent, which admits of the free application of whalebone in lieu of timber (thereby avoiding all danger of dry rot), securing a great elasticity, and by using elephant skin, or a substitute composed of prepared gunpowder sewed in the whalebone ribs, after the manner of a blanket on a Welsh coracle, I propose to effect one of the greatest improvements in ship-building which has been designed in any age or country.

It would have been long ere the scientifics had hit upon a design of this kind, the advantages of which must at once be admitted as incalculable; indeed it is cause of complai that the "School" are more apt to take up the suggestio of others than to originate ideas of their own. Be this it may, having published my intention in your Gaet whereat it will be read by all the world, I hold them at d fiance on this point; and if they dare to meddle with m design until I have explained it in detail, they shall he of it.

I thank you, Sir, for putting me right respecting the su pression of the School of Naval Architecture. I am al glad to learn that it was effected under the naval admini tration of Lord Melville, who, after giving it twenty year trial, must have doubtless become convinced of its inutilit and the injustice it entailed upon those persons who had be educated at the expense of their parents, and served the apprenticeship as shipwrights in the regular manner. It said the gentlemen who have received an handsome an edu cation and such lucrative appointments (I mean compare with their superiors in every respect in the Army, Navy, or many public departments), are now bent upon the formatio of a "Board of Construction"—"heaven save the mark and mightily aggrieved because the office of Surveyor the Navy was not bestowed upon one of their body, whe Sir Robert Seppings was removed; of course such men Roberts, Blake, Hewkes, Peake, Long, and Fincham (tha owe instructor in ship-building I believe), were to be disr garded and passed over; besides, the assistant builders en foremen, many of whom have proved themselves theoret cally, scientifically, and, above all, practically superior the most gifted members of the School, to say nothing Dr. Inman,

Who, in mathematical acquirements, is second to no man,
And teaches his pupils to measure the distance between a chimney pot and the star Aldeboran;
And wins for Whig economy, and Mr. Hume's tot-ology, profess that he does not care a —— Having gained his knowledge of "construction" by observin the meandering of a feather on the river Cam,
And afterwards designed vessels with properties most uncommo
Which require to be pressed over 19 degrees by the wind befo they will go on;
And whatever may be said with regard to their utility,
Are admitted on all hands to be very deficient in stability.

And all these (even their masters) are to be sacrificed tha interests of those called par excellence the Schoo I see what they would be at; they want a return to th Box system, round and long, whereby they secure th advantages of that sedative rolling or rocking which suppose they imbibed from the cradle; however, by th adoption of the sow belly, the barrel mould, this ma be carried too far; and it is no joke to roll gunne under, after a gale, in the Bay of Biscay. This will pr bably be an objection to the moulds they may recommen when their Board of Construction is formed (doubtle they wish they may get it); but ingenuity can overcon anything, if properly applied, and that the round and lon system may not be ruined for want of a remedy, here it i When a good rolling bout is anticipated, shift your boa from the quarter davits to the main yard-arms; then, b lowering the yard, and securing it in any approved positio you may regulate the amount of the swing [a], either by sea sation of the Captain's stomach (providing there are n ladies on board, if so, of course they should have the pr ference), or any person suffering from sea-sickness, a with this provision you may build your ships as round i the bottom and as narrow as you please, and follow out th ex-Surveyor's theory "that length gives stability" to i full extent. As every original suggestion is worthy of name, I call the above "rolling made easy." I have ma nother useful hints to give these gentlemen for study, bu aware of the old proverb that too much pudding, &c., shall rest for a week.

And so, Sir, it appears we are going to have a motion f e Parliamentary Committee to inquire into the merits ship-building! This is assuredly the age of humbug, b of all the humbugs in this humbugging world surely th humbug of applying the name of science to the art of shi building, is the most humbugging. Tristram, my frien let us see your effusions oftener. Thou hast truly oraok Japit to pieces; and if I do not give these would-be scienti Dock-yard gentlemen a touch of my office, then my nam is not

PROSPECT OF THE TIMES.

SIR,—Let men say as they will, the portentous speech his Majesty has trumpeted to the British Empire "prep rations for war!" for though from his allies he receives intimation of the continued desire to cultivate a friendly lationship, yet it is only from the generality of other foreig powers that similar expressions emanate. And lest a doe be left among us that all foreign powers are not of the sa mind, an increase to our maritime force is announced the same breath as indispensable. That we have been the brink of a crisis, has for some time been evident; b what is our state of preparation? Let the genius of ec nomy answer. Heart-broken veterans, neglected in t halcyon days of peace, to make way for the striplings of f experience, but of high-sounding titles in the absence c umstances of Aristocratic rank; ships in commission, but w in number as compared with those of other powers, and en those few manned with reduced crews; and with all ur vapouring, can boast only of four war steamers, whilst rance (our ally) alone has in readiness twenty-seven of e largest class, and Russia (not our ally) a proportionate umber. But suppose the additional 10,000 men, said to required for the navy, to be forthcoming, a proportionate umber of officers will be in demand, and out of the formidable list on half-pay, how many are there really capable serving? Old age and decrepitude have added to the st of veterables; expatriation to the colonies in search of mployment and bread, has diminished that of the efficients; eglect of merit has transferred a numerous portion to the ercantile service, who are equally unavailable; nor must e forget the probable sensitiveness of those who have been ded to feel that "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick," hilst dragging a weary life through the trammels of a ockpit, ere they attained commissioned rank, altogether orming a diminution of two-thirds at least of the total list f the junior grade of officers. Think you these men will turn? "We may call spirits from the vasty deep,—but ill they come?" Perhaps hesitation may be attended with ismissal; be it so; for will a man surrender a lucrative mployment, to retreat upon a beggarly stipend, especially f he has not qualified for securing a pension to his widow? f a sacrifice on his part must be made, he has had no enouragement to induce him to make it to the detriment of his wn family, and he will give up that, which is least beneficial Neglect and ingratitude are apt to render men callous to all ther interests than those pertaining to self. The would-be atriots, who have taken credit to themselves for husbanding the public purse, by filching the bread from the mouths f the widows and children of their benefactors, the navy, nd sacrificing the hopes of the gallant men whose young lood was dedicated to their country, and that of advanced ife left to stagnate in the pool of neglect, may find the our of retribution nearer at hand than they imagine, and hat the plaudits of the mob, which they have so strenuously ourted, are but ephemeral. In pursuing their own schemes f ambition, at the sacrifice of those to whom they owed the ountry owe their all, under the mask of economy, they have risked the interests of the empire, whilst the navy has been discountenanced by curtailments and denial of promotion, the half-pay list of ex-Lord Chancellors exhibits an xpense of 21,000*l.* a-year, to be distributed between five individuals of that rank, and that of the legal profession generally, numerous instances of dignified titles of recent creation; honours and pecuniary rewards heaped upon one class, whilst the sinews of economy crop unsparingly the just rights of another. During the peace, officers have contrived to exist, but in the event of war, when provisions and clothing will be doubled in price, what is to become of such among them as shall be unemployed—the aged, the worn out? The servants on board wages are far better off in the allowances made them by these very patriotic economy drivers. But, Sir, mistake us not; for amongst the multitudinous sufferers, none are so blind as to impute their disappointments to the Admiralty; for though they have no other power to appeal to, they know well that the reward of merit rests not with them in these days of parliamentary patronage, or the good old time has gone by when the members of the Admiralty Board were the almost only source of professional discrimination for its bestowal. A project has long been spoken of for forming an effective and a non-effective list. The period has now arrived when such a measure should be resorted to, in order to ascertain the actual numbers on whom to rely; and if so, there is little doubt but that a promotion, which has long been prayed for as a boon, will be found absolutely expedient for the actual welfare and necessity of the state; for it requires only to hear the thunder of the first gun (and where will terminate the echo?) on either side, to compel us to complete our force to at least 50 sail of the line (30,000 men), 100 frigates (30,000), and 150 smaller vessels (15,000), requiring 75,000 men. And of officers (besides Admirals), Captains, 150; Commanders, about 100; and (allowing a Lieutenant for every hundred men), 750 Lieutenants. The packet, transport, and other establishments will employ 150 more, and, allowing for sick and casualties on the above number, 100 Lieutenants, will give a total of 1000, which is the utmost number that can be calculated on for service, out of the list of 3000. What then, is the fruit of "economy?" We meddle not with the demonstration project of garrisoning our forts, as contemplated, with the halt, the maimed, and purblind, but will ask, what are we advanced in our naval demonstrators, with their rigging over their masthead? Not one half hour; for that rigging must be lifted before any officers would venture to proceed to sea, and it will be an eventual loss of time. Don't play the school-boy; if ships be wanted, man them.

CAPTAIN ROUS AND THE PIQUE.

SIR,—Some days since, I accidentally noticed in your gazette of 13th Dec. a letter relative to the accident which occurred to H.M.S. Pique, in the Straits of Belle Isle, and subscribed An Old Navigator. Having been for the last sixteen years constantly employed in the North American trade, and using that passage frequently, I feel that I am justified in stating what I know of its utility and safety, and in doing which I can set your correspondent right in one or two instances where his zeal for the Service has led him too far. He terms Captain Rous's having adopted this passage as a species of "experimental philosophy." I can assure you and him that it is the practice of many of the regular traders to Canada to endeavour to take this passage in coming home in the summer, and going out on their voyages in the fall of the year, more particularly those from Scotland, who are constant in the trade, in consequence of its being so much the shorter in point of distance, and their having the advantage of the inset to the Gulf of St. Lawrence, of which more hereafter. Your informant states that, "with wind and current in her favour, it was to be expected the Pique must go on shore." In this point, he is most egregiously mistaken. The current invariably sets through the Straits of Belle Isle into the Gulf of St. Lawrence, I should say at the rate of about two miles an hour instead of four the opposite way, excepting when strong westerly winds prevail, in which case it is completely checked. This I know from my personal observation, and to back it I have memorandums which I have obtained at various times from his Majesty's Surveyors now employed on that coast, showing that the water in the Straits is generally at about 42 degrees Farhenheit, many degrees colder than the St. Lawrence, thus clearly proving that the water comes from the northward. The superfluous waters of that river pass out between Cape Ray and Cape Breton Island, but principally by the Gut of Canso; and of this the navigator soon becomes aware if caught with a strong westerly wind when bound up the Gulf. Thus I have answered one of his three objections. Islands of ice or ice-bergs are to be met with on all parts of the Grand Bank of Newfoundland, and at almost all seasons of the year; but the Straits lying to the northward are much less frequented by the fogs, and at no time are they so dense as on the banks, therefore that danger is more easily avoided. The only possible objection I can discover to the general use of that passage during the summer, is the want of soundings in coming from the eastward, but that, with a good chronometer, is of no moment, the land being very bold. Your correspondent would wish us to suppose that had the Pique taken the passage between Cape Ray and St. Paul's, it being eighteen leagues wide, she would have been all right; but he does not say the wind was S.S.W. or thereabouts, and that the ship was close in with Point St. John, Newfoundland, when she bore up, thus rendering it a matter of some difficulty the taking advantage of the route he so strongly advocates, which, by-the-bye, is not, in point of fact, so well surveyed as the other. For instance, Cape Breton, in most charts, is laid down six miles incorrect in longitude, and the Bird and Magdalene Islands fifteen, whereas the Straits are allowed to be sufficiently correct for common purposes of navigation, Cook and Lane's surveys having been since examined and approved by Lieut. Bullock, an eminent surveyor. As to ships never using these waters, at least 70 sail of fine vessels belonging to Jersey, France, and Newfoundland, pass the summer there, besides about 100 sail of large American schooners in the season for the cod-fishing. Your correspondent would lead us to suppose, from what he states of the comparative loss necessarily attending the navigation of the two channels, that the Straits were indeed fearful to attempt; but surely an English frigate may take a passage where a French one of her own class and two schooners can cruise to protect their trade. I have one more remark, to make. It is my opinion the current taking that ship on the starboard bow, as it must have done, bore her to the northward of her course; did a current exist, as has been stated by your correspondent, the ship could not have been placed where she was. With respect to the variation of the compass, he does not appear, in his extensive knowledge of this coast, to have noticed the great change in variation, and the local attraction at different points, or indeed that there was any. T. H.

MARITIME OFFICERS OF THE EAST INDIA COMPANY'S SERVICE.

Is it not passing strange, Sir, the East India Company should take such infinite pains to continue at variance with their constituent body? like petulant children who have lost their cake, they bestow vengeance upon their best friends, and obstinately refuse to be comforted. The last General Court on 3d inst. gave to them a golden opportunity for reconciliation, and it is much to be deplored they had not the moral courage to accept it. The word had passed their lips; an appeal to their conviction and a probe to their feelings were alike in vain; they have previously "determined not to alter one iota of the minute before the Court." Every candid mind, unacquainted with the true merits of the question, would naturally infer that these sapient gentlemen, acting ministerially as trustees of the funds, and kingly as guardians of the honour and dignity of the East India Company, whose character has hitherto been ennobled by virtuous practice, were on this occasion governed solely by a love of justice. Alas! will their conduct throughout this compensation scheme warrant such conclusion? for what purpose did they send in an estimate of 1,500,000*l.* to the Board of Controul if 800,000*l.* were alone to be required? why, at this time, have they gone aside from the usual practice when a ballot has been demanded? the same reason is applicable to both,—to mislead; and both are equally at variance with the truth.

They state, they "deprecate the measure as tending manifestly to extend the compensation;" the assertion is contrary to fact. In the very estimate alluded to, 200,000*l.* was an item set apart for "special cases;" the framers and movers of the original compensation plan in Aug. 1834, Sir Charles Forbes, Mr. Weeding, Mr. Sweet, and other honourable gentlemen, have declared it was the spirit and intention of that scheme to admit "special cases," the evidence of Lord Glenelg and Mr. Melville before a Committee of the House of Commons declared "special cases" might and ought to be entertained, as also said the unanimous resolutions of one branch of the legislature. Will any man believe the people of India will have to contribute one grain of rice towards the debts due to these officers? Do the Directors believe it themselves? no! Why then urge it? to mislead. But then they "owe a duty to the great body of the proprietors." How do they perform it? in violation of their recorded votes, a majority of 248 in Aug. 1834, which, in strict fairness, ought to govern the right now asked under the third resolution then passed; by a total disregard of the repeated majorities of their deliberative and legislative body, do they not seek rather to mislead the proprietors, that inconsistency may be recorded against them? which would follow if they were to have these ill-used gentlemen in the minority on Wednesday next. Some proprietor may ask, would it not have been better if these gentlemen had received the Directors' offer? let me ask, could gentlemen receive charity to a few for justice to all? Ten officers of comparatively short service are the only ones who could have partaken of such extorted benevolence, while the remaining claimants are men "advanced in life, having served from 20 to 30 years; they are possessed of means sufficient to place them beyond the degrading need of beggary, but, consequently, without the reach of this proffered boon. I must not intrude, Sir, any more on your time and space than hoping the proprietors will not allow themselves, by special pleading unworthy a great a body, to be entrapped into an act of inconsistency that would be recorded against them did they allow these injured officers to be placed in a minority on Wednesday next. Their claims undo the Act as far as any that have been compensated. AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.

THE DECLARATION INSTEAD OF AN OATH.

SIR,—It rejoices me to find that your talented correspondent Philotheorus has made the amende honorable as regards the question of oaths. As one whose opinion generally, I might almost say uniformly, coincide with those of Philotheorus, I hasten to express my regret that I should have been led to write so uncourteously as I did on this subject, in reply to his remarks; but as an officer who has ever been taught to value honour more dearly even than life itself, I was, I confess, stung to the quick at the instant and hence wrote in the manner complained of, but which I now with pleasure atone for and recal. ## NAVAL POLICE ESTABLISHMENT.

SIR,—I can positively assert that the highest state of discipline and comfort exists in the Naval Police in every establishment from Pembroke to Woolwich inclusive, and the comfort of the men so much attended to that their wants are oftener anticipated than expressed. The Director taken for a Naval Captain or Commander by your correspondent the M.P. &c. &c., is a Lieutenant as honourable as "Tom Bowling," and deserves two straps in reality; he has received the thanks of four successive Admiralties for his great exertions in his present situation. As regards the two Directors in Mufti dress, and the total denial of fires at the Dock and Victualling Yards' Police Gate Guard Rooms it is only at Deptford such exists, and the heads of those departments there can best explain the cause. I can only say, in real truth, there

> "Keen blows the wind,
> And piercing is the cold."

In my situation, I very often visit all these establishments, and speak from actual acquaintance with all the Police Directors, and my own personal observation.

To Readers and Correspondents.

"A Naval Officer" should have given his name and address, and even then we should have expunged from the copy of his letter all the abuse he has levelled against one of our Correspondents. We believe we have some knowledge of the "Naval Officer."—"An Inhabitant of Chatham" should authenticate his statement respecting Colonel Cuyler.—"A Friend to the Navy," "Trombone," "A Master R.N. Employed," "A Friend to the Naval Service," and others, whose favours are this week omitted, shall have early attention.—"Cuinicus" may be assured we will not neglect him; but subjects of comparatively minor importance, or of a private character, must give precedence to those of general public interest.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1836.

The happiness which we felt in announcing, in our last number, the intended increase of our Navy, has, as we were assured it would be, been re-echoed throughout the kingdom with corresponding delight. Every Englishman who has the welfare of his country warmly at heart, must indeed rejoice to find that this great bulwark of our national defence is to be maintained henceforward on a scale equal at least to that of other States; whereas, at this moment, it does not, we believe, amount to the half of this extent; for, whilst we have, at this time even, but NINE sail of the line actually manned and in every way ready and equipped for war, (namely, the Caledonia, the Thunderer, the Malabar, the Canopus, the Rodney, the Russell, the Revenge, the Edinburgh, and the Hastings,) the RUSSIANS have above twenty, if reports be correct, and the FRENCH nearly the same number, besides a proportion of frigates much greater than ours! Under these circumstances, it has become evident that our Naval force must be augmented, if we longer seek to maintain that superiority on the ocean which it has ever been our pride and our glory to uphold. That our able naval rulers have always taken this view of the case, we sincerely believe; but the miserable system of economy which has been forced on Ministers by those cutting and paring legislators, whom it has been our misfortune to see possessing so much influence in the Senate, has alone prevented this measure being carried into execution at an earlier period. At length, however, the eyes of the country are opened to the real situation in which we should have been placed had a war suddenly burst upon us; for, as it has been truly observed by a contemporary journal, the Courier, a foreign force of 50,000 men might have been landed in England during the last summer without our being able to make any effectual opposition at sea to their descent upon our coasts! No doubt the invaders would have been destroyed after they had reached our shores, and signal vengeance inflicted in return; but still the fact is, as has been represented, that we had not a disposable naval force at command to have stopped the progress of an enemy on its way to our coasts. This ought never to occur, and we confidently trust will never happen again. The demonstrations of other States make it imperiously necessary that our Navy should be kept in the ascendant; for, as it has been well observed as regards other powers—"Quiconque peut nous faire du mal, veut ou voudra nous en faire." In order, then, to preserve peace, we should always be prepared for war; this is the surest guarantee for the attainment of this object.

We were much pleased to find the Duke of WELLINGTON declaring, in the debate on the Address, "that he regretted the Navy of this country had been reduced;" and the Duke of LEINSTER, in moving it, observed "that he was persuaded their Lordships would agree with him in the necessity of keeping up that force which had so long been the pride and honour of the nation." In the House of Commons, the same patriotic feelings were manifested. Lord JOHN RUSSELL said—"England, a confessedly great maritime power, ought not, in the present hour of maritime improvement, to allow her Navy to become inferior to those of the other States of Europe. This, he was sure, all must admit to be a wise, sound, and unobjectionable principle; it was a principle not implying anything hostile to any Foreign Power, but, at the same time, providing, by proper precautionary measures, that no Power shall be in a situation to insult the British Flag on the supposition that it was not in a situation to uphold its honour."

A more just or statesman-like view of this important question it is impossible to conceive; and with the Noble Secretary for the Home Department we will repeat, that the Navy of England ought for ever to be maintained in that efficiency and readiness for service which will impress on surrounding nations that they must not and dare not offer an insult to Great Britain with impunity.

As soon as the Navy Estimates are voted, several line-of-battle ships will be commissioned; and as they have been some time since brought forward for demonstration, they will be equipped and manned early in the Spring. It is reported that a combined Squadron of Observation, composed of from sixteen to twenty sail of the line of English and French ships will cruize together; and we are of opinion that the Summer will not pass over without some demonstration which shall have the effect of reducing Russia to her proper position, and securing the future independence of Turkey. Great competition exists for the command of the Vanguard, 80, (built on the principle of Captain Symonds,) which will be one of the first ships commissioned: we have heard many Officers named, but reports of Captains Bouverie and Sir A. Maitland are the most current, and it is generally supposed that one of them will obtain the appointment.

There will be an equal number of ships brought forward at Portsmouth and Plymouth. The Daily Papers have published the names of four, two of which (the Cornwall and Windsor) are incorrect, as the first is a frigate, and no ship of the latter name is in existence, the old Windsor Castle being a depot. We presume the Cornwallis, 74, and Minden, 74, are meant. The Dock-yards are all in a bustle, and assume the appearance of activity usual in time of war.

THE appointment of Commander-in-Chief at Madras is now vacant from the resignation of Lieutenant-General Sir Robert O'Callaghan, and we earnestly hope that the qualifications we dwelt upon in some of our late papers as being requisite for so peculiar a command, will meet with due consideration.

The situation is undoubtedly of great importance and we trust that the welfare of a whole army will not, in the present instance, be sacrificed to individual interest.

The points that will demand the attention of th new Commander-in-Chief of the Madras Army ar too numerous to be detailed, but each branch re quires being thoroughly looked into, and, with th means of either doing much good or much harm t the service, we earnestly pray that the appoint ment will be made more with reference to i interests than has hitherto been shown.

If an Officer is appointed, who has never serve in any high command in India, it is hoped that h will be gifted with a proper degree of discrimin ting enquiry and unwarped judgment, so as to se through the machinations that will beset him, in sure an early acquaintance with the customs of th service, and an impartial decision in the variou questions that will be submitted to him. We ma not, however, without hope that the appointmen will be conferred on that old soldier and expe rienced officer, Major-General Sir John Doveton His distinguished services and long residence i India have combined to give him more experienc and a greater knowledge of the army, its Sepoy and the inhabitants generally, than any othe person, and if the East India Directors are reall solicitous for the welfare of their own army, an to reward their own Officers, they will not lose th present opportunity of evincing that feeling for i by claiming from the Board of Control and Hors Guards this situation in favour of their ow service.

We are also informed, that Sir Frederick Ada has resigned the Government of Madras. Of the two appointments surely one will be given to a able and judicious Officer of the Indian Army.

DISCLAIMING party spirit and politics, it ha ever been our principle to consider all sub jects coming under our notice, more especiall those connected with the Army and Navy, in th impartial manner the public have a right to expe from our avowed profession of independence With these sentiments, and anxious for the pro perity of the United Service, we have never bee tated to point out any measures that we deeme essential for their benefit, or to animadvert upo and condemn all such as have appeared to us o an opposite tendency. We have repeatedly ex posed existing evils, and our readers may be as sured that, regardless of "either side of th house," we shall continue our exertions to direc public attention to the correction of whatever abuses may come under our observation.

Having always been convinced that the Arm required a Reform, we have been the medium of s veral plans for amendments in its organisation an constitution, but some of these, although in many par unobjectionable, have probably, because they woul have deprived the authorities of a great portio of patronage, been disregarded or looked upon a impracticable. A momentary glance at the Hors Guards will suffice to prove the rationality of ou opinions. Refer, for instance, to the list of Gene ral Officers at Head-Quarters, in January, 181 during the most active period of the war, and will be found that at present double the number ha employed there, some having been regular ill annuitants for nearly forty years, and allowed t remain notwithstanding the recommendation of Parliamentary Committee that a periodical chang should take place in the General Staff of th Army.

We have been partly led to these reflections b an able article on Military abuses in the Four

Number of the London Review, founded upon the Parliamentary Report on Army and Navy Appointments; and although, on some points, we cannot go quite so far as our contemporary, yet we earnestly recommend the perusal of it, not only to our military friends in general, but to every member of the Senate. They will there find some astounding facts, and agree with us in the necessity of a salutary reform in the administration, organisation, and constitution of the Army. The paper relates chiefly to the Foot Guards and Cavalry, but at present, we have only space to extract some of the observations on the former, and shall keep the Cavalry en reserve for a future occasion. As for ourselves, we feel every disposition to admire and respect the Foot Guards; their valour and good conduct has always been conspicuous; and we are willing to concede to them every possible privilege that does not interfere with the rights of other corps, but we are bound to confess that we cannot advocate the conferring upon them undue advantages, to the great injury and grievance of the rest of the Army.

"The first is the privilege enjoyed by the Captains of companies in the Guards, in taking rank as Lieutenant-Colonels in the army. Promotion above the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel being by seniority alone, the consequence of this privilege is, that the seven battalions of Foot Guards contribute to the list of General Officers more than half the number that is contributed by the Line, although consisting of one hundred and six battalions.

"The second point in which unjust favour is shown to the Guards is that of station. Of the seven battalions, five are always in or about London, one in Windsor, and lately Dublin has been permanently favoured with one; indeed, on one occasion, mentioned in the former article, Plymouth, one of the best stations of the line, was made a sort of penal settlement for one, a sentence, however, that was revoked after a short term of absence from their usual routine of quarters. Compare these stations with those of the one hundred and six battalions of the line: of which number seventy-five are stationed in the Colonies, and nineteen in Ireland, where they have been generally employed on the most harassing and disagreeable duties; such as collection of tithes—revenue duties—maintenance of order in disturbed districts—from all of which the one battalion of the Guards is exempted, by being confined to Dublin alone.

"Thirdly. The different nature of the services required from the Guards and from the Line is best shown by the fact, that the proportion of casualties in the latter, as compared to the former, is four to one. In the Guards, in fine, it is the same as in civil life; whilst in the Line, from their exposure in all climates and weather, it is four times greater.

"Fourthly. In time of war, the Guards, when sent abroad, are only employed on the most favoured and least disagreeable duties or services.

"Fifthly. The regimental duties of the Officers are quite nominal; those which ought to devolve on them, and which are strictly required of the Officers of the Line, being entirely executed by the non-commissioned Officers. The Officers have, therefore, almost as much leave of absence as they desire, and this is granted without even the form of reference to the Commander-in-Chief's or Adjutant-General's Department.

"Sixthly. The Officer of the Foot Guards, on his removal from the regiment by a brevet promotion to the rank of Major-General, has a larger salary awarded to him than one similarly removed from a regiment of the Line; having from 900*l.* to 400*l.* per annum, according to his regimental rank, whilst the latter has only 300*l.* or 400*l.*, and in some instances only 200*l.*

"Unjust as these distinctions appear, they are not the only advantages enjoyed by this privileged portion of the army. The master grievance is, however, that men so highly favoured as to duties and stations should have that immense bonus conferred upon them as to promotion, by giving to Captains the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel in the army. This is felt throughout the service as a great injustice. Rank, and, what it naturally leads to, command, are the great objects of ambition for officers attached to their profession. Let the two services be put on an equality in this respect, and military men would feel themselves comparatively little injured by the advantages which the Guards enjoy as to station, and attendance at Court.

"We hope some independant member will bring this subject before Parliament in the next session. The abuse is so monstrous, that it can surely require nothing but a public exposure to put an end to a system that cannot be defended. Or if it be held essential to the royal dignity that an officer mounting guard at the Palace of St. James's should have the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, then we say, let the Guards be made altogether a separate service, like the Artillery or Marines, and allow no officer to pass from the guards to the line, nor, of course, to be appointed to the sinecure Colonelcies of regiments of the Line, nor to command them in the field; in short, make them distinct services, each officer enjoying the advantages and disadvantages of the branch he selects. It would then become a matter of indifference to the rest of the army (though still of importance to the public purse), were all Captains in the Foot Guards made Generals, and the Field Officers Field Marshals.

"While exchanges from the Guards into the Line remain open, the advantages which may accrue to the officers of the former service, by obtaining their rank early in life, will be best illustrated by an example, which will also show the great hardship and injustice which the present practice occasions to the old officers of the Line.

"A few years since, a Captain in the Foot Guards, known to be in a state of pecuniary embarrassment, exchanged to half-pay, receiving, of course, a large sum from the person who was appointed in his place. Not long after, he was put on full pay of a regiment in India, where, as we have before stated, each regiment has two Lieutenant-Colonels. He joined as junior regimental Lieutenant-Colonel, although senior in army rank to the other; in the former capacity he of course was not entitled to the command of the regiment. But the European regiments in India are scarcely ever stationed alone; and in this case the regiment being one of a division made up by native troops, his superior army rank placed him immediately in the command of the station. Thus, instead of the mere command of a battalion, he obtained the command of a large military district and several thousand men, with pay and allowances amounting to between 3000 and 4000*l.* per annum—of which command and pay he deprived the senior Lieutenant-Colonel, who fell back to the command of his regiment, bereft of the reward which he might justly consider his right after thirty years service with his corps in all quarters of the globe, whilst the other had served perhaps about half that time, and that period passed chiefly in the manner described.

"The superseding an officer under such circumstances, and depriving him of what he had at least a justifiable expectation of enjoying, by the arbitrary rank obtained through the partiality of the army regulations to that branch of the service, is certainly a great grievance.

Other cases might be brought forward of officers of the Guards appointed not only to high Staff situations in the Colonies, but often to governments—sent out at once to occupy the highest situations, residing therefore only on the most healthy and agreeable spots, not only without having experienced any of the désagrémens to which those who serve in subordinate situations are exposed, but also without having acquired any of that knowledge of the state of our Colonies generally possessed by those who have served in the Line, and which must render the latter, with equal abilities, so much better qualified for such commands.

"Many Members of Parliament must be quite aware of the grievances above above mentioned; many, indeed, have served both in the Line and the Guards. But we cannot wonder that these persons hesitate to expose the system by which they have profited, nor endeavour to effect a reform which would be detrimental to the prospects of their old associates; and indeed any military man voluntarily taking a prominent part in such a matter would be liable to suffer in his own prospects in the army, by rendering himself obnoxious both at the Court and the Horse Guards."

Our attention has been directed to a letter signed Q in a Corner, relating to the conduct of the Governors of the Corporation, generally known as the Merchant Seamen's Fund, and complaining that, although they have had the appropriation of so considerable an income for nearly a century, and many times, in that long interval, acknowledged the necessity for building a Hospital for the reception of worn-out seamen;—to effect which they were empowered by their Charter, held under 20 George II., cap. 38,—they have never taken any steps to erect a Hospital, or assign any building for the reception of such pensioners as were incapable of taking care of themselves, and devoid of relatives who would perform that office.

Our own opinion, as relates to the pensioning seamen, whether from an arbitrary fund or one voluntarily contributed by themselves, is already on record, and we see no reason to alter it. It may be necessary to appropriate a building for the reception of men in the condition above described, but such need not be of the magnitude that is generally supposed, neither do we attach so much importance to that part of the scheme as the originators of the proposed establishment seem to indulge in. We would recommend, that those entitled to pensions, or relief, should receive such in whatever part of the kingdom they choose to reside, and that the system of out-pensions should be encouraged by every possible means, and men never admitted into the Hospital unless they were utterly helpless, and abandoned by their relatives. The wages should in all cases be paid weekly, and if a man lost or squandered his stipend, it would not be of much consequence, and he would take better care another time; whereas the loss of a quarter's salary might prove a very serious matter. Many old seamen, though unfit to go to sea, are capable of eking out a living by performing little jobs about sea-port towns or villages, or with the assistance of the pension, which the contribution to the proposed charity would secure them, can make out a comfortable subsistence.

We shall not at present enter upon the merits of the system of managing the old fund; we are in possession of some information upon this point which, if substantiated, it will be necessary to notice.

In presenting to our readers the first General Order of Sir Henry Fane to the Indian Army we sanguinely believe, that the gallant General will give his best exertions to realise those hopes of amelioration which this document is calculated to excite:—

1. "The Commander-in-Chief desires to accompany the preceding Order [the Order announcing His Excellency's appointment to the command of the Indian Army from the Governor-General in Council, with an assurance to the Armies in India of the high sense which he entertains of the honour conferred upon him by being placed at their head.

2. "Their character, their fame, and the personal happiness of every individual belonging to them, European and Native, will be objects of his anxious solicitude while he continues to command them; and the more he can conduce to either, with conformity to the discharge of his duty, the greater will be the measure of his gratification."

The excellent letter of Numa, which appeared in our last number, on the subject of the Coast Guard Service, and the second of which is this day's impression, will, we hope, be read by each of their Lordships at the Admiralty Board. Facts like these cannot fail of causing a speedy alteration in the present anomalous system, under which, as our correspondent states, many of the Chief Officers are Civilians, the most of them being men of very inferior grades in society, and all holding the same appointments as Lieutenants in the Navy, and with 15*l.* a-year more pay!

It is high time, then, that this Service, which, as the Parliamentary Returns have shown, costs the country above half a million per annum, should be put on a different footing altogether; and we deem it is equally high time that those Captains and Commanders belonging to it who have been the enjoyment of more than the pay of Captains of line-of-battle ships for ten or a dozen years should at length be made to give place to other officers equal pretensions to those favours. Common justice demands this; and justice, in every form, the Navy look for with confidence from the present liberal Board of Admiralty.

We direct attention to a letter in our Gazette of this day respecting the Claims of the Excluded Maritime Officers of the East India Company's Service. The Plea of the Court of Directors for refusing Pensions to these gallant men is, that the money must come out of the pockets of the Proprietors and the People of India; but this we will show to be neither more nor less than delusion and sophistry. Are the Directors and Clerks at the India House so recently appointed as not to be aware that thirty-three per cent. was paid by the Commanders and Officers upon the gross amount of sales of ten from the year 1780 to 1826, when it was reduced to twenty-eight per cent., and which went into the Company's Treasury without the smallest charge or expence, and now forms part of their Commercial Assets? Are they also ignorant that 500*l.* per voyage was paid by each Commander from 1796 to 1813? And farther; do they not well know, that many of these Excluded Officers were engaged in Commodore Dance's action with Admiral Linois, and, but for the gallantry displayed on that occasion, the Company would have been nearly ruined? Such being the case, we must earnestly entreat the Proprietors, who are friends to the just claims of gallant men, to attend the General Court on Wednesday next, and by their votes put this matter to rest.

In giving this day the proceedings of the Court-Martial on Captain Clerke, 77th Foot, we are authorised to state that the concluding portion of Lord Hill's letter, which reflects, contrary to the expressed and mature opinion of the Court, on the motives of Captain Clerke, in the only part of his conduct to which the Court attaches any blame, has been omitted by the Editor of the United Service Journal, in his comments of last month on the trial, solely from respect for the King's name. He has not, therefore, referred to those passages, because a reference must have been, upon the facts and merits of the case, accompanied with a reluctant refutation. If, however, the indiscretion or bad feeling of any parties should provoke further explanation, our esteemed contemporary may be driven to expose, which, we are satisfied, from respect for the corps, and other obvious considerations, he would gladly avoid.

We will go further to state, from our personal knowledge, that the Editor of the United Service Journal did, as well as ourselves, scrupulously abstain from noticing, previous to the promulgation of the sentence, any of the circumstances having reference to this Court-Martial, in order not to prejudge the question, or to attempt to biass opinion in the slightest degree; and he has now simply discharged a customary duty in commenting on the case.

We have received a statement of the case of the Widow and Orphans of Thomas Folkard, who had formerly served in the Royal Navy for ten, and subsequently as a General Postman for twenty years; and, although he has contributed from his earnings, in the latter capacity, nine shillings and twopence a-week to the Post Office Annuity Fund, it appears his family can derive no advantage from so monstrous a deposit. What makes the case the more lamentable is, that of nine children (only one of which is provided for in Greenwich School) four are idiots, and the helpless Widow is left in a state of utter destitution with the youngest child only seven months old. It is a case which appears to us only to require to be made known to induce those charitable and philanthropic individuals, who are ever ready to relieve distress, to direct their bounty to this channel. Subscriptions are advertised to be received at Mess. Grote, and Price and Co., bankers.

NAVAL CLUB OF 1765.

"Then sling the flowing bowl!
Fond hopes arise,
The girls we prize
Shall bless each jovial soul;
The can boys bring,
We'll drink and sing,
While foaming billows roll."

The first meeting, for the present year, of this truly British Association took place on the 6th inst. at the Piazza Coffee House and Tavern, Covent Garden, Admiral Sir Pulteney Malcolm in the Chair. Amongst the officers present, were Admiral Ross Donnelly, (W. R. Vigors, Esq., a guest), Commodore Skipsey, Hon. Capt. Aylmer, Captains Sir John Hill, Chetham, Newcombe, Forbes, Evans, Shepheard, Daly, Savage, Tomkins, Dickinson, Deacon, Higgs, Laws, Montagu, Swinton, W. Warren, Jenkin Jones, M'Arthur Low, R. M. Fowler, T. Sykes, J. Smith, H. Plamridge, D. Foggs, Esq., and others, about thirty-five in number. The first dinner of the season had hitherto been given on the 14th of this month, as the anniversary of the victory gained off Cape St. Vincent, which will be celebrated on Monday next; but it had recently been determined to commence with the celebration of a victory gained on the 6th, by Sir John Duckworth, in the West Indies, on which occasion Sir Pulteney Malcolm had commanded a ship of the line. We particularly notice this adoption of another red letter day, because, in our opinion, the celebration of naval victories must prove important to the nation. That which has been done is that which England, in case of need, will again expect from her Navy. The recollection of the glorious past, we are sorry to admit, goes not far, at the peaceful present, in saving from neglect, or something worse, numbers who "braved the battle and the breeze" for the honour, and, let us whisper, for the safety of this country; but, were it otherwise, sailors would not calculate on chances of their own proper advantage arising from national reminiscence or national gratitude, although they well know themselves to be the objects of national love; and therefore it is that we, regarding the celebration of victories by this social and charitable Club as purely patriotic, exhort its members to let no well-fought day escape their notice, even though the precise anniversary thereof fall not within their ordinary course of social congregation, which lies between February and October. An event may well be celebrated without precise regard to its anniversary, and those who emulate the fame of Nelson will not, after this slight hint, forget, or seem to forget, Tom Tough, who not only

"——— Sailed with noble Howe,
Aye, and fought with valiant Jervis,
But in gallant DUNCAN'S fleet
Sung yeo, heave ho!"

Yielding to these reflections, we have filled the time and space devoted to a notice of this dinner. After mentioning the solemn silent tribute of respect paid to Sir John Duckworth and the departed who fought or fell, all that we could add would, however, chiefly tend to keep in view the known qualities of seamen, and

"Prove that each mate's to his messmate a brother,
But lubberly dogs, aye, or fools can tell that."

Rejoicing, however, in all that has a tendency to show community of interest and of feeling between the Army and Navy, we cannot hide the satisfaction which we experience in knowing that the mention of the Duke of Wellington, as connected with recollections of naval service, was followed by his health being drunk in thunders of applause, equalled only by those which were accorded to that of Lord de Saumarez, and surpassed only by those given, as usual to the health of the King. With regard to the festive preparations and arrangements depending on "mine host," sailors are easily satisfied, but could scarce have ground for dissatisfaction, even were they the most fastidious souls alive; but as contentment reigned, and social converse, sentiment, and song prevailed, in mirthful mood, we close with the fag end of a sea song,

"Then to country and king,
Pale no danger can bring,
Whilst the tars of old England
Sing yeo, heave ho!"

Royal Naval Club, Bond-street.—On Monday last the Hon. Wm. Hare, as an actual member of the Royal Yacht Club, was by ballot unanimously elected an honorary member of this Club. The Earl of Coventry, Joseph Weld, Esq.; James Weld, Esq., and Edward Heneage, Esq. M.P., are the four who immediately preceded Mr. Hare in this ordeal, making the whole number of yachtsmen presented and chosen under the new regulation about thirty, the noble and seamanlike Commodore of the Royal Yacht Squadron included. It is however to be remembered, that actual members of the Yacht Club were always eligible as guests; and we can only regard this system of adoption as an additional mark of respect afforded by the Navy to those truly British feelings and habits of thinking, or acting, out of which the Royal Yacht Club and Squadron sprang into existence, and rapidly approached maturity, as if to proclaim the national belief that Britain is nothing if not maritime. We marvel not when kindred souls unite, but this attraction of affinity is not all that we can find to admire in the Royal Naval Club, for we never can forget that, whilst nearly all the Clubs in town cautiously closed their doors against all but their own members, the Naval Club admitted as guests all distinguished foreigners, all officers of rank in the Naval and Military service of other states, all Field Officers of our own army or in the service of the East India Company, all heads of departments, and the fathers, sons, or brothers of members, without limitation of time or number. The rooms, books, plans, papers, models, charts, maps, and other conveniences not affecting the hospitable or refectorial arrangements of the Club, are open at all times to visiters of any rank or degree in society calling upon, or casually brought by, members of the association; the rule of qualification applying only to introduction which may lead to more close and social intercourse than pertains to mere visits of business, ceremony, or individual friendship. Much to be admired as this liberality is, when compared to any plan of exclusiveness not evidently requisite, we feel assured that were place and all appliances expansive as the hearts that guide our Naval institutions, of the private, social, charitable, and patriotic kind, their merits would be much beyond our praise; but as it is we confidently look to these sodalities for examples of liberal dignified character, and other advantages of a public nature far beyond all which at their foundation could have been contemplated. To this subject we may soon return; but certain we are that Naval Clubs, which to us are objects of lively interest, are with our most gracious Sovereign the subjects of frequent inquiry and of anxious solicitude.

Notwithstanding the angry message of the American President, it is supposed that on the arrival at Washington of the speech of Louis Philippe, and the offered mediation of England, a reconciliation will take place between France and the United States. The latter country would suffer greatly in a Naval war, on account of her extended commerce; and the former will have business for her Navy nearer home ere long, if we may judge by the aspect of the times. For both these reasons no serious apprehensions need be entertained of hostilities between these powerful Maritime states.

In remarking upon the qualifications of an officer desirous of undertaking another expedition for the discovery of a north-west passage, our observations were principally directed to the sea voyage. Since then we have minutely inspected Mr. King's proposal, and find that he accompanied Capt. Back in his late expedition, and, moreover, being of the medical profession, and apparently well acquainted with the manners of the Canadian voyagers, and the means of propitiating the native Indians, he appears to us well qualified to make the attempt with every prospect of success. We therefore trust that the ardour of this enterprising gentleman may not be damped, nor the trial of his purpose denied him from failure to raise the sum of 1000*l.*, which is all he requires to make the attempt; and we have the more confidence that he will succeed, from the knowledge that five of his companions in the last expedition have volunteered to accompany him in any future one. We augur well of the intention also, from the great confidence of success which Mr. King appears to indulge in, and direct the attention of our readers to the Prospectus which he has published detailing the route of his anticipated journey.

Strength of the Army on 7th Jan.—93 Field Officers, 80 Capts., 165 Subalterns, 79 Staff, 119 Drummers, 392 Serjts., 6925 R. and F., making a total of 7784, without including recent recruits.

Extract of a Letter from Vittoria, Jan. 22.—When we marched out of Vittoria on Friday morning, and on towards the castle of Guevara, it was understood a combined attack of the three divisions was to have taken place either upon that day or the following morning—by Espartero and Evans on the flank, and Cordova, with the Spanish and French, on the centre. About two, P. M., Evans, on the right, got engaged, and continued advancing, taking position after position, and keeping up a brisk fire against the enemy's columns (till darkness caused both parties to cease), successful, or apparently so, in what little he attempted. Few of the Legion were engaged. Col. Churchill's regiment behaved well. The cavalry were on the right, and, like most of the artillery, had nothing to do. During this part of the lines Cordova had got engaged to our left, and from the heavy firing, which was kept up for some hours, no doubt execution was done; it ended, however, in his marching back to Vittoria the following day, taking no pains to communicate with Evans, who was left in a very critical position for two days, surrounded by the enemy, with a force, it was said, of thirty battalions. The General had no orders, knew not what to do, I believe, and Cordova having marched back to Vittoria, Evans followed up on Wednesday morning—retreating in beautiful order, scarcely losing a man. The whole affair seems involved in mystery.

"Vittoria, Jan. 29th—I have only time to say that this is very slow work. Cordova and Evans evidently do not pull together. The French Legion have gone to Pampeluna. Cordova has marched, and our own forces have concentrated round Vittoria. We hear that we are to have decorations for our campaign in nubibus, but as neither De Lacey nor Greville seem to have received those promised for relieving St. Sebastian, perhaps 'we children of the mist' may find that our decorations are also in the clouds."

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, 8th Feb.—Lord DUNCANNON stated that the Commissioners appointed to examine the designs for new Houses of Parliament had made their report to his Majesty, who had been pleased to confirm it. The Building Committee was re-appointed.—The LORD CHANCELLOR communicated his Majesty's answer to the address.—On the motion of the LORD CHANCELLOR, returns relative to the state of business in the Court of Chancery were ordered.

TUESDAY, 9th Feb. The Marquis of LONDONDERRY deferred his motion relative to warlike stores sent to Spain till Friday.—The Marquis of SALISBURY moved for a return of the names and residences of gentlemen inserted in different Commissions of the Peace, &c. Ordered.

WEDNESDAY, 10th Feb.—A few petitions were presented, and the report on the Capital Punishments Amendment Bill was received.

THURSDAY, Feb. 11th.—The Earl of ROSEN asked whether Ministers were prepared to furnish the information for which he had applied last session with respect to the sums voted at the recommendation of the Commissioners on Education in Ireland. The Marquis of LANSDOWNE said the return could not be produced, the Commissioners not having prepared any. The Bishop of EXETER contended that the documents were absolutely necessary. Lord PLUNKET defended the conduct of the Government and the Commissioners. The discussion terminated with an expression of dissatisfaction on the part of the Earl of RODEN at the continued refusal of the Government to afford the information he had asked.

FRIDAY, 12th Feb.—The Marquess of LONDONDERRY moved for certain returns connected with the affairs of Spain. Lord MELBOURNE had no objection to the returns. The assistance to the Queen of Spain was distinctly understood to be paid for, and the agreement was to give such assistance as the circumstances of the case required.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 8th Feb.—Lord HOWICK stated, in answer to a question from Mr. Hume, that the order of Lord Hill on the subject of Orange Lodges applied only to officers in actual service. Officers not in full pay were neither subject to the provisions of the Mutiny Act, nor could they be brought to Courts-Martial for the infraction of any order issued by the Com.-in-Chief.—Mr. HUME gave notice that on Friday he would move for a return of all officers not liable to be brought to Courts-Martial, who have been struck out of the Army list.—Lord JOHN RUSSELL moved that a committee be appointed to inquire into the state of agriculture. The motion was agreed to after some conversation.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL obtained leave to bring in a bill to explain and amend the Municipal Corporations Act, and a bill for the more effectual registration of persons entitled to vote in elections of Members of Parliament; Mr. MAULE a bill to authorise the consolidation of trusts in turnpike-roads; and Mr. HUME a bill to regulate the expenses at elections of Members of Parliament, and a bill "for vesting all light-houses on the coast of England in the Trinity-house."

TUESDAY, 9th Feb.—Many petitions for private bills were presented; among them one from Mr. Buckingham for leave to bring in a bill for compensation from the East India Company for injuries sustained.—Lord J. RUSSELL moved for leave to bring in a bill for the commutation of tithes in England and Wales. After some discussion, leave given.—Mr. HOME carried his resolution for discontinuing gratuities to officers of the House, &c.—Mr. Alderman WOOD obtained leave to bring in bills for the better regulation of steam-vessels, cabs, omnibuses, &c.—Mr. HUME brought forward his proposition, that it be an instruction to the committee to reconsider the propriety of removing the site of the Houses of Parliament. It was debated at some length, and strongly resisted; the motion was lost by—ayes, 42; noes, 141.—The Library Committee was re-appointed.

WEDNESDAY, 10th Feb.—The sum of 26,520,550*l.* was voted in Supply to pay off outstanding Exchequer Bills.—On the motion of Mr. EWART, the Committee on arts and manufactures was nominated after some discussion, in the course of which the impartiality of his selection was questioned and defended.

THURSDAY, 11th Feb.—Capt. Dundas, the new member for Devizes, took the oaths and his seat. Col. BRIEN presented a petition from electors of Carlow, praying for inquiry into the circumstances connected with the election of Messrs. Raphael and Vigors. Mr. O'CONNELL was ready to second the motion for a Committee to inquire into his conduct. Mr. HARDY presented a petition from Bath, to the same effect as the petition from Carlow. After considerable discussion it was proposed to postpone the debate till Monday, and that in the meantime the petition should be printed. Mr. O'CONNELL and others proposed Tuesday. Lord STANLEY expressed his astonishment that Mr. O'Connell could desire any delay of the consideration of such serious charges. Lord HOWICK and others spoke, when the business was postponed till Tuesday.

FRIDAY, 12th Feb.—Mr. R. WALLACE inquired whether it was the intention of the Post Office Commissioners to make any alteration in the general management of the Post Office; and, secondly, whether there was any foundation for the alleged irregularities in the packet department. Mr. LABOUCHERE said, it was intended to make some change in regard to the management, and that a report relative to the steam-packet stations would be laid on the table in about three weeks. He also said that there would be no further outlay on the harbour of Portpatrick until a report had been made by the Commissioners.—Mr. HUME alluded to the proceedings of the Duke of Cumberland in avowing that he would continue Grand Master of the Orange Lodges, and to the General Order regarding all who persevered in attending Lodges, and moved for a return of the names of officers not on full pay, or liable to trial by Court-Martial, who have been dismissed the Army for attending Orange Lodges. After some discussion, Lord HOWICK suggested that "a number in each year" should be substituted for "mines," with which alteration the motion was adopted.—The House went into Committee of Supply, and several sums were voted.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—On Saturday last, the whole of the members of the Duke de Broglie's Cabinet tendered their resignations to the King, in consequence of the decision of the preceding evening in the Chamber of Deputies, upon M. Gouin's motion relative to the Five per Cents., when Ministers were left in a minority of two. The whole of the intervening time has been passed in endeavours to compose a new Cabinet from jarring material-. Nothing, up to last night, had been finally settled upon, except that M. Dupin, with his friends M. Passy and M. Sauzet, had been entrusted with the task of forming an Administration.—The Fieschi affair has been proceeded with at considerable length; numerous witnesses were examined, and considerable villany elicited. Judgment will be pronounced in a few days.

SPAIN.—A letter from Onate announces that Don Carlos has declared that, in consequence of the massacre at Barcelona, he should consider the convention with Lord Elliot as annulled, and in future would give no quarter. By letters from Perpignan, dated 1st Feb., it appears positive that the Carlist garrison were compelled to evacuate La Horta, from want of ammunition. The whole of the men, 200, succeeded in joining the division of Burju.

UNITED STATES.—The Address of the American President to Congress, on the subject of the relations between that Government and Government of France, is decidedly a War Message; for it not only recommends the cessation of all friendly intercourse with France, and the immediate preparation for hostilities, but peremptorily refuses to make the acknowledgment required, and alludes, in language that cannot be mistaken, to their right of indemnification by reprisals upon French property.

NAPLES.—Her Majesty the Queen, who had just given birth to an heir to the throne, is dead.

Theatres.

COVENT GARDEN.—The play of The Stranger was performed for the first time this season on Tuesday evening, Miss Helen Faucit sustaining the difficult character of Mrs. Haller. Her performance of this part was nearer perfection than her Belvidera, but by no means equal to her Julia in the Hunchback. In a few of the early scenes of the play she exhibited the most perfect and just conception of the character: the scene in which she relates her story to the Countess was particularly well acted, and received its full tribute of applause. The interview with her husband was highly affecting, and, in part, extremely natural. If Miss Faucit will study to obtain a more perfect mastery over her voice, which is occasionally harsh and discordant, she will surmount the greatest barrier to her future success. The Stranger of Mr. C. Kemble is too well known to our play-going readers to need further notice from us than to state that it was as finished a piece of acting as ever. Mr. Tilbury acquitted himself with considerable ability in the part of Solomon; and his intelligent son found an efficient representative in Vole.—Otway's tragedy of Venice Preserved was played on Wednesday evening at this house, and introduced a Mr. Otway to the audience as Jaffier. This is the gentleman who attempted the part of Hamlet at the Haymarket last season, and took leave to faint in the first act. Mr. Otway may think he is an actor; we beg leave to differ with him, for what his pretensions are to that title we were at a loss to discover from the specimen he gave us on Wednesday evening. In no solitary instance could we discover the slightest pretension on the part of Mr. Otway for the task he undertook, nor can we too much deprecate the folly of those who, contrary to their better judgment, so warmly applauded him, and had the temerity to call for him at the end of the tragedy: this is GUYING a man, and no mistake! Mr. Otway had much better turn his thoughts to some other profession: it is pitiable to see a man laughed at when he fancies he is exhibiting talent of a high order. In the after-piece of The Robber's Wife a Mr. Daly from the Dublin Theatre made his debut as Larry O Gig, and was favourably received.

DRURY LANE.—The new tragedy produced at this house on Wednesday, entitled The Provost of Bruges, has proved a decided hit. It is extremely well written, the poetry at all times pleasing, and occasionally forcible. The three first acts are in our opinion decidedly the best portions of the tragedy—we think the two last rather too melodramatic; but we must not grow too fastidious in times like these. The tragedy is a good one, and one that we think will draw; indeed, we hope so, for the realms of Drury have been too long guided by bit and bridle. We hope to see the old concern jog on as well out of HARNESS as in; should this prove the case, we hope Bunn will slip his foot out of the stirrups, and transfer his Lumber Troop to his friend Yates, to scour the country with during fair time. It is due to the performers to say that they all exerted themselves to the utmost to insure the success of the tragedy. Macready, Worde, Cooper, Meadows, and Miss Tree sustained the most prominent parts in a manner which will add to their already well-earned fame. The tragedy was announced for repetition by Macready with enthusiastic applause.

QUEEN'S.—This theatre of variety has been crowded during the week to witness the performances of the English and French company. Two French vaudevilles, and three English pieces, translations from the French have been the bill of fare. The new piece, called A Lesson in Love, produced on Monday, owes its success to the clever acting of Mr. T. Parry, who enacts the part of a coquette tamer to the very life. The acting of Miss Melville is also entitled to praise. Dr. Millingen's new melodrama, The Moor of Toledo will be produced on Monday.

LORD WILLIAM BENTINCK AND THE INDIAN ARMY.

Whatever may have been the intentions of Lord William Bentinck, the practical results of his measures, whether as Governor-General or Commander-in-Chief, invariably tended to degrade the superior in the estimation of the inferior, and the ill-advised encouragement given in all military cantonments to unfounded complaints against Europeans, when preferred by the lowest and most disreputable of the natives, has worked a change in the minds of the Sepoys, injurious in every respect to the main principle on which the Indian Army is constituted. The high caste soldier, who sees his Commanding Officer brought before a Court of Requests by a sweeper, will feel his esteem for rank and character much shaken; and the knowledge that any Bazar cooly may place his superior in a situation which he looks upon as disgraceful, however fine it may appear to the laws of theoretical justice cannot but effect a serious revolution on a race of beings, whose respect is so dependant upon the possession of power. The excess to which Lord William Bentinck carried the encouragement of complaints from the natives, amounted almost to a premium on perjury, nor would he allow persons convicted of that detestable crime to be punished, "lest others should be deterred from seeking redress." Under such a system can it for an instant be doubted that accusations the most frivolous were trumped up, where the plaintiff was sure of retiring from the contest with impunity. Here again the local authorities were embarrassed by his Lordship's known predilections; they saw the right course, but dared not to pursue it, or to take necessary steps for maintaining the rank and respectability of those who looked to them for protection. Under such a system theft and crime have grown up and flourished in cantonments, where placed beyond the controul of the civil, the inhabitants felt themselves equally free from the exercise of any authority by the military. A Bazar Officer, superintending the details of a community amounting to perhaps twenty thousand souls entrusted with the power of fining to the extent of one rupee! yet unaided by a police, has little chance of checking robberies committed by bands of professional depredators. In numerous instances memorials were forwarded, not only by the Commandants of the stations, but also by the civil power, recommending the appointment of magistrates invested with proper powers, to form and superintend the police of cantonment; but Lord William Bentinck found his time too much occupied to pay attention to their proposition.

However trifling the theorist may consider the complaint relative to the lowering of the European character in the eyes of the natives, there have been men somewhat celebrated for their knowledge of the habits of our Indian subjects, who have (perhaps foolishly) anticipated serious consequences whenever the Government should destroy those ties by which alone the attachment of an Army of so singular a construction, (yet of such vital importance to the maintenance of the British power in India,) is secured to the state. The opinion of Sir John Malcolm is clear and explicit, "we must continue dependant on the fidelity and efficiency of our Native Army for the preservation of India. The European officers are the links by which we must preserve its attachment and maintain its reputation. Their peculiar condition requires favour and support; and it is not too much to affirm, that any means which have a tendency to depress this body of men, will be fatal to our best hopes of preserving our Indian empire." Far different was the view of the subject taken by Lord William Bentinck. From the ill-advised and obnoxious measures introduced by him on his arrival, as Governor-General of India, the feelings of the European officers were highly incensed, and thus his Lordship was led to regard them, not as the links by which our power in India was to be preserved, but as a faction possessing in themselves the materials for accelerating its dissolution. The fears of the Governor-General were much excited, when he found the mischiefs he had committed, nor did he hesitate palming on the Court of Directors the opinion of some Madras Adjutant General that the Bengal Army were on the eve of rebellion, and that it was only by the wisdom of his own measures that the dreaded event was averted. In the minute of the 6th September, 1830, his Lordship says—"The Adjutant-General of the Madras Army, who was at the time at Calcutta described the angry feeling and language so loudly expressed here, and all the signs of the times, to be precisely similar to those which prevailed before the Madras mutiny, and he anticipated a similar explosion. Let it be remarked, that the mutiny did take place at Madras," and his Lordship might have continued—but was never dreamt of in Bengal beyond the walls of Government-house!—not so, however, for he winds up his minute by saying, "I apprehend the possibility of unmilitary and insubordinate language highly discreditable to the character of the Army, which the Government could not overlook, and which might end in conflict between the Government and its officers, that could not fail to be attended with the greatest public inconveniences." Without pausing to consider whether his Lordship evinced any great statesmanlike qualities in risking a rebellion (for such a mutiny of the whole Bengal Army would in point of fact have been, where the Government could not bring as in Europe, a public to oppose the Army) for the sake of effecting a paltry saving, scarcely exceeding a lac of rupees. We proceed to the more important point, as far as the Army is concerned. We see by the foregoing, that his Lordship (although he puts the words in the mouth of a Madras officer) really dreaded a mutiny of the Bengal Army, consequent upon his own "infliction of (supposed) wrong and injustice;"—he felt that if the measures he wished to pursue were persevered in to the extent he contemplated, and a general feeling adverse to the Government obtained possession of the Army, that the executive must always be obliged to concede, even should worse consequences be averted, for in the words of Sir John Malcolm, "we can never expect active support in the hour of danger from the mass of the population of India." A course, nevertheless, was open, by which the danger from the immediate cause might be diminished, viz. by subverting the efficiency of the Native Army, and diminishing what he considered the active element of sedition, by sowing the seeds of discontent and mutual distrust between the officers and the men under their command. To preserve his own rule from the terrors which existed only in his own mind, he hesitated not to adopt a systematic degradation of the European character, to lessen the respect felt by the Natives towards their officers, and to burst the bond which an Elphinston, a Munro, and a Malcolm, have declared to be the real tenure by which the British possessions in India are secured.

The sepoy of the Bengal Army possesses in his character a large quantum of Esprit de Corps; he looks up to his officers with respect, and feels a portion of their reputation reflected back upon himself; the records of the service afford thousands of anecdotes of the deep devotion they have shown to the Government, when led by officers with whom they were acquainted, and whom they regarded as their immediate benefactors; but the policy of Lord William Bentinck was to destroy the feeling of mutual confidence between the soldier and his officer, and to make the former transfer his gratitude to the state. To effect this, the shortest way was to lower the character of the European officer by every possible means, and by withdrawing from him all fictitious support, or the power of protecting those who had hitherto considered themselves dependent on his good offices, show the sepoys how erroneously they worshipped King Log, when their devotions were properly due to King Stork. In loosening the community of interests by which the superior and inferior were bound to each other Lord William hoped to render each party less dangerous to the state, forgetting that at the same time he abstracted that moral union which had enabled them to contend against the greatest privation in the field, and oppose the most obstinate valour to the enemies of British dominion in the East. Could we admit that his Lordship was sincere when he placed upon record, that "the security of our possessions in India must chiefly depend on Military power," and that "the improvement of our Military system is our first and most important care!!" We should feel it at the same time our bounden duty to deprecate the unprincipled remissness shewn by him to this "first and most important duty," while holding the chief Military situation in the Army.

Never was a theorist doomed to meet so many failures as pursued the speculations of Lord William Bentinck, during the period of his sojourn in the East. The vast power he wielded enabled him to effect the partial destruction of the bonds of attachment which subsisted between the officers and men, but something more was requisite to obtain from the sepoys the transfer of that feeling to the immediate head of the Army. Strongly imbued as the native soldier is with the susceptibility of good or bad usage, he must always be immediately dependent on the kind conduct of his Commanding Officer, who has so many opportunities of affording indulgence in the minor details, while the parsimony of the Government withholds any of these major advantages that could work a serious feeling towards them, independent of "the combining link." The abolition of corporal punishment was passed by his Lordship, with a view of obtaining favour in the eyes of the native soldiary, but we cannot discover that they consider it a blessing either to the well-behaved or well-feeling soldier; as a check they felt that the punishment was useful, and so long as it was confined to crimes of a disgraceful nature, (not the penalty of trifling omissions of duty,) they were perfectly indifferent as to whether the penalty remained in their Military code or was erased. In the abolition, the Army has been deprived of a most useful punishment, so long as confined to the peculiar description of crimes to which it was restricted by Lord Combermere; and there is now no effectual method of restraining the depraved, or, by a public example, curbing the bad passions of those men who have as yet forborne to overstep the narrow boundary between temptation and commission. Doubtless his Lordship remembered the annual pilgrimages made by the old Madras sepoys to the pictures of Coote, Wallis, and Meadows, and in imagination contrasting their deeds in the field with his own philanthropic intentions, anticipated the day when a similar compliment would be paid to the great Equestrian statue (to be placed) in the Town Hall of Calcutta. Singular, however, as it may appear, and unfortunately certainly for his Lordship's posthumous fame, the name of Bentinck is almost unknown to natives of the Army, unless as coupled with the reduction of the pay of their officers, and the breach of the long-established rules of the pension establishment.

His Lordship often reminds us of the story told somewhere or other of a person, who, ambitious of a character for philanthropy, established an office for the redressing wrongs gratis, "but, unfortunately, the individuals sustaining the injuries brought complaints against the individual redressing the injuries, for injuries sustained by the redress." So was it in the case of the pension list, some persons complained of the injuries sustained by being invalided, when they considered themselves as still fit for duty; on examination it turned out as they asserted, that they were not completely worn out, and they were ordered to rejoin their corps, but at the same time his Lordship issued an order to the paymasters of native pensions, desiring that whenever he considered a pensioner capable of performing regimental duty, they should return the man, whether he liked it or not, to the service. The moral effect that this last order has had on many old soldiers is likely to work, at no very distant period, an extreme change in the constitution of the service, and fill the ranks with mere hangers on, instead of a class willing to pass a large portion of their lives in the service. The native soldier is, in ninety cases out of an hundred, a small landholder, and looks forward to that period when he will be able to return on a pension to his native village, and close his career amongst his friends and kindred; some there are who enlist for the sake of saving a few rupees by service, and then obtain their discharge, and to increase this last class the new order interfering with the pension establishment, tends. Such a principle, if once established in the minds of those who have hitherto recruited our ranks, will be destructive of that stability on which our military power is based; and the frequent desertions at one period in the Bombay service, fully proves how severely the want of those examples of comfortable retirement were felt, and may be substantiated by the relation of the fact that between the years 1803 and 1805, the desertions at that Presidency equalled the numerical strength of the Army—that they afterwards averaged 2500 men a-year, but that, on the introduction of a more liberal system, the disgraceful practice was so far checked, that the entire annual amount did not reach 300. In the instance of returning men to the service, who had every right to consider themselves clear, and their pensions as a reward for foregone services, there was an absolute injustice that cannot be defended; the state in no way required them further than to effect a paltry saving, of which Lord William Bentinck should have been ashamed, and we can only attribute his conduct to a desire of emulating the Bombay Government in that process from which, as Colonel Aitchison (with anything but the good feeling of a soldier) remarks, by a peculiar screwing, "we then get ten years more service out of him for local duty."

It is improbable that his Lordship was led to adopt a pernicious interference with the Indian pension list, in imitation of the reorganisations of certain British pensioners into veteran battalions, during the Irish agitation of 1821-22; however mean an opinion we may have of his Lordship's abilities, we can hardly suppose him so absolutely incapable of an induction, as to have attempted a parallel between the two cases. In England the military pensioners are divided into two classes, the "Chelsea In-pensioners," and the "Chelsea Out-pensioners," the latter liable to be recalled to serve the state; and from this class was it that the veteran battalions were formed. The in-pensioners have never been interfered with by the Government*

* The In pensioners are not residents within the walls of Chelsea Hospital, but are only borne on the books under that designation.

Literary Notices.

The Portfolio, or a Collection of State Papers, illustrative of the History of our Times. Ridgway and Sons.

This periodical has reached its tenth number, and a more valuable and curious collection of State Papers was never before presented to the public. There are various versions as to the manner in which these documents came into the hands of the Editor, but we are content to find sufficient evidence of the authenticity of many of them:—to the Diplomatist, and to all who take an active interest in political matters, they will prove invaluable. We shall select an article from the last number, headed "Trait of Russian Diplomacy," as likely to interest many of our readers:—

"Turkey wants neither limbs nor hearts; it is a head she wants. The Sultan is all powerful; he can do just what he pleases; that is, he can make himself the centre of national feeling, confidence, and strength; or he can make himself the centre of national antipathy, and the cause of national convulsion and prostration. The degree of influence which Russia can acquire over his mind, the control which she can exercise over his position, is, therefore, the measure of the progress she has made towards the subjugation of Turkey. All external collision has now ceased, all resistance of a public or political nature to the power—that garrisons Silistria—that assembles armies almost within sight of the capital—that has bewitched all Europe—that possesses alone means of access to the sovereign and the government, is of course not to be dreamt of; no news will therefore come henceforward from Turkey. But an incident or two may be worthy of the attention of those who do not conceive the occupation of Constantinople 'un fait accompli.'

"At the commencement of the Ramazan last year, the Russian ambassador announced to the Turkish government, that he had received from the Emperor Russian decorations to be distributed to the Turkish regiments which had formed part of the camp of Unkiar Skelessi; and that his Majesty wished, by this distribution, to impress still more deeply in the memory of the troops, and the Ottoman people, the recollection of that period of fraternity. This distribution of Russian medals to the Turkish troops had been several times before resolved on, but as often abandoned, the period not having arrived when it could be enforced.

"Mark the moment now made choice of for insisting on this distribution. The Ramazan! the period of fasting—of Mussulman sanctification—of relaxation of discipline among the troops, and of supervision over the people—when long vigils and meeting in the streets and coffee-houses facilitate combinations. This is always the epoch in which dissatisfaction foments; and what better mode of leading to insurrection than the forcing, at such a period, by the government itself, this brand of degradation on the Turkish army. The answer to the application for the distribution of the decorations, which was officially made by Boutineff, was for several days evaded, and in the interim the troops were assembled. It was found that they were animated by the most decided spirit of resistance, and that there prevailed among them a general determination not to permit the decorations to be affixed to their breasts. Boutineff pressed his demand in terms still more urgent. A short delay was solicited on the ground of the Ramazan, its religious observances, and pious pre-occupations. These arguments being without effect, the dangers of the moment, and the dispositions of the troops were represented to him, and the apprehensions of the government unfolded in friendly confidence. The implacable minister replied, that it was necessary to overcome resistance, and to contend with danger; that the Emperor would learn with indignation that there was a disinclination on the part of the Turkish ministers to make that use of his present for which he had destined it, and that any delay would be considered by his Majesty as a serious offence. He saw that it was necessary to convince, or intimidate, each of the ministers separately. One evening he invited himself to sup with Achmet Pachs, another evening with the Visier, another with the Seraskier, another with the Kyhaia Bey. He also visited the Reis Effendi, but did not sup with him, because this minister was suffering from indisposition. During eight consecutive nights he visited one or other of the principal personages, using to each the language appropriate to his position; flattering, caressing, and threatening by turns. The road being thus smoothed, he once more peremptorily repeated his demand for the distribution. The government had then only one course to adopt; this was to inspire terror for the purpose of escaping destruction, and to fulfil, with as little danger as possible, the will of the Czar. Those who had most positively and energetically refused to accept the decorations were seized and beheaded; and twenty young men forfeited their lives as an offering to the genius of Russian moderation!

"Do the annals of politics record a more odious act than this? What language possesses terms capable of characterising it? The Ottoman government resisted as long as it was able without declaring itself in open insurrection against the Russians. Placed between the dread of incurring the displeasure of the Emperor, and the danger of an insurrection at home; terror alone could deliver them; it was therefore deemed necessary, on the order of the Russian minister, to call in the aid of the executioner. Such measures are carried into effect by a brilliant, elegant, amiable, and prepossessing diplomatist; how steeled, then, must be the resolution of that merciless system! what may it do—what may it dare, one day, to annihilate in Europe the institutions which are obnoxious to it.

"It was then that conspiracies were spoken of, and that the English fleet was recalled from Malta. There was no conspiracy save that of the Russian minister; no executions but those which were ordered in consequence of his insisting on a distribution, which he was assured could not take place place without that horrible preliminary. There was no executioner but one—the Russian ambassador.

"What must be the feelings with which these events have inspired the troops,—what the dissatisfaction and hatred which the Sultan has drawn down upon himself by these acts? If to-morrow the Russians should attempt to dethrone him, what soldier would expose his breast, or draw his sword in his defence? This unhappy sovereign will be abandoned to his fate, for the crimes of the Emperor, who will one day date a ukase from Constantinople, by the consequences of this and such like crimes.

"Boutineff has in this gained a victory of the first importance—he has succeeded in putting blood between the Sultan and his army, and that at a time when the head of a Mussulman is almost as inviolable in public opinion as the life of a citizen among us is inviolable in the eye of the law. This tragedy has occurred at a moment when such atrocities are not screened from general attention by the rapid movement of public and absorbing events, or by prosperity, which wipes away the stains from absolute power. These unfortunate victims fell in the midst of their countrymen, already excited by alarms, and attentive to the least signal denoting new catastrophes, irritated by suffering, and requiring, as some compensation for the miseries that press upon them, that life at least should be protected against the vicissitudes to which it was formerly exposed. Daoud, Pachn of Bagdad, and Mustapha, Pacha of Scodra, were both taken in arms—the one is honoured with a government, the other gratified with a pension. Times are changed, and the sabre, which now no longer sheds the blood of culprits, of rebels, or of enemies, should at least respect that of servants, unimpeached save for their honest zeal and honourable devotion.

"This fact sufficiently proves that the Russian system is ripening and gaining strength. Whilst Russian diplomacy in the different courts of Europe professes ignorance whenever allusion is made to designs on Constantinople; whilst they are lavish of assurances—of falsehoods—and declarations; here the mine is completed, the inflammable matter is collected, and the moment for lighting the match is the only combination as yet incomplete."

Nautical Economy; or Forecastle Recollections of Events during the last War. By a Sailor politely called Jack Nasty Face. William Robinson.

The intention of the author is evidently to depreciate the Naval Service, to make the seamen discontented with their state, and to narrate incidents of no interest, solely for the purpose of introducing practices which have long been abolished afloat. We are only astonished that the writer could find a publisher. The book is undeserving of any notice. The "Forecastle Recollections" never could have been written by a thorough seaman; they carry with them every evidence as emanating from the mind of "a sea-lawyer," or "Lord Mayor's man." "Jack Nasty Face" must, we opine, have hitherto filled the office of "Jemmy Ducks," or a "Jack in the Dust."

The American in England. 2 vols. R. Bentley.

The Author admits that he "set out with some feeling of animosity towards England," and it is very evident to us that his sentiments have not become more honourable. We should think he had little opportunity of forming any estimate of good English society, but his superficial and generally ignorant views of our national character, his illiberal and anti-English opinions, and disgustingly coarse libels upon the late King, and particularly upon the late Duke of York, can only inspire contempt. We must tell this American, that vulgar and abusive terms, such as "bloated profligate," (applied to our Princes,) "bottle-nose of doughty half-pay officer," and others of a like stamp are not calculated to sell his trashy book in England. We will, however, give it and him the benefit of an extract. After assuring us that, at Covent Garden, "Miss Shireff's LEG convulsed the house with applause," he adds,—

"I have known persons, deliberating about the selection of a theatre for the amusement of the evening, decide for the Olympic, on discovering that Vestris's character would involve the exhibition of her legs. In this way the mere exhibition of her legs is worth some hundred pounds to her annually."

The Naval Waltzes for the Piano-forte, composed, and respectfully dedicated to THE OFFICERS OF H.M.'s

SERVICE, by E. L. G. Published at Leoni Lee's, Albemarle-street.

Whether reeling, waltzing, or "walking the waters," muslin is always uppermost in the mariner's mind, and therefore it is we are glad to find that the blue jackets have at length found a petticoat composer, competent to delight and solace the ear of the sailor. A new set of waltzes, under the above title and telling dedication, has just been published. The composer is said to be a young, and indeed a very young, lady, being only 15 years of age, and the daughter of a distinguished naval officer. We know of no waltzes so peculiarly original, so elegantly melodious, and so strikingly indicative of the pure simplicity of genius, as those which we have now to recommend to the female portion of our professional friends. We predict that the Naval Waltzes, whether afloat or on shore, will be extremely popular, if not take the lead, in the fashionable world.

ALLEGED INSUBORDINATION OF THE JUNIOR RANKS OF THE COMPANY'S ARMY.

I AM a Company's officer, and happening a few days ago to meet an old and experienced one in his Majesty's service, the course of conversation led him to remark, that great insubordination prevailed amongst the junior ranks of the Company's army, as exemplified in the frequent disrespectful appeals from the authority and decisions of commanding officers of corps, stations, and divisions, to that of the Commander-in-Chief.

Without stopping to take into consideration the probability of a man vested with a certain authority being swayed by the notion of an appeal against this, being without any other cause) disrespectful, we will suppose such to be really the case; is it just that they should lie under this sweeping condemnation without a fair and candid examination, and exposition of its possible origin? Let us, therefore, proceed to the examination of this, perhaps, not altogether groundless assertion, with all the deference and respect due to the high authorities and measures, to which, I think, it may be mainly, if not solely, attributed.

We have but too often witnessed different decisions given by the same authorities upon precisely the same points of reference, I will not say from the difference of the influence of the different appealing parties; but such has been, and still is, as far as my observation goes, the opinion that prevails throughout this service. The regulations, too, of our service, from the frequent changes of those who frame them, and consequent ignorance of their application to local or peculiar circumstances, are so constantly changed, so voluminous, and so obscure, and those of one day so diametrically opposed to those of the next, that it is almost a matter of impossibility for any officer to keep them in remembrance, or, in fact, understand what they really are, or are meant to be. Partly, hence, arise the doubts of the correctness of decisions and interpretations by many authorities on points of reference, and, in consequence, appeals. But there is still another cause operating towards this, viz the employment of the due and just authority of commanding officers of regiments, stations, and divisions, but particularly the former. It is hardly going too far to say, that the Commander-in-Chief, or Adjutant-General, as the case may be, appears now to be the immediate commanding officer of every regiment, station, and division. It is the general opinion not only of commanding officers of regiments, stations, and divisions, that their proper authority is curtailed, and for the correctness of this remark I dare venture to appeal to the veteran's own expressed opinion who made the observation regarding the insubordination,—but it is the opinion also of those under them. Such being the case, can any other result ensue than disrespect and contempt for these authorities thus shorn of their due influence? This is, in fact, but the natural and inevitable result; and those who thus legislate for the frailties of human nature should be aware that none other can be expected. Is it reasonable to suppose that inconsistency and contradiction will be referenced merely because emanating from high authority? Or can any government expect that men, and young men too, will respect those placed above them, when they cannot but see that the government itself treats them with distrust, and has deprived them of the due authority which appertained to and made their function respectable? Let us, therefore, fairly consider, and apportion our censure accordingly, that though the evil may exist, its primary cause is to be sought for, and will be found rather in the errors of our rulers than in the dispositions of the men, who are of the same class and country as the officers of his Majesty's army.

But it is thus, without due consideration, we are stigmatized by those who have neither the knowledge nor the experience requisite, or if they had had them, perhaps the inclination for forming an unbiassed judgment.—DEFENSOR.—East India United Service Journal.

In the latter end of 1802, the Audacious, 74, Captain Peard, while returning home from the West Indies, scudding under fore-sail and close reef'd main top-sail, at the rate of twelve knots, with a very heavy sea running, a man fell overboard; the ship was brought to as soon as possible, and Mr. Leverick (one of the Master's Mates) was lowered down in the cutter to endeavour to save the man from a watery grave. The petrel (better known by the Seamen as "Mother Cary's Chickens," which are never seen but in stormy seas, and then in the wake of the ship, are no doubt sent to "look out" as messengers from above) flew to and fro from the boat to the spot where the man had gone down, and when the boat was over it (the crew could have caught the bird with the greatest ease), Mr. Leverick immediately jumped over, dived down, and brought the man up, placing him on the thwart of the boat, and he revived long before they reached the ship. This was the third instance of this gallant and intrepid officer being similarly situated, and happily rescuing a brave fellow from inevitable death. —From Unpublished Naval Recollections.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST INDIA STOCK

LADIES and Gentlemen,—The excluded Maritime Officers are compelled again to appeal to the Proprietors of East India Stock, and in doing so they are relieved from any feeling of doubt or hesitation, as they have only to ask the Proprietors to vindicate their own Resolution, and support decisions to which they have come on so many previous occasions—"That compensation to the Maritime Service is a debt of justice." This claim has been repeatedly sanctioned by the Court of Proprietors, it has been admitted by the late President of the Board of Control, ratified by Act of Parliament, and more recently recognised by a Committee of the House of Commons. Notwithstanding all this, the claim is again resisted by the Directors, and a Ballot is now again demanded on the question.

The excluded Officers appeal with confidence to the Proprietors to support their own decision, to maintain their own consistency, and to do an act of justice to meritorious and injured body. It would not be necessary to add a word, but for the circumstance that a most unusual course has been taken of stating arguments in the demand of a Ballot, viz. That the Resolution to which the General Court had come, after a most deliberate discussion and two Special Meetings on the subject, is deprecated by the Directors in duty to the Proprietors and to the Natives of India!

The only true ground of deprecation is that the Gentlemen composing the executive branch of the East India Company, after being twice outvoted on the subject, should not only be unwilling to defer to the judgment of their fellow Proprietors, but that they should institute an opposition to the declared will of the general body, and that body their own Constituents.

The expression of duty to the Natives of India is calculated to mislead the Judgment of the Proprietors who had not attended the discussions at the General Court. The Compensation sought for by the excluded and suffering Maritime Officers is not to be paid out of the Revenues of India, but from the Commercial Assets of the East India Company, over which the Company retain sufficient power to enable them to make suitable provision for Commercial Officers and Servants, "whose interests may be affected by the discontinuance of the Company's trade." These are the words of the Act of Parliament—the new Charter Act which ratified the General Court's Resolution of the 3rd of May 1833. There is not a pretext, therefore, for opposing the measure on behalf of the Natives of India; and so far as the Proprietors are concerned, they have repeatedly sanctioned the payment.

Upon the former occasion, when a Ballot was demanded, the Proprietors affirmed the vote to their Maritime Officers by a majority of 248 votes. At that time the compensation then under discussion was estimated by the Court of Directors to be the value of 1,500,000*l.* It appears, however, from subsequent estimates that the value will not exceed 750,000*l.*, and what is now asked for, it is believed, will not amount to 100,000*l.*

The measure of relief and justice proposed in the resolution before the Court of Directors has been advocated, and is supported by those who have ever been the warmest friends of the Natives of India; and the excluded Officers feel assured the Proprietors will never believe that the interests of India will be promoted by inflicting injury and injustice on their meritorious English servants. Sure they are that if the intelligent Natives of India could be consulted on the subject, he would be indignant at the thought of being a party opposed to the just claims of the Maritime Officers, whose enterprise and valour in the course of the last war in India saved millions of property in which Native Indian Merchants were largely interested.

Upon all these grounds the excluded Officers rely with confidence upon the support of the Proprietors at the Ballot on Wednesday, the 17th inst.

J. S. SOUTHEAM, Chairman
SAM. REMMINGTON, Deputy.

PROOF OF THE EFFICACY OF

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL.

To A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, Hatton Garden.

GENTLEMEN,—Justice requires me to transmit to you the following account, showing the great use of your Macassar Oil, well known to the Public. In the course of this year I was troubled with a long and lingering fever, which terminated in the total disappearance of the hair of my head: I remained some time totally bald, and not the least appearance of my hair returning, until, most fortunately for me, a bottle of your valuable Oil was put to my hands by a friend; and, to my utter astonishment, in less than a month my hair required cutting, so fast was the vegetation. I feel much satisfaction in having my hair (one of the greatest ornaments of man) once more established to its natural strength, by your valuable composition.

I am, Gentlemen, your obedient Servant,
JAMES EXMOUTH BLACK.

Sierra Leone, Coast of Africa, 21st Sept. 1835.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL prevents Hair from falling off or turning Grey; changes Grey Hair to its original colour; frees it from Scurf; and makes it beautifully soft and curly.

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.

FAMILIES in want of really good Servants of every description, both Male and Female, will decidedly find their interest better consulted, and their object much sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, No. 134, Oxford-street, near Hanover-street, established in 1830, than through the solution of any other method whatever; as Domestics, with good characters, are in waiting to be hired from 10 in 5 o'clock.

Many persons are prejudiced against an Establishment for Hiring Servants; but if the Servant possess a good character, it certainly is perfect nonsense to suppose that it is injured by the readiest method having been taken to procure a Situation.

N.B. It will be particularly advantageous to send for a Prospectus.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Hemorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of: the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly,

The impossibility of pointing out the objects of an Institution such as that now contemplated within the limits of an advertisement, must be obvious to every one. It is sufficient to direct the attention of the public to the eminent success which has attended those of a similar nature on the Coasts of England, Ireland, and the West of Scotland, and to their utility, which has been felt and acknowledged by every one connected with those parts of the country where they have been instituted.

While the inhabitants of the Western Parts of the kingdom have thus taken the lead in establishing and promoting such Institutions, it has, till now, been matter of regret that those of the Eastern division, possessing one of the most splendid estuaries within the narrow seas, have not long since followed their example.

The Meetings of the Club will be so arranged as not to interfere with those of the Northern or Irish Yacht Clubs, but, on the contrary, with a view to ensure their presence and co-operation. The details with regard to these meetings, however, and all other arrangements connected with the institution, as well as of its objects and purposes, will be communicated in printed circulars.

Gentlemen desirous of joining the Club will have the goodness to communicate their intention, by letter, addressed to the Interim-Secretary, at his house, No. 6, Stafford-street, Edinburgh.

Subscription £1. 1s. per annum.

When 200 names are procured, a General Meeting will be called to constitute the Club, after which Members will be admitted by ballot only.

ALEX. HAMILTON, Interim-Secretary.

TO PREVENT FRAUD.

THORN'S POTTED YARMOUTH BLOATERS, for Toast, Biscuits, Sandwiches, and Wine in Pots, 1s. and 2s. each. The high repute and immense sale of this delicate preparation has induced several would-be tradesmen (who not having an idea of their own) to attempt an imposition by labelling a pot exactly like his, thereby to deceive the public and injure him, (having actually applied to his printer for that purpose;) well knowing they cannot prepare the Fish, the receipt being an old family one, and the secret in the curing of the Herring, by which its rancid qualities are destroyed, and it becomes so delicious a relish. It is easily detected by observing his signature, ALEX. THOAN, on the side, and on the top, Proprietor of the celebrated for Fish, Game, Steaks, Wild Fowl, and all Made Dishes, imparting a zest not otherwise acquired—the most economical now in use! In Bottles, 2s. and 4s. each, warranted in all climates. CHOICE OF A SERVANT.

By the Opossum we learn that the Star, previous to the arrival of the former at Nevis, had sailed for Jamaica in company with Cruizer, which had been sent from Barbadoes to assist her. Her mail had been sent to Jamaica for the purpose of being forwarded to Halifax. The Opossum arrived at Barbadoes 31 Jan. where she found Belvidera, Rochfort, and Savage. Renard packet arrived at St. Thomas's 20th Jan. and was expected to sail in about eight days for Falmouth. The Skylark sailed from Rio 18th Dec., leaving there Dublin, Wanderer, and Cockatrice. Nov. 9th—left at Bahia, Actæon. 28th—sailed from Rio, Hornet. 30th—arrived, Cockatrice. Dec. 5th—arrived, Satellite, and sailed 10th for England, via Bahia and Pernambuco, at which date Wanderer arrived. Melville and Quail which sailed from Falmouth together, arrived at Lisbon 7th. Eclipse left in the Tagus Hastings, Pearl, and Tweed. Eclipse brings on freight about 500*l*.

PORTSMOUTH, Feb. 19.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Scout came up to Spithead on Friday evening, as announced in our last publication, but in consequence of a leak under the larboard bow port, it was necessary that she should be taken into dock, which was done yesterday; it appears that while working round from the Downs a link of the shenk painter broke, and the anchor getting adrift struck her side with such force as to gore away the timber, and which was the cause of her leaking. Her repairs will be made good to-morrow; she will then be undocked again, and proceed to the Cape of Good Hope next week. The ridiculous reports respecting her being built of green timber are unworthy of notice. The Mastiff, Lieut. Graves, sailed for Chatham on Saturday. V.-Adm. Sir P. Halkett hoisted his flag in the Melville on Saturday last, but struck it on Wednesday, on getting a week's leave of absence. The Melville was hauled out of the basin this morning. Orders arrived on Saturday for the Bellerophon, a demonstration ship in this harbour, to be got ready for commission. She will be taken in dock for her copper to be cleaned. The defects of the Romney are found to be more extensive than first imagined, and she is in consequence ordered to be paid off. She was taken out of dock yesterday, and is lying alongside the jetty to unrig and return stores. The Comet steamer arrived on Monday from Woolwich, on her way to Ireland to bring over the Lord Lieutenant. She took in coals from the dockyard, and went away the same afternoon. The Pique will be masted this afternoon. She is expected to be the next ship put in commission. Ships in port—Britannia, Melville, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Scout, Romney, Parmelia transport.

MILFORD HAVEN, Feb. 18th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Mr. Rose, Master R.N., has been appointed to the command of the Post-office steam-packet here, vacated by the resignation of Mr. Hallands. The Sylvia cutter, hitherto employed as tender to the Royal Sovereign yacht at this port, being wanted by the Superintendent of Sheerness dockyard, has been ordered there, and yesterday the Goodwill lighter (to replace her here) with hands from the Howe guard-ship, arrived to navigate her round. She is now on shore in the western quarter of Pembroke yard, fitting for the voyage. Wind N.W., blowing strong. The Sylph, one of our Post-office steam packets, on arriving at Waterford last week, was called upon by the agent to Lloyd's to assist the Antæus of London, laden with mahogany, &c., from Honduras to Cork, then in the most imminent danger of being shipwrecked. By dint of great perseverance she was rescued from apparently inevitable destruction. A marine from the Pembroke depot, after having sold his kit, absconded from quarters last week. He borrowed a suit of plain clothes, in which he successfully made his escape. This detachment will parade on the heights adjacent to the dockyard up there on Wednesday next, and fire a feu de joie in honour of her Majesty's birth-day. They will afterwards go through a number of field movements customary on these occasions. The Diligence transport is hourly expected at this port from Plymouth, with jury-masts and gear for the vessels to be launched from Pembroke yard; these are the Dido and Harlequin, both constructed by Capt. Surveyor Symonds, and splendid vessels they certainly are in every sense of the term.

PLYMOUTH, Feb. 18.—Phœnix st.-v., came into harbour on Monday for repair. Satellite arrived here on Sunday from South America, via Portsmouth, where she landed 200,000 dollars, and came up the harbour on Monday to be paid off. Implacable undocked on Tuesday, and the Pluto put in yesterday to be repaired. The Pluto will take out the next Mediterranean mail. Minden, Cornwallis, and Talavera are to be docked to have their coppers cleaned. The masts, yards, rigging, and every other requisite for those ships are to be minutely examined and kept in a perfect state for commissioning. Devon lighter arrived at Pembroke the 9th, after experiencing some very severe weather. She is expected here every day. Diligence transport is loading for Pembroke with stores. Comet st.-v. arrived on Tuesday from the eastward, last from Portsmouth, and started again for Dublin, to attend on the Lord Lieutenant. The apparatus called "the Quicksilver haulers" has been entirely removed. Agincourt went out of dock yesterday evening, after having a thorough repair. Belleisle will be taken into dock this evening. Magpie cutter is to be sent here to be fitted for a surveying vessel. Star packet, which was dismasted on her passage to Halifax, has arrived at Nevis, and left for Jamaica in company with his Majesty's brig Cruizer. In Hamoaze—Royal Adelaide, Phœnix, 10, Satellite, Harpy, Pluto, 10, Diligence, naval transport, Prince Regent transport. At the Island—Speedy.

Lord Amelius Beauclerk will assume the command at Plymouth, as Port-Admiral, on the 4th of next month.

At the Court held on 3rd Feb., at St. James's, the Proclamation for the distribution of Prize-Money arising from the seizure of smugglers and slavers, dated March, 1834, was annulled, and the following is to be scale of distribution in future:—Flag Officers, one sixth of the whole. Captains and Commanders, one eighth of the remainder; or if they be not serving under a Officer, one eighth part of the whole. That the remainder be divided into shares, and distributed as under:—Lieutenants, Field Officers and Captains of Marines Land Forces, Master and Physician of the Fleet, Masters, ten shares each. Subalterns of Marines Land Forces, Secretaries, Chaplains, Surgeons, Pursers, Mates, second Masters, Gunners, Boatswains, Carpenters and first Engineers, six shares each. Assist.-Surgeons, Midshipmen, Master's Assistants, Schoolmasters, Assistant Engineers, Clerks, Masters at-Arms, Coxswains, Quartermasters, Boatswains', Gunners', and Carpenters' Mates, Captains of the forecastle, hold, fore and main tops, Boatswain of launch, sail and rope makers, caulkers, armourers, serjeants, pilots, three shares each. Ships' cooks and Corporals, Captains of the mast and afterguard, yeomen of signals, coxswain of the pinnace, sailmakers, caulkers, armourers' mates, coopers and Corporals of marines, two shares each. Gunners, carpenters, sailmakers, and coxswains crews, seamen gunners, able and ordinary seamen, yeomen of store-room, stokers, privates and fifers of marines above seven years' service, one share each. Cooks' and stewards' mates, barber, pursers', Captains', gun, wardroom, and young gentlemen's stewards, gun, wardroom, young gentlemen's cooks, landsmen, or boys of first class, private and fifers under seven years' service, two thirds of a share each. Volunteers and boys of second class, one third each. When Captains and Commanders share together, Captains to have double the amount of Commanders. Commander doing duty of first Lieutenant, to share as other Commanders. Lieutenants commanding small vessels, when not in company of a Captain or Commander, to share as Captain. Clerk in charge to share as a Purser, unless Purser be in company, when he is to share as a Clerk of Superoumeraries to share in their respective ranks. The proclamation is of great length, but the above is the substance of it, the remainder is mere matter of regulation. By the above the Captain's share is reduced from a to an eighth. All Lieutenants will in future share with Field Officers, if any, and will receive ten times as much as an able seaman, instead of nine times as much the former scale of distribution. The second class is a little increased—Mates and Masters are put into this class. The two next classes are also a little increased.

The Pique, 36, will be recommissioned in a fortnight the Hon. Capt. Rous, as we long since notified; and morning orders have been received at Portsmouth to prepare the Bellerophon, 74, for commission; for which purpose she has been taken into dock.

The Romney, troop ship, requiring large repairs will be paid off, and the Salisbury, 50, fitted for the conveyance of troops.

Vice-Adm. Sir P. Halket hoisted his flag on Saturday last on board the Melville, 74, as Com.-in-Chief in the W. Indies, and on the coast of N. America. As the Melville was in the basin, the customary salute was fired by the Excellent, Capt. Hastings.

The whole of the American squadron in the Mediterranean, quitted that station for America before the accounts came away.

Mr. T. Wilbania, the Secretary to the present Admiral at Portsmouth, will fill the same office at Plymouth, when Adm. Lord A. Beauclerk hoists his flag in April next, as Com.-in-Chief at that port.

On Monday there was a Court of Inquiry at the Coast guard station, Fairhill, Galway, the subject Lieut. Lee, Chief Officer of Ardry district.

The Thames Police Magistrates decided on Tuesday an important point in the case of seamens' wages—viz. that leaving the vessel on its arrival in the port without discharging the cargo, if required by the Master, is a desertion under the act of last session, and forfeits the wages due.

On Monday the Brighton Coast Guard took two smugglers in a boat which contained about 120 tubs of contraband spirits. A fourth man was taken on board a vessel some distance at sea.

We regret to announce the death of Lieut. John Burr, R.N., who had acquired so many honourable distinctions by the heroism which he had on several occasions shown in preserving the lives of others upon the perilous element which his profession called him. When a Midshipman he had the good fortune to save the life of a Dutch seaman whose vessel struck and went to pieces in a heavy gale in Rye Bay, in 1821, for which the King of the Netherlands presented him with a splendid gold medal. In 1822 he jumped overboard from H.M.S. Lively, and saved the life of James Eastgate, a seaman, who fell from the main-mast head, in the Sound, in a gale of wind, for which he received a vote of thanks from the Rl. Humane Society. He also received a medal from the late King of Portugal for services rendered by the boats of the Lively in 18[illegible] and a handsome certificate from Lord Huntingdon, for attempting to save the life of Mr. James de Beaumaret, who fell overboard from the Valorous, off the Havannah, e eight of the 21st of Oct., 1827, and was drowned. He as severely wounded when employed in the Coast Guard rvice, by a pistol ball passing through his right hand.

WOOLWICH DIVISION OF ROYAL MARINES.—Private iller was drummed out a few days ago, pursuant to sen-nce of a Court-Martial; this makes the fourth within a w weeks. Joseph Taylor, Private, has been committed the bench of Magistrates for attempting to steal two great ats from the store. All the female nurses at the hospital ve been discharged, and men appointed to supply their sces.

The Hermes steamer made her passage from Falmouth Cadiz in 5 days and 6 hours against a head wind all e way, her average speed being 8 knots an hour, but equently going 10, and her consumption of fuel only bushels per hour. After waiting 14 hours in Cadiz Bay, e steamed from thence to Gibraltar in 9 hours, arriving the 9th ult. This is an unprecedented passage, and nves the grand policy of the present system of capacious ssels with engines of moderate weight, as the most econo-ical, as well as the most efficacious, mode of performing is work.

Numa transport, Lieut. and Agent Howe is arrived at epiford from Woolwich, and discharging victualling ores, preparatory to her being discharged, or continued r further service. The Numa will proceed very soon to e Mediterranean.

The Waterloo, Lord Lyndoch, and Moffatt, are taken to convey convicts to New South Wales, and will fit at enuloid.

The Sandwich will fit immediately at Deptford to take nres to the West Indies; the Ganges and Iris to Mau-tius; the latter will touch at St. Helena with stores.

Wrecks on the Suffolk coast have been numerous, and in me instances loss of life has occurred.

The Oak packet, which has been a regular trader for veral years between Scarborough and London, was lost on r passage a few days ago. The crew were saved, with e exception of the Mate, Mr. Ditchburn, of Scar-borough.

One of the Midshipmen on board the Jupiter, son of the Director of the Police at Woolwich Dock-yard, has kept a urnal and drawn a chart of the ship's course, which so uch excited the attention of the Hon. Capt. Grey, that he bmitted it to Lord Auckland, who gave his warmest ap-robation, at the same time expressing his meed of praise the precocity of talent at this young gentleman.

The Comet st.-v., Mr. Wright, Com., sailed on Saturday st for Dublin, to be at the disposal of the Lord Lieutenant.

The Spitfire st.-v., Lieut. Kennedy, sailed on Thursday t to the westward, but when off Ramsgate, she broke a rt of her larboard engine called the head bars, the frag-ents of which flew in all directions. The third Engineer ing on duty at the time, he promptly stopped the engines, nd fortunately no accident occurred to any individual. he engines have been inspected by the proper officers at Woolwich dockyard, and no blame is attached to any ty. It is expected the repairs will detain her upwards six weeks.

It is intended to put the Ordinary on a new system, by acing the officers employed therein, and the ships they ccupy, in commission.

The Mastiff is intended to be substituted for the In-estigator, surveying vessel, if the repairs required will not e found too considerable.

All ships engaged to carry convicts to Australia, ill be required (and without any extra charge to the Crown) to call for fresh provisions either at the Cape e Verde Islands or the Cape of Good Hope, if re-uired to do so by the Surgeon Superintendent.

CAVALRY.

1st Drag. Guards—will move from Birmingham to Manchester.

4th—leave Brighton the second week in April for Dorchester and Weymouth, and will be succeeded by the 17th Lancers, from Manchester.

5th—proceed from Edinburgh to Leeds in April.

6th—move from York to Nottingham.

7th—move from Dublin to Birmingham.

2nd Dragoons—move from Leeds to Dublin.

7th Hussars—move from Nottingham to Hounslow.

8th—at Hounslow, one to go to Ireland in the spring.

10th—move from Glasgow to York in April.

15th—Major Sir Walter Scott was near meeting with a serious accident last week while exploring the ruins of the grand Gothic Cathedral formerly erected on the rock at Cashel. His spur, while he was going through one of the passages leading to the tower, came in contact with a stone, and he fell from a precipice nearly fifteen feet high without fracturing a bone. Capt. M'Queen has re-joined the squadron in Limerick. The regt. will return to England in the spring.

9th Lancers—move from Coventry to Edinburgh in April.

INFANTRY.

Coldstream Guards, 2nd Batt.—left Brighton on Friday for Windsor. The performance of Palace duty devolves on the 4th Dr. Guards.

11 Foot, 1st Batt.—Previous to the batt. quitting Cork, Maj.-Gen. Sir T. Arbuthnot, made a minute inspection of it in heavy marching order; and, under all circum-stances, landing as it had just done from a tropical cli-mate, at a most inclement season of the year, was pleased to express much satisfaction at the state and efficiency of the battalion. The Regimental Serjeant-Major, Acting Band Master, and six Privates, were brought to Sir Robert's notice as fit subjects to be invalided and approved of—the former individual has been more than six and twenty years in the reg., and the Serjeants of the reg. presented him a very handsome embossed silver snuff-box.

9th—Depot has arrived at Sheerness from Chatham.

11th—Capt. Bloomfield has returned to Waterford and taken the command of the depot.

14th—The service cos., under Lieut.-Col. Everard, embarked at Cork, and sailed this week for Barbadoes; head-quarters on board the Catherine Stewart Forbes, and second division on the Stakesby transport.

24th—Ensign the Hon. H. C. Boyle has arrived from Eng-land, where he had been on leave of absence, and has joined the depot of his regiment at Spike Island, Cove of Cork.

25th—Service cos. will embark for England on the arrival of the 14th.

30th—A detachment from the depot, under orders for Ber-muda, has been awaiting the arrival of a transport at Cove the last five months.

33rd—expect to move from Newry to Dublin.

36th—On the departure of the detachment in Nov. from Montserrat for Dominica, a very flattering letter from the President of the Council, and a resolution of the Honour-able Board of Council of that Island, were transmitted to Capt. Le Lacy, commanding the detachment.

65th—Assist.-Surg. Millet left Barbadoes 20th Dec. for head-quarters at St. Vincent's. It was expected that early last month the detachments would leave Barbadoes in H.M.S. Racehorse for St. Vincent's.

75th—The depot paymastership is vacant by the promotion of Lieut. Anderson to an unatt. comp.

77th—Major Ramsay requests us to contradict the para-graph that he was prominent in the late Court-Martial held at Glasgow. This we readily do, as we are aware that he was not produced as evidence on either side. Our casual observation was made with reference to the whole of the case, and we had in mind events that pre-ceded the Court-Martial, for some of which we may find room. We last week inserted Lord Hill's letter of 19th Dec.; another communication from that gallant Colonel will be of equal interest.

RL. ARTILLERY.—On Wednesday last a fine body of recruits arrived at head-quarters. Capt. and Adj. Willis is on leave and en route for the West Indies, having obtained permission for a brother officer to perform his duties. Out of 380 pensioners inspected, only five were found "serviceable." Acting Serj.-Major Body, of the Horse Brigade, has obtained his discharge and a pension. Lieut.-Col. Roberts, commanding in Limerick garrison, is about to retire from the Army. Lieut. Shephard, R.A., proceeds to Newfoundland in May.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.—Capt. Renwick has relieved Major Emmett at Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

The Bristol troop-ship has sailed from Cork with rein-forcements for the 5th, 42nd, 53rd, 66th, 73rd, 88th, and 92nd regts in the Mediterranean.

A Divisional Court-Martial is sitting at Woolwich Lieut.-Col. Conolly, President, and twelve members, in-cluding Lieut.-Col. Nicholson, Maj. Jones, Capts. Thomp-son, Stuart, &c., Capt. Varlo, Dep. Judge Advocate, on the prosecution of Lieut. Hawkins, to try Capt. Leyton, Rl. Engineers, on a charge of having, whilst acting as "caterer" of a detachment mess, when he commanded at Deptford in Dec. last, made out a return of expenditure (somewhere about 1*l.* 4*s.*) at variance with the vouchers produced, such an act being inconsistent with the character of an officer and gentleman, &c. The Court opened on Monday last in the mess-room, continuing by adjournment from day to day, and is expected to occupy the whole of next week. A number of tradesmen from Deptford have been summoned to attend as witnesses for the prosecution. The examination of the Subalterns on detachment at the time have been gone through, in the course of which it has been elicited that Capt. Leyton always conducted himself as an officer and a gentleman, and was considered an in-capable of such an act as that attributed to him. These witnesses were strictly cross-examined by Capt. Leyton (assisted by a barrister of the name of Weld,) whether it was not pos-sible the assumed overcharge might have arisen from the economy adopted in the mess, when strangers were brought into dine, in sending to the nearest tradesmen for any extra supply? which was replied to in the affirmative. It is but justice to add, that Capt. Leyton demanded this Court Martial, in consequence of a letter from Lieut. Hawkins to Col. M'Cleverty (the Commandant). When the sentence is promulgated, we may offer some remarks. It has been observed, as somewhat strange, that the prisoner's sword was not on the table before the President, and that the witnesses are only the width of the table (four feet) from the prosecutor, and at the backs of six of the members; nor has it escaped animadversion that the Court should be formed wholly of the Divisional Officers. Surely better arrangements might have been adopted.

A Sunday paper says, a reduction of nearly 4,000*l.* a year has been effected in the office of the Secretary at War in consequence of judicious and economical arrangements which have just been brought into operation.

LORD WILLIAM BENTINCK AND THE INDIAN ARMY.

With a man so singularly lauded for benevolence and humanity as Lord William Bentinck was, it is extraordinary how many acts we find that would lead the casual observer bow many acts we find that would lead the casual observer to a belief that his Lordship was swayed by a selfish disregard for every one but himself or his immediate parasites; and the occasional gratuitous infliction of what the ungenerate looked on as a criminal depreciation of those important requisites absolutely necessary to the climate, would almost induce succeeding ages to a belief that his lordship's character had not been impugned without a sufficient cause. Amongst those actions which may throw a doubtful shade over his Lordship's fame, we may instance the sacrifice of the health of a large number of his countrymen, by either the total deprivation of a supply of useful medicines, or the authorising the issue of drugs of an inferior quality, notwithstanding the remonstrance of several members of the medical profession. Ill-natured persons may indeed assert that his Excellency removed two surgeons from their charge, for presuming to bring to notice the inefficient state of their Dispensary—but the cordial inquirer, unbiassed by a feeling inimical to his Lordship, will find that the persons in question were removed "for differing in opinion with the medical board." The malevolent or the scrupulous may be tempted to adduce proof that his Lordship did not profess feelings of common humanity. His uncalled-for order, prohibiting officers from resorting to the Hills, unless on medical certificate, thus depriving those whose constitutions were breaking from the power of renovation, before they became absolutely worn out by disease. This, however, would be an uncandid appreciation of a Commander-in-Chief, who bore in himself a strong evidence of the benefit consequent on a residence in the hills, and whose generous disregard of the exigencies of the public service in comparison with his own health, involved the government of India in a series of illegalities requiring an act of indemnity from the British Parliament. Those who would detract from the reputation of the great Philhellene and Suttee abolisher, overthrowing in paradoxical confusion the slender distinctions between speculative virtue and practical vice, may attempt to destroy the barrier of the former, by relating the fact of his Lordship permitting three thousand rupees to be cut from a Medical Gentlemen for obeying the dictates of humanity, and affording the advantage of his professional skill to some hundred invalids. Should they adduce this story as an example of his Lordship's want of FEELING, or inattention to the claims of a surgeon, for a just remuneration from the State on account of services performed—the following order must show how erroneously they have judged, and how capable his Lordship was of estimating the value of services performed for his individual benefit:—

"Medical Officers—a fee of 100 sicca rupees authorised to be passed to the Surgeon of H. M.S. Curacoa, his professional attendance on Lord William Bentinck during the indisposition of his Excellency's surgeon."

We must own we do not see why his Lordship, considering the amount of his salary, might not have paid the trifle out of his own pocket, or obliged his own Surgeon to do as any other medical man would have been obliged to do, viz. pay the substitute.

Not contented with this interference with every privilege possessed by the officers of the Bengal Army in India, we find his Excellency a strenuous advocate with the Court of Directors for the curtailment of those advantages possessed in a return to Europe on furlough, and the order preventing officers from visiting the hills, was closely connected with his Lordship's recommendation to the home authorities, that persons who visited England on sick certificate should be deprived of the power of taking a furlough when entitled thereto, for Lord William hoped that, by forcing a greater number of sick officers than usual to visit Europe, that the Court would be induced to accede to his views; and in the same way we find, that after he had encouraged the disputes between the first and second Lieut.-Cols. of King's corps, he recommended the juniors being reduced, as there was not an instance of a regiment, where both those officers were present, in which they were not engaged in the most unseemly quarrels. We are at a loss to conceive on what principle his Lordship could have recommended the depriving sick officers of the subsequent advantage of their furlough, considering that that portion of an officer's residence in Europe is as much a recognised part of the contract with his honourable masters, as that he should be entitled to retire on a pension after 22 years' actual service. It was this bond of good faith on the part of Lord William Bentinck, the duplicity with which he tried to circumvent the officers, and the recklessness with which he would have burst every pledge, and broken every bond by which the master was engaged to the servant, that kept the Army in a constant state of agitation while under his command, and will mark his name with odium so long as the Bengal Army exists.

The arbitrary removal of officers high in character, and whose lives had been passed in a zealous fulfilment of their duties, has been entered on at full length elsewhere; but we cannot permit the present opportunity to pass of placing on record the admission of an Adjutant-General, that the Commander-in-Chief had decided on one of those cases, without taking the trouble of reading the papers, and that, after the issue of the order, removing one officer, and censuring an old Field Officer in no measured terms, the same Adjutant-General continued to serve on his Excellency's Staff. How many instances have there been in Europe of officers refusing to serve under Generals who would have made them instruments of injustice, or who, at the same time that they performed the painful duty imposed on them by the rules of the service, have, by tendering their resignation of Staff employ, performed the duty due to themselves, as gentlemen and members of an honourable profession.

The extent to which Lord William Bentinck carried the reduction of the Bengal Army, is greater than could have been practicable by any person possessed of a knowledge of our position in India. On the termination of the Burmese war, the Bengal Army was reduced by the amount of 20,000 native troops, yet between the advent of Lord William in 1828 and the year 1832, further reductions were carried into effect to the extent of eighty thousand men, and near 400 officers, leaving the entire force of this Presidency under 90,000 men, of whom about 15,000 are Europeans. His Excellency, however, considered this force too numerous for the trifling duties to be performed, and by the late accounts from England it would appear, he recommended a further reduction of twenty-nine regiments, or about twenty thousand men. Had such an improvident measure been sanctioned, the entire defence of this vast empire would have been relegated to thirty-five thousand Europeans, and one hundred and twenty-five thousand Natives, although the government in the year 1826 did not find themselves encumbered with too many troops when the joint armies of the Presidencies amounted to 309,000. It requires no great knowledge of our political relations to understand how practically impossible it is that the posture of affairs could have been so changed as to permit the reduction of the Army from 300,000 to 150,000 men. In the year 1830 Sir John Malcolm called Lord William's attention to the necessity which existed of strengthening the line of frontier from Delhi by Ajmere, and Sehnie and Deesa, not solely with a view to prevent the speculative event of an invasion, but to guard against the more proximate danger to be apprehended from internal disturbance along that line. That the view taken by the Governor of Bombay of our situation was correct the late occurrences have clearly demonstrated, and there can scarcely be a man in India whose intellect is of sufficient strength to enable him to arrive at the conclusion that two and two make four, who will not agree with Sir John Malcolm that "the chiefs under our direction, as well as those subject to our controlling management throughout our north-western frontier, are neither in a settled or contented state. There may be no immediate proofs of existing danger, but there is a part of our territories in which a flame once raised would be likely to spread, and not easily extinguished." The petty pilfering of the salt lake in which his Lordship's great Jumlpore expectation terminated, has done much to raise that flame, while the petty trafficking carried on in the camp at Gwalior, has not increased the respect previously entertained for the British name. We asked a vakeel (from one of the Sykh chiefs) who was in attendance on the Governor-General at the great camp at Gwalior, if he had any difficulty in procuring provision. "Not the least," was the reply, "I had only to send a rupee to the Governor-General, and obtained fowls, eggs, or whatever was required—he sold everything." We inquired further, and found that the usual nuzzer sent into camp for the subsistence of the troops was regularly sold by direction of the Governor-General, under the superintendence of government-house servants in the royal livery. We explained that the amount so obtained would be credited to the government, but our friend only laughed at the simplicity of such a supposition, constantly repeating—"Lord William is very fond of rupees—Lord William loves the rupees." So much for the impression he left on the natives' minds.

We may as well here mention an interview which his Lordship granted (about the time alluded to in the foregoing) to an officer, in illustration of the character of the ruler over India. Captain P—— waited on his Lordship, to complain against some deductions made from his pay by the Auditor-General. The case was a very straight forward one: he had been employed for eighteen months as Executive officer, and drew the salary accordingly; but on his removal, the staff pay had been re-audited, and was placed under stoppages until the entire sum was repaid; in this consisted his grievance. His Lordship heard the complaint with the greatest attention, until it was concluded, when, stretching across the table placed between him and Captain P——, he said with a good deal of earnestness, "Did you repay the money?" "Yes, my Lord," said Captain P——, "they have stopt it out of my pay." His Lordship apparently did not quite understand the answer, for again with increased earnestness he inquired—"Do you mean to say they are actually in possession of the money—that the Auditor-General has recovered the whole amount from you." "Yes, my Lord," again answered Captain P——, "they have every penny of it." "Then, Sir, depend upon it—upon it, they will keep it ha! ha! ha! Good morning Captain P——, ho! ho! ho!" and thus ended an appeal to the Governor-General for redress.

(To be Concluded in our next.)

MEMORABILIA.

Vigour and Prudence.—In Catalonia, the prisoners as soon as captured, are decimated, and every tenth man shot; but these are Mina transactions, and only Mendiz-abals, whilst the massacres of Madrid are rivalled in Saragossa. This is said to be prudent as well as vigorous.

Political Festivities.—The Liberals in England have been feasting O'Connell, whilst in Spain O'Donnel has been feasting the Liberals. A slice of Bacon will, doubtless, prove a great treat among the Barcelonians epicures.

Wanted immediately.—Ten thousand blue jackets with sound teeth, to take the bread Out of the King's biscuit, and contribute to the Purser's tithes. Bohea and Gunpowder liberally supplied.

Paths of Ireland.—Should the head fall, under the Raphael stroke, what is the value of the monstrous tail? As such a curiosity would be worthy the Naval and Military Museum, we trust Capt. M'Conchy will keep it in view.

New Stock.—The scheme of the Buffalo Company just advertised, under the auspices of "Yorick," promises a profitable outlay for money, the Admiralty Board having contracted with the Honourable Chairman for building an extensive squadron of "demonstrators," to be constructed with buffalo hides and whalebone, coutchouc trennelling, and ivory masts. The jungle stock of India has advanced considerably in price since the announcement.

Pumbyism!—Mr. Hume lately moved that "economy" be considered a humbug, and that the site of the Houses of Parliament be shifted once a month, at any cost, in order that the members may enjoy a pleasing variety, instead of being condemned to an eternal "tautology" of sameness.

Birmingham Bridge.—Mr. ——— has, we hear, undertaken the correction of the "Birmingham Bridge," which is said to have become frail. His proposition was by no means "unfair," though it did not meet with general approbation. He has shown himself a zealous workman, At-wood.

Pea Soup for ten.—Cruising off the Black Rocks during war, and the ward-room mess at low ebb for stock, put the caterer to his wits' end for the diurnal dinner. Pea soup and porter were the great staples at a first course. When seasoning the savory pottage, the dusky Apicius of the hungry expectants unluckily let fall the contents of a well-filled salt-box plump in the centre of the semi-fluid. The briny treat had scarcely passed the threshold of the taster's palate when exclamations loud and lost went in quick succession round the table against poor Overdone, the cook, who was summoned forthwith, mounted on a chair, and politely invited to partake of the good cheer, with an insinuating request (implying "no compulsion only you must") that he would finish the whole, a feat which was duly accomplished, to the portly increase of a capacious stomach accompanied with suitable gesticulations of countenance the humorous cast of which was no way diminished when the steward presented him with a goblet of the purest salt water, fresh drawn, as an accompaniment.

Hunting Accident.—In a recent run, through Springwood Vale, in which the Hon. Lady Dorrell was taking the lead, the fox having made for the valley, her Ladyship turning up the bottom, fell from her horse with her foot fast in the stirrup; she was speedily rescued, however, by Lord Lookgrave, who, being but after the brush was close at her elbow.

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

AN APPEAL ON BEHALF OF THE WIDOWS OF THE NAVY.

Those who deepest feel is ill expreat
The sad emotions of the suffering breast.

SIR,—With your permission, I have humbly presumed, as one of the above, to express my sentiments on the subject of the widows' pension, which you have so warmly advocated for us, a cause which ought to be a common cause with all, and the least we can do, as it is our common cause, is first to admire the noble and independent spirit which has so laudably actuated you in our behalf, and, secondly, to aid and assist you all in our power.

What says the law, Sir? In the book of the prophet Isaiah, chap. 1, verses 17 and 22, it is written, "Plead for the widow," &c., &c. Also, what says the Order in Council? "that the widow of such officers shall be entitled, [illegible]

t receive, a pension." And what does the Parliament oo assembled direct? "that a certain sum of money be apart out of the treasury to pay unto widows their penns, agreeable to the directions of the Order in Council that effect." It is therefore evident, Sir, that by the s of God and man the widows are to be protected and pported; as such, Sir, Acts of Parliament and Orders in uncil should not be subverted, or their meaning construed trary to their intent. In pleading, therefore, Sir, for the low it will be necessary to make a relative comparison to ve a right of inheritance through their expectancy, by y of substantiating their right of receiving their pensions.
It is manifest, Sir, that when his Majesty's Attorney-Ge-al accepts that office, he does so under the impression understanding that, through his accepting such office, will stand pre-eminent for promotion and remuneration; likewise, when any of the bar accept the office of the d High Chancellor, or of one of the judges, they do under the impression and understanding that, when ir services may be dispensed with, they retire with a sion suitable to the dignity of the office they held, as adequate compensation for having devoted their time l services for the benefit and welfare of their king and ntry, and when they so retire, or their services are disnsed with, they do so receive such stipulated and preusly understood pension; not as a remuneration for what y may have done, but as a compensation for the sacrithey have made in having devoted the junior part of ir life for their country's good, subject to be called in into active service. For instance, within the last years, were not Lord Lyndhurst's services as Lord gh Chancellor dispensed with by his Majesty, when retired with a pension of 4,000*l.* per annum, not bese he was unfit for further service, but for the sacrifice had made, which he was told he should have on accepting the office; because he was again called to same office, when he again retires with 5,000*l.* per um. Consequently, Sir, the legislature have in r wisdom decreed, that all those who devote their time their country's good, shall be remunerated in like nner; as was with reference to the late Mr. Canning, o died not very rich, when it was decreed to his low that she should have a certain pension for the sacriher husband had rendered by devoting his services for benefit of his country. Thus much, Sir, I have attempted prove, from the promises and expectances held out on the inning, the right of possession of it through servitude; by example and immemorial usage manifested by the ds of the country. Upon the same footing, Sir, how ds the navy? precisely the same. Why do parents e their sons to enter his Majesty's navy in preference bringing them up to some trade or profession on shore, under the agreement and understanding that, if they form to the rules and regulations laid down for them by Majesty's government, serve their apprenticeship truly faithfully, pass their necessary examinations, y will, as their services may entitle them to, be reded with promotion, bringing with it a remuneration; that, as a compensation equivalent for not being able lay up for their wives and families, then wives shall, virtue of them, be entitled to a pension, as regulated by Majesty's Order in Council, should they die while holdsuch situations as therein expressed, to keep them out of workhouse and grovelling for a maintenance. As by the of God every man is bound to provide for his own, as is ght in St. Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians,
p. 12, v. 14, and in the first of Timothy, chap. 5, v. 8, sequently, under the promises held out to them when the nts gave them up to his Majesty's naval service, their services and the earlier part of their life should devoted for the protection, preservation, and benefit of r country, they are entitled, should they arrive to the that has reference to the Order in Council which , should it please Almighty God to take you from while you are serving us under such a rank, that r widow shall receive such a pension from us, should leave one behind. Therefore, Sir, I consider you quite correct in stating that the widows have a to the pension as held out to them through the ises made to their husbands, which were, that they ld receive such should their husband hold the required at the time of their decease. The pension for the widow mes a contract; first, between the parent of the youth n he enters his Majesty's service, and then between officer himself and his majesty's government, the ful-nt of which contract is imperious on all of his Majesty's rnment (whether they themselves made the contract or unconditionally. When the faith is destroyed between contracting parties, then the dependence becomes , when every officer may well exclaim to his country's diers, while assembled at St. Stephens,

"Has this excellent method ever met thy eye,— unto others, oh man, as thou would be done by."
St. Luke, chap. vi, verse 31.

hope, Sir, I have satisfied you of the right, from Imerial usage' towards the heads of our country, of ing all contracts that award pensions to our widows.
hould I not have so succeeded, I will then confine lf to the female department, beginning, as I have done before, with the first in the realm. Has not the consort of our revered and beloved monarch by an award decreed to her, on the event of its pleasing Almighty God to call unto his holy keeping her husband, a pension for her maintenance the moment she becomes a widow, in consequence of the zealous and affectionate attachment of our revered monarch in having devoted the whole of his time and sacrificing his younger days and private enjoyments for our benefit and his country in general. In that award it is not stated that unless our most gracious king should die in such away, she shall be entitled to such a pension: it says at his demise. Are there not also many ladies, widows, on the Civil List, receiving pensions by virtue of the office their husbands held, because they devoted their time and abilities for the service of their country, not because their husbands died in such a way, but because they did die while employed in the service of their country? What would be the reflection of our most gracious sovereign if he for a moment thought any other construction would be put upon the award decreed to his amiable and gracious consort than that which he now anticipates, that no question will be raised as to how he died. Should he think it possible to be otherwise, would he not say, oh, ye ungrateful nation! and exclaim, of all the crimes human nature can be guilty of ingratitude is the worst! Are not our wives our queens! do we not, in common with him, think our queen the fairest and the most amiable? What have public servants to fly to for their wives' protection but the laws of their country. Arise, then, oh ye navy of Great Britain, and join heart and hand, from the east to the west, and from the north to the south, and implore your sovereign to protect your brother officers' widows, and let us all join in shouting, that in one common cry all over the land. Do for the widows as ye have promised to us and to our forefathers. Let every one use all the interest he can with the senators to get justice done to them (I do not plead for myself, for I am not blessed with a spouse, and therefore plead for others), and implore to shake off the incubus.

"Shame and defeat attend despairing fear,

I beg now to conclude, Sir, trusting that you will be pleased to excuse the length I have inadvertently drawn myself into, and that you will still, through your invaluable Gazette, exhort and invite every officer in his Majesty's navy to echo all over the land, "Protect and provide for the widows" as ye have promised.

PROMOTION OF NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

SIR,—Your strict impartiality in promoting the interests of all ranks in the United Services, induces me to bring a subject under your notice, which I am sorry has not fallen into the hands of some one more capable of doing it justice. Nothing is more encouraging to the deserving soldier, or a greater stimulus to his persevering in the correct and zealous performance of his duties, than a knowledge that his conduct is observed, and its merits duly appreciated by the officers under whom he is serving. Hence he cheerfully looks forward, with some degree of certainty, to the only anchoration to which his most sanguine hopes aspire, the becoming a Non-Commissioned Officer. But, on the contrary, when the manly and upright soldier sees that all honourable endeavours to improve his condition in life are rendered unavailing, by the artifices of some sycophant, who has insinuated himself into the favour of a person in power, he in despair often curses the day that he entered the service, becomes reckless in his conduct, and abandons himself to dissolute habits.

From many years experience in the service, I am led to make these remarks in consequence of the partial and injudicious choice which is frequently made of men to be Non-Commissioned Officers. I have seen many instances of privates, having neither abilities, education, nor character to recommend them, obtaining promotion through their having insinuated themselves into the favour of an officer, or even an influential Non-Commissioned Officer, by the performance of mean and servile offices, while others of far superior conduct and abilities, but more modest and unassuming, have been entirely neglected. Likewise after the first step is gained, the same pernicious and disreputable influence often exerts itself, even as far as the highest ordinary point of promotion. This is a serious evil, as it tends to disgust those men who are really deserving, and, by raising individuals to a rank for which they are not qualified, to lessen the efficiency of Non-Commissioned Officers, and to bring them generally into disrespect and disgrace.

WOOLWICH DOCK-YARD.

SIR,—This is "an economising era;" whether, in some instances the principle be good, "time will show," and it is really astonishing that the useless expenditure of books should be persevered in at the dockyard lobby, for the insertion of the names of officers in uniform, previous to their admittance into the yard. I am really at a loss to imagine from what authority such a regulation could have emanated, to the great detriment of the public purse, in a useless waste of stationery. Surely, Mr. Editor, the officers of the navy and army are not become so worthless, in consequence of "a lazy peace," that they are not to be trusted into the dockyards, for fear of pocketing stores or taking plans, that they must be registered and marked by the police. This, I assure you, excites not only disgust, but prevents many high spirited individuals from showing their friends "the lions" of a naval arsenal. This was not the practice during the war. Pray see to this, and, if you can, get rid of this reflection on all parties, and you will oblige.

SCHOOL OF NAVAL ARCHITECTURE.

SIR,—Respecting the School of Naval Architecture, although I belong to it, if it has been useless to the Navy I would not say one word for it; but let it be remembered that it has not yet been tried in the very branch for which it was established, the designing of ships; let it be had in mind that it was not exclusive in its nature,—that it was open to the apprentices of the Dock-yard, four of whom gained admission, and many of the sons of artificers; that it did not monopolise all promotions; and that, besides mathematics, it taught men to arrange and communicate their ideas (I mean writing and printing), which is the grand source of improvement. Old School officers have communicated their ideas, it is true, but with difficulty, and they have been proved to have failed in their profession by the Boards of Naval Revision, Finance, and others. If scientific knowledge can be communicated without a College, let it be so; but there is no master in any sea-port who could carry a man through a course of naval architecture except one of the students themselves. Those who pretend to have learnt the principles of naval architecture, without availing themselves, by mathematics, of Atwood, Chapman, &c., only gull their hearers, or wish to gull them. I do not see that the necessity of scientific knowledge is done away with by saying that ship-building is an art, because we still want to find the rules of that art, and to communicate those rules to others. Medicine and chemistry are arts. Certainly there has been quackery in the School of Naval Architecture, in pretending, à priori, to discover the laws of ship-building; but in the method of induction from facts, which was proposed to the Navy Board fourteen years ago, lies, I conceive, the true method of discovering the rules of the art of ship-building, in order to design ships with tolerable precision and accuracy. Of course the carpentry of ships is only gained by working at tools, as the students of the School of Naval Architecture did for seven years.

Some of the students have behaved badly in opposing Captain Symonds, who now monopolises the designing of ships, because his step in ship-building has been an important one; and whereas, they have written for Seppings, whose mode of construction was inferior to the new one, they have acted improperly; but they were misled by Capt. Symonds not communicating his ideas with accuracy in his catechism. The Navy of England has need of being remodelled; it is a very important subject; and I think if we look at foreign ships of war, we shall see that none of our present models are precisely fitted for the future scene of naval operations, though improvement is going forward.

It is well known that, without power, no man can do any good in the King's Service; and therefore men ought not, like the Children of Israel, to be stigmatised for not making bricks when they have not had the means of doing so. I think totally abolishing the Naval College may injure the reputation of the Whig Government, unless a similar means of gaining knowledge is substituted, as every day proves the vast advantage of knowledge over ignorance in developing the resources of nation. Watt, the author of the steam-engine, heard lectures on mechanics at a college; and Arkwright would not have been less likely to discover his cotton machine if he had known mathematics, but might have made other splendid discoveries. Education cannot give abilities, but it aids them, and gives them an opportunity of shining, and conveying light to others.

THE FOREIGN PACKET QUESTION.

SIR,—Being well aware of the space you have given to the Foreign Packet Question in your columns, so invaluable to the United Service of your country, whose cause you have fearlessly and zealously advocated, it is with reluctance I request a little room once more to clear myself from an insinuation in the Post Captain's last letter, which would make it appear that, in advocating the cause of Falmouth Harbour, I have been only influenced by selfish and interested motives. He says that "he would stake all the property I possess in or near Falmouth;" now he possesses as much as I do, or ever did there. When I was appointed by the Right Hon. Earl Spencer, then First Lord of the Admiralty, in 1800, to the command of the Chatham stationed in that harbour, I neither knew nor was known to any inhabitant in the place, or its vicinity. Soon after, my attention was called to an examination of the Port, and all circumstances connected with it, by an old shipmate, at that time in one of the Public Offices*, which led to a representation laid before the Government, that saw things differently from what others have since done, to my appointment to the experiment, and to assist in preparing the harbour for the reception of squadrons of ships of war. All this had nothing to do with any aid from any landed proprietor in the county of Cornwall having interest with the Government, and so it has continued to this day.

What I have done has been from the conviction of my own judgment that it is the cause of my country. As to my settling in the vicinity of Falmouth, it was merely accidental, as has been the case with many Naval officers in different parts of the kingdom.

The gallant Captain's challenge is not fair: it is asking to give up the greatest advantage Falmouth possesses over the S. W. of Ireland, and then he will contend with it for arrival in foreign parts. There can be no doubt that whatever zeal, ardour, and experimental knowledge could perform, he would accomplish; but I would remind him that sailing from Bearhaven and Falmouth at the same time is altogether a gratuitous assumption of his own. Every impartial man will undoubtedly allow the packets to sail when the mail arrives at the port where they are stationed. This is the very point that nullifies the zealous officer's mode of argument as to time, and tells him to wait at Bearhaven until a packet from Falmouth shall have more than wiped off the difference of longitude by altering her own two or three degrees, and her latitude as much. I agree with him that arguing on the chance of winds is altogether theoretical, and that a vessel might wait six months at Falmouth before she found a strong N. W. by N. or W. N. W. wind when the mail arrived; and if then, it might be points more northerly, S. W. by S., or even S. E., before the same mail arrived at Bearhaven. But there are also FACTS, undeniable FACTS, connected with the argument. It is an undeniable fact that the mail must arrive many hours sooner at Falmouth than it possibly can at Bearhaven; and from this arises another fact, important to the interests of the country. A packet from the former port may, in 24 hours, be 312 miles S. of the parallel of Bearhaven, and only 100 miles east of its meridian, or, with less favourable winds, 270 S. and 100 E. These facts are not the offspring of "interested enthusiasm," but plain truths; and if they make no impression on the minds of "wholly impartial seamen," what will?

If doubt remains on the mind of Government, and the mercantile interest of the country, let vessels of equal capacities, and Commanders of equal experience, be stationed at each port, to sail with the MAIL of the same day—I say, Sir, with the MAIL of the same day, when it arrives, and then let experimental facts, divested of all chicanery, decide the question.

With these observations I desire to close all further discussion on the subject.

February 5th. J. MANDLISON.

EMPLOYMENT OF CONVICTS IN THE DOCK YARDS.

SIR,—The more I consider convict labour, the more I am astonished that government has not given the subject its full weight in the scale of their political economy. I estimate the expense of each convict to the government at 10¾*d.* per diem, and I may venture to assert that at least 900 of them are employed in our dock-yards, at a cost per annum of 14,371*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* Provided the convicts are removed, and an entry of labourers takes place, 600, if not more, will be required for the different departments at 2*s* 6*d.* per diem each, which for the year (Sundays excepted) will be 13,400*l.* leaving a balance of 9028*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* in favour of convict labour: this is no trifle in these grinding times of pinching economy.

Under all circumstances I feel persuaded that the Convict Hulk Establishment would be materially improved if governed by a Committee, whose suggestions and recommendations would carry sufficient weight to effect their object: whereas, the superintendent of convicts is not able of himself, though well qualified for the duties of his office, to carry any measure, however advantageous to the service, when opposed to the views of a Committee of Inquiry appointed by the government.

The effects resulting from punishment greatly depend upon custom and the character of the people where it is enforced, and that which would be injurious to the feelings of one nation, might be altogether harmless in that respect to another; but it does appear to me that to work at hard labour for a given period would make a more lasting impression of degradation upon a sensitive mind than the silent system so strongly recommended by the Parliamentary Committee. It must be admitted that coercion of some sort or other is absolutely necessary to keep large bodies of men, particularly men of this description, who have never been brought into any system bearing upon good order, into a state of subordination and discipline; the only difference that arises is, as to the description of coercion that should be exercised, and I am decidedly of opinion that, to render punishment effectual, it must not carry with it sympathy for the guilty. But while I admit, or rather maintain this to the fullest extent, I am equally convinced that, before confinement in the Hulks is given up, the effect of the silent system should be well weighed and deliberately considered, in order that the Committee may know that the punishment which they are about to adopt will prove more salutary than that which they are about to abolish.

I have no hesitation in saying that 160 or more convicts could be separately confined on board a convict hulk at a comparatively trifling expense for alteration in the fittings, when compared to the expense for erecting a prison upon the principle recommended by the Committee; and I will venture to predict, however sanguine Lord John may be with respect to "Dartmoor Prison" for this purpose, "it will prove a complete failure."

I would therefore recommend in preference the appropriation of a few of our worn-out 74-gun ships, and station them at our dock-yards, when hard labour on shore, and separate confinement on board, could be fully carried into effect under the superintendence of active and experienced officers; thus rendering the convict punishment in every way as complete as possible, and it is my intention at a future day to submit for your consideration a plan for the fitting of a ship upon this principle.

While on this subject, Mr. Editor, I would direct attention to the very low salaries of the turnkeys belonging to the hulks: the turnkeys in our gaols are far better paid when compared to those belonging to the hulks, whose duties are of the most arduous description, and in fact, as far as liberty goes, it may be truly said there is scarcely a degree between them and the convicts.

Surely, in these times of prison competition, an adequate salary ought to be given. Much good would result to the establishment if the turnkeys were paid their wages weekly, and even furnished with an uniform, provided upon the same principle as the Police in our dock-yards. To a man with a large family this would be of great advantage, more especially as many of them are obliged to employ an agent, which has a tendency to keep them poor, and that poverty damps their spirits and their energies, and they become of a grovelling disposition—their attention is directed to the minute care of expenditure to avoid embarrassment, from which they can scarcely ever hope to disentangle themselves, whereas, with adequate pay to meet their wants, their mind would be rendered elastic and energetic, and the turnkey would be more efficient for the duties of his station.

WRONGS OF THE NAVY.

SIR,—It may appear to many superfluous to advance any further proofs of the wrongs of the Navy, since they have been so clearly stated, proved, and admitted; but of what avail is pointing out the evil if no remedy be applied? I would say, never rest until the country be impressed with the full conviction of our just and rational claims. But, Sir, I verily believe that both the country and government are ready to yield to our just wishes. The enemy is within ourselves. How often have both the hopes and expectations of the Navy been raised, and disappointed, by some member in the House advocating the cause of his profession no longer than to induce the Minister to comply with his wishes! then no more is said of unredressed grievances until another disappointed or imaginary ill-requited member, in his complaints, makes the wrongs of his brother officers the stepping stone to reach his object, when nothing more is heard of the Navy. Even when the intention is pure, desultory exertions, with the best of argument, fail, without influence or union.

The Eastern tale of the bundle of sticks must be attended to, or otherwise we are thought tardily to acknowledge that justice is done to our claims; and it is reasonable to be supposed by the country that, if the profession do not make it appear that their claims are not attended to, the complaints merely arise from the dissatisfied and intriguing minds of a few individuals. How different is it with the Army? and much to their honour that the just complaint of one member is that of the whole. The question with the Navy should be brought before the House through the influence of parliamentary friends, and never left to rest until their grievances be fully impressed upon those who have the power of redressing them. Even if all the maxims of the old school were just, and adapted to their day, surely they are not so now; in both times and circumstances have forced upon us wants which were formerly luxuries. The Navy do not require to rot in luxury; they ask solely what is necessary to maintain them in their rank and station in society with that necessary dignity so essential to the benefit of the Service. Many old officers, excellent in their time, have injured the Service by a mistaken zeal and ill-judged application of maxims of a bye-gone day. The Trunnions, Hatchways, Benbows, &c., however useful in their day, no longer suit the advanced state of science and intelligence of the nineteenth century.

It has been already shown by some of your intelligent correspondents, in balancing the advantages and opposite of the Services, that the Navy falls far short of its due remuneration. It is well known that the great majority of officers of both Services have very little more than their pay. Is it just, then, to oblige a Captain in the Navy to break in upon his private resources, and if without them, to expose him to debt to maintain that appearance so essential to the benefit of the Service and credit of the country? Lieutenants, one would imagine, live upon the purity of sea air. I ask, is it not very galling that the Lieutenant should not be allowed the same as his equal the Captain of Marines? on the contrary, he is paid about 1*s.* a day less than his inferior, the subaltern, of seven years' standing. I contend that the Navy should be paid as the Marines and Artillery, as the naval officer's responsibility is great and acquires a combination of intelligence. To be a good officer it is necessary to be both a competent seaman and navigator, and also to be fully acquainted with projectiles, which latter knowledge constitutes the Artillery officer. And why should there be different classes of half-pay in the Navy? The Captain is obliged to remain on the half-pay of 10*s.* 6*d.*, below the half-pay of the Lieutenant-Colonel many years after holding the rank of Colonel. What presumptuous must be a junior Lieutenant to think of ever to reach the first 300 at 7*s.* Why not, as the Captain in the Army, be entitled on his promotion to the 7*s*, why has not the compliment been paid to the Navy to place a few on each list in the scale of the highest half-pay in the Navy? because, I suppose, they are not bien auprès de la cour. However just it may be to enforce a rigid economy into the different departments of government, it cannot be correct to do so at the expense of others; to do so is to amount to overtaxing one class of his Majesty's subjects for the benefit of others. It is to be hoped that the times are rapidly advancing when a reformed parliament will acknowledge substantially the debt due to the Navy. The gratitude of the Army will readily acknowledge the construction of the bridge by the Navy over which they have marched to gather the laurels which so honourably deck their brows, and have, at the same time, given them an opportunity of convincing the world that the prowess of an Englishman is as great in the field as on the mighty ocean. From the debt which has been raised by her Navy in its present pre-eminent station, an incalculable debt is due. Alas! Great Britain, let not history have hereafter to record that the valour of her sons raised her to a pinnacle of fame, when, puffed up in prosperity, unmindful of its cause, she fell by ingratitude, and that her glory which excited the admiration of the world, like the brilliancy of the meteor, lasted for the time, when it passed into a night of darkness and obscurity.

COAST GUARD SERVICE (LETTER III.)

SIR,—Those who originally knew anything of the Preventive Service never regarded it as a reputable one, from the description of persons then employed in it, from its peculiar duties, nor was it probable that the existence of the Admiralty sinking the Lieutenant to the situation of "chief officer," instead of effectually re-organizing the Service, and raising, as I observed in my last letter, the situation to the rank of the Lieutenant, would effect a change in the estimation of the public at large. When, then, the Lieutenants were appointed, the impression became general that none but, unfortunately for themselves, excessively needy persons, or such as were considered by the Navy as its dross, would accept the situation; hence the cause of their having hitherto been looked upon in a disreputable and questionable light, and the generality of respectable people have kept aloof from them in consequence. It is in the nature to judge of every situation by comparison; how, then, are persons to estimate this service, when the very next station to that of a Lieutenant, they see a Chief officer, one of the men I have already described, without illiterate, and uneducated, indulging in low habits, and mixing with the meanest description of people: in saying, however, I will admit there may be some few exceptions, but I still maintain that the great majority are of the character I have already described, which circumstance of itself be sufficient to throw a degree of odium and suspicion on that of the Naval "chief officer," however gentlemanly his bearing may be, the consequence of which he but rarely receives those courtesies and attentions which are invariably shown to his brother officers, if differently employed. Such respectable persons as may eventually form an acquaintance with him take time to learn his character, and when in the end they distinguish the gentleman, they are disposed to associate with him, it is generally with expressions of regret for the nature of the duties he has to perform, and that species of contempt for the office he holds that a sensitive and high-minded man cannot but not feel the humiliating position to which he is reduced. This may, in the opinion of some, be a matter of little moment that the Lieutenant "Sitter" is kept out of that sphere of society to which his rank entitles him, but it is true that this should result from a certain species of disgrace put upon him by his official Directors. Would, Sir, a Captain in the Army be forced into such a position? Would he be permitted to be associated with the class of men to which I have alluded, and left to all the consequences of an appointment so far beneath him? An individual might, perhaps, unknown to the Horse Guards, force himself into such a position; but would the Commander of the Forces, or the brave and eminent chiefs of the sister service who look with a jealous eye to the possession of everything that is disand honourable in the members of their profession, ever allow officers standing in an important relation to themselves to be degraded and disgraced as the Naval Lieutenants thus are? No! for the whole Army would have raised its voice against such humiliation. But the Commander of the Forces would not have put it to such a test; for had he been called upon to appoint Captains in the Army, instead of the Admiralty Lieutenants in the Navy, especial care would have been taken to secure to them that power and respect to which their rank entitled them, and thereby to have maintained them in the position of officers and gentlemen.

The Customs would not have obtained the services of the Army upon their own terms as they have those of the Navy, because their situation would have been required by the proper authorities to have been made commensurate with that of the officer who accepted it; his self-respect would not, therefore, have been destroyed, and he would have retained his rank in society, the result of all which would have had the most beneficial effect upon the new service in which he had embarked, for he would have performed his various duties, not sullenly and reluctantly, but cheerfully and zealously.

It may be retorted upon me that naval officers retain their half-pay while employed in this department, or rather receive a compensation in lieu thereof, and that there were several in it previously to the Admiralty taking the patronage of the appointments. These facts, I admit; but, with respect to the first, I must be allowed to observe that, as half-pay is an allowance for previous Naval services, it is not to be taken into the account of the emoluments, and the Admiralty could not at that time, nor now, legally deprive an officer of it, unless the amount of his civil situation was more than three times that of his half-pay. With reference to officers being on the Coast Guard previously to the appointments to it being transferred to the Admiralty, all I have to observe is, that those officers who accepted the situation did so on their own responsibility, and were content to sink their naval rank; but when, in 1831, this service was pronounced and became "ESSENTIALLY NAVAL," it was the paramount duty of the then Lords of the Admiralty to take especial care that their officers should be provided for in a manner suitable to their rank.

The Admiralty is the natural guardian of the honour of the Navy, and, in proportion to the countenance and support it gives it, will it be respectable or otherwise; and if our officers are to be sacrificed to every petty expediency, and not allowed their proper relative standing as to rank, but be obliged to take every appointment, whether consistent with the character of a gentleman or not, then, Sir, must this glorious profession be seriously deteriorated in the respect of the nation at large, and, consequently, become less formidable as the great defence of this country, by that sense of wrong which must be felt by every individual in it so placed, and by that spirit of discontent which such wrongs must necessarily engender.

ERRORS OF THE PRESS.

SIR,—I have a complaint to make, and I expect you will attend to it; for living as I do in a remote corner of the country, any disappointment in the regular receipt of my newspapers vexes me. I send into my post town twice or thrice a-week on purpose for them and my letters, and always on a Tuesday, so that I may be amused by one of my girls reading to me the freshest news and naval intelligence, while I am warming my toes by the fire, and endeavouring to restore circulation to my almost worn-out and crippled understanding.

Such was the case the other day; and as the reading proceeded, I listened until a paragraph of a dozen words induced me to call a halt,—"Rear-Admiral Maitland has resumed the command in the garrison at Portsmouth." I assure you it is so, Sir, and I was struck with astonishment, not unmixed with delight; for I of course concluded that a flag promotion had come out, and by some new movement my valuable, active, and worthy friend Sir Fredrick, had succeeded to the appointment of a General of Marines, and that I myself must have got a peg or two higher on the list, the only thing I care about at my time of life.

But the mystery was soon unravelled; your sub-distributors had by some mistake, or deficiency, perhaps, sent in the wrong paper, a mere last week's dish from the ports, minced and dressed up again,—d——n him. And I want to know if we are to be clipped of our honours too, in these trying times of economy; for I see, upon the same authority, that on board the Melville, 74, "The PENDANT was to be hoisted for the flag of the new Commander-in-Chief in the West Indies." It will be a broad one, at least, for Sir Peter, I hope.

I'm out of patience with such innovations, dread another fit of the gout, and can write no more.

Do be careful in future, and recollect that it was the Naval and Military Gazette that I ordered, and I will not pay for any other; the want of that number (16th Jan.) has spoiled my new year's set. A FLAG OFFICER.

North Devon, 26th Jan. 1836.

MARINE ARTILLERY.

SIR,—While you are advocating the different branches of the service, I would fain call your attention to the Marine Artillery, a corps not of the least consequence in the event of war; and I am induced to do this from the expected increase to the Navy.

The reduction of this force, every department of which was conducted so ably and with such economy, has been, I may safely state, sincerely regretted by a great majority of the officers of the Naval service, more particularly by those of the highest rank and greatest experience.

A future war, Mr. Editor, will cause the employment of a considerable number of large steamers, many will be armed with mortars and howitzers; consequently a steady and practised detachment of gunners will be required, otherwise accidents will happen, and people will burn their fingers?

The seamen entered on board the Excellent for instruction will have quite enough to do to perfect themselves in the drill and practice of that particular nature of ordnance used on board of ships of the line, frigates, and sloops; and as far as such part of Artillery instruction goes, that establishment is of infinite service to the Navy; but more ought not to be attempted. It is now ascertained that sailors are deterred from entering on board that ship, from the variety and tediousness of the drills they have to undergo; indeed, what they do learn beyond their NAUTICAL ART is soon forgotten after being paid off.

I would therefore, Mr. Editor, propose that an increase of two companies be made to the Marine Artillery, and that no time be lost in doing so, for an Artillery man cannot be made in a day. The expense to the country would be trifling—the benefit great.

THE NAVAL MANUAL.

SIR,—I was rather astonished at some remarks by Tristram, that appeared in one of your Gazettes of last month, on Capt. Glascock's "Manual," and although I have not yet seen, I have no doubt, from the known talent and experience of that gentleman, that it will be a most useful and clever production, but even with this conviction I cannot see how it is to be of the greatest use to MASTERS above all others. As to its making us competent to the duties of our superiors, I cannot understand, as every Master is, or ought to be, that before he is placed in so responsible a situation, and which practical knowledge alone will impart, nor can I imagine how it is to give us that which, in Tristram's opinion, we are so deficient of, viz. the taste, cut, and system of an officer. If by taste he means gentlemanly feeling, it will be found to exist as much in the breast of a Master, as in that of any other class of officers; but unfortunately, from the nondescript situation we hold in the service, our feelings are too frequently wounded; and if it is professional taste that is meant, I hope we have all too much good taste to commit a lubberly action. I suppose by cut, we may read dandyism: that I will allow we are not much addicted to. I commonly wear a coat, the price of which is 2*l.* 10*s.*, and, having a family, not yet paid for, how much less could I afford seven guineas to a fashionist for the same garment. As for system, we must be more systematical than any other officer, having various observations to take and work during the twenty-four hours, and to wind up chronometers most systematically at a certain period every day. As to our being greater personages than we think ourselves, we are certainly considered somebody in cases of danger and necessity, but that over, the service we may have rendered, together with ourselves, are forgotten. A Master but rarely derives the credit that is his, and only his, due. Now for the "coup de maitre," that Tristram states is comprised in the knowledge of the barometrical indications, and which he asserts not one of us in twenty understand. Now I am not twenty years a Master, but I do not think there is one out of twenty that does not possess the knowledge, and pay the greatest attention to the indications of the barometer and thermometer, when those instruments are within their reach. If you will be kind enough to give these my humble remarks a spare corner in your Gazette, you will greatly oblige your most obedient, being a subscriber to your Gazette, and

A MASTER, R.N., Employed.

[We have given insertion to this lame and impotent production, in the hope that some of our able correspondents will bring this "somebody" to book, and punish him for his self-sufficiency and feeble and lobberly attack on a talented writer. "Somebody," we predict, will turn out to be nobody when placed in a perilous position. We would not for a trifle stand in his shoes if Tristram should happen to take him in hand. The words marked in italics will serve to show how profitably our "employed Master" has employed his literary leisure in learning to indite logical letters.—ED.]

CAPE BRETON STEAMER.

SIR,—I have much pleasure in transmitting, for insertion in your journal the accompanying prospectus (see Advertisement) of an engraving, representing the Cape Breton during the severest part of the hurricane, and to notice the remarkable fact, that a steam-vessel of the smallest class rode out, or, in other words, weathered out the storm, and succeeded in reaching a port in the Channel, after being 1200 miles to the westward of Scilly during the very worst month in the year for storm and tempest (November). When the new sloop of war Star, having the Halifax mail on board in the immediate neighbourhood of the Cape Breton, lost masts, guns, boats, decks clean swept, together with her Commander and one watch, consisting of twelve men, and almost in a sinking state, compelled to bear up for one of the West India islands. At the same period, and nearly all in the same parallel of latitude, upwards of seventy sail of merchant ships either foundered or became water-logged, the survivors of the crews, when taken off the wrecks, had undergone the severest hardships, and only sustained life by feeding on the dead bodies of those among them who had perished from fatigue and starvation, some of them for as long a period as twenty-one days.

HALF-PAY OF THE NAVY.

SIR,—If ever a nation stood indebted to a particular class of the population for exactions in the common cause, this country owes to her Navy a debt of gratitude which can never be overpaid. In the darkest periods of our history and crisis, when the sun of Britain was obscured by clouds and tempest, her Navy has ever risen like the genius of the people, dispelled the storm, and bidden her shine forth again, bright and glorious amongst the nations of the earth. Then surely it cannot be the wish of our great nation—of that community which proudly bears the name of English men, to see those who have fought her battles degraded by poverty by being placed on an insufficient half-pay, nor in the receipt of less income whilst on active service than the officers of other nations, which is the case as regards the Navies of France and America. It is only necessary then to be known that, after fighting our battles, protecting our shores, giving security to our laws and constitution, by averting the horrors of warfare from our native land, these brave men, wounded and infirm, have not been duly rewarded, but are suffered to pine under the cold shadow of neglect, after having wasted their best days, and spilled their blood freely in the service of their country. Are we then to attribute such unmerited treatment towards our veteran Tars, to Mr. Hume and a few others like the honourable member for Middlesex having stated in Parliament that the Army and Navy were already too well paid? I am sure those gentlemen will entertain a contrary opinion on inquiring. We find that many ordinary mechanics are better paid than officers in the Navy, particularly Masters and Lieutenants. No man can accumulate an independency from his pay, and if the fortunes of war enables him to enrich himself, it is at the expense of the enemy, and not at the country's, at the risk of his own life, and that of his gallant companions in arms. So that, let a man even be proverbially an economist, (a character not likely to assimilate with that of a British seaman,) he cannot guard against the contingencies in life, or secure at his death to an orphan family the blessings of independence. Upon whom, then, does the obligation rest to become the almoners and friends of these—upon whom but the country? —that country in whose service they have incurred the evils which thus render it necessary that adequate compensation should be made. Now, Sir, under such circumstances, every man of just and proper feelings must admit that the officers in the Navy have claims on the country for an increase of pay such as may support them rank respectably, and at least an equal compensation with that of the Army. Many of our Naval officers having served during the whole of the French Republican wars have been nearly half a century in the service, and, owing to the long peace, have not been promoted; then, in order that merit should not go unrewarded for past services, I shall beg leave, with all due deference, to submit to the consideration of the Lords of the Admiralty, that officers who have held their present rank in the Navy thirty two years should be allowed to retire, that is to say, Captains with the rank and pay of Flag Officers, Commanders with the rank and pay of Captains, Lieutenants and Masters with the rank and pay of Commanders, a boon which in my opinion they well merit, and which no doubt would have beneficial effects in the Navy in bringing forward younger officers in the event of another war. Under every circumstance, then, we yet hope to see at no distant period the necessary emendments made in the existing regulations.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1836.

Public regard having been directed, by a part of His Majesty's Speech, to the important subject of our Navy, it may be satisfactory to give the exact amount of our Naval force in commission on the 4th instant, when the necessity for its increase was stated from the throne. It was as follows at that date:—

One ship of 120 guns; one of 92 guns; two of 84 guns; five of 74 to 78 guns. Six of these are employed in the Mediterranean, one at Canada, one at Corunna, and one at Lisbon. Total, Nine sail of the line only in perfect equipment for service.

Guard Ships, &c. in our Naval Ports,

Three of 120 guns, rigged but not manned for sea; one of 74 guns fitting out for the West Indian station with a reduced equipment of men and guns; one of 52 guns, a training ship for gun exercise.

Frigates, &c. in actual employment.

Seven of 50 to 52 guns; three of 42 to 46 guns; fifteen of 24 to 36 guns; thirty-five sloops of war of 16 to 20 guns (commanded by "Commanders;") four steam vessels ditto ditto

five surveying vessels ditto ditto

forty-six smaller vessels, such as packets, cutters, schooners, &c. commanded by Lieutenants.

Total in Commission,

Nine sail of the line (all on service abroad),

Three Guard Ships (first rates),

One 74 fitting,

One a training ship for great gun exercise,

Making altogether Fourteen Sail of the Line.

Fifteen smaller class frigates.

Thirty-five sloops of war.

Grand Total 135 Sail.

We are not prepared, at this moment, to show the exact force that either France or Russia has in commission ready for immediate service, but we are assured, as regards ships of the line and heavy frigates, that they have equipped and ready, each of these powers far outnumbers us; and when the superior facility possessed by both of these states to man their fleets at the instant is borne in mind, it well behoves us to be ever prepared beforehand to resist, by our Navy, any injury that may be intended to our country, or any insult that may be offered to our flag; for, though the system which was so wisely commenced last year, of keeping a correct Registry of our Seamen, will we are confident eventually secure to us the means of equipping our ships of war with the same promptitude which those powers at this moment possess; yet it must be recollected that our new regulation is but in its infancy, and that it will take time to make it work in a manner whereby our fleets can be manned with the same readiness as those of Russia or France,—the one being so under a species of conscription, the other under an arbitrary rule.

To guard, then, against the possibility of being taken by surprise by the Navy of either of these powers, it well behoves us to keep ours in a state equal at least to either of theirs; for what would become of our commerce if, with but ten sail of the line ready for actual service, and the greater part of these in the Mediterranean, or elsewhere, as is at this time the case, a fleet of a dozen first and second rates, and as many large frigates, either French or Russian, were suddenly to make their hostile appearance in the Channel, in consequence of any unlooked-for misunderstanding? Would not every Merchant ship, that might be returning to our shores, at once fall into their hands? perhaps to the extent in value altogether, in a few weeks only, of a million or more Sterling.

These important considerations ought to weigh well with such of our Legislators as are constantly urging the reduction of our Naval Establishments, forgetful that the time may arrive when these insignificant savings of a few thousands a-year in the Estimates, by such impolitic measures as they recommend, might prove the sacrifice of millions in money, and in National Renown, beyond all calculation, at a future and perhaps at no very remote date. In the words of an able contemporary we will impress on the minds of those mistaken economists, that there is far more of assured security to the peace of the world in a powerful, well appointed, and well commanded English fleet than in any Alliance, however intimate with foreign states, which such states may break or withdraw from, either to suit their interests or their pleasure. Let us, then, confide all our hopes of protection from injury and from insult to our unconquered, and, as we trust, our unconquerable, Navy, and let us never begrudge the necessary expenditure for keeping that Navy superior, as they have ever been, to those of every other nation in the world.

The Ships proposed for the augmentation of the Navy will be commissioned as soon as the Estimates are voted. We understand there will be four Line-of-Battle Ships commissioned at Portsmouth, the same number at Plymouth, and two at Sheerness; but we have heard of no Frigate except the Pique. Three Line-of-Battle Ships, whose period of service has nearly expired are expected from the Mediterranean to be paid off.

We closed our observations last week, on the subject of Reform in the Army, with Strictures taken from the London Review on the privileges of the Foot Guards. In reference to the same article, we shall now proceed to remark on the Reviewer's notice of the Cavalry. And here let us state that, however able the Author may have exposed many abuses and defects in our system of the general management of that arm—whatever confidence he may feel in relying on the illiberal and unmerited assertion of the historian of the Peninsular War, we cannot subscribe to the conclusion he arrives at respecting the character of the British Cavalry, and the position in which that Force is held "in the estimation of the world."

On this point we care little for the unaccountable prejudice of the gallant Historian, with whom the Reviewer seems so readily to sympathise. Our judgment is founded not only upon the opinions of experienced Foreigners, but on the corroborating testimony of many individuals, participators in most of the Cavalry affairs of the Peninsula, and such as have had opportunities of witnessing the active operations of foreign troops and of comparing our Cavalry with that of most of the Continental Armies.

The truth is, the French Cavalry in Spain and Portugal was generally very superior in point of numbers to ours; from this cause, the latter was, for the most part, precluded having any marked influence in the battles of the Peninsula, and hence, probably, the idea of the supposed inferiority of the British horse. Our columns will not admit of entering into detail; but, in proof of our assertions, we beg to refer the reader to Colonel Napier's own work, as well as to the narratives of the various Cavalry encounters given by other writers, especially that of "An Officer of Dragoons," on whose veracity we can rely, in the pages of the United Service Journal. With him we feel inclined to agree "that, during the period of the Peninsular campaigns, in which the French Cavalry always outnumbered the British in the ratio of two, three, four, or even five to one, nothing of consequence was achieved by the French; and when the numbers became equal, and, finally, when we were superior in number, the French Cavalry became helpless, unless well supported by Infantry."

Were it necessary to go back to an earlier period, we might cite, as an instance, the conduct of a Regiment of Light Dragoons at Villiers en Couche, and the achievements of the Horse in general at Waterloo, notwithstanding the manner in which it was there employed, are later evidences of the great capabilities and high character of the British Cavalry.

The author of the article in the London Review, after enumerating the number of Cavalry Regiments in the Service, and the complement of each, objects to the proportion of Officers to men, and proposes somewhat a new organisation, with a most sweeping reduction indeed. His inference as to the reason for this disproportion is scarcely fair. "A number of Officers," he says, "not only quite useless and most expensive to the country, but detrimental to their efficiency as military corps. The motive of this admits of no doubt. It is to provide situations for a number of the sons of the wealthy and influential." Speaking of the present establishment of a Regiment, he observes—

"If such a body were formed into a squadron instead of a regiment, and officered accordingly as two troops, commanded by a Major, it would be much more efficient, both as a force, and as a school to form officers, and, indeed, as a skeleton on which to form a regiment in the event of a war. Each officer in such a body would have a responsibility, and duties to perform in the command of men; whereas, at present, the young officers have neither. For them it is a mere lounge of dissipation and extravagance, and, with very few exceptions, is of no avail for the sole object for which the maintenance of so expensive an establishment is defended, namely, to form a number of efficient officers."

In the event of necessity, such an arrangement as forming the whole into one or two squadrons of Service, and leaving the remaining troops en cadre, to be filled up as quickly as possible, would no doubt take place; but it must be remembered that neither the Cavalry man nor horse is formed in a day, the man requiring twelvemonths at least to perfect him in his duties; and it is to provide for such an emergency as a sudden war, that the Regiments of Cavalry are composed of their present establishment. There are only six troops in each corps, having a Captain, Lieutenant, and Cornet, with about forty horses per troop; the number of men must always exceed that of horses, to allow for Officers' servants, barrack guards, escorts, and a variety of other purposes. These, therefore, form but the nucleus of a war establishment, which, for a Regiment, would be augmented to probably ten troops of from ninety to a hundred horses each. We can well imagine that, on a superficial observation, so great a proportion of Officers may seem unnecessary, but when it is considered that this disparity is to provide for the emergency above stated, the arrangement appears more consistent, and we can hardly think it possible to make a reduction without impairing the efficiency and neglecting the prospective advantages of so valuable an arm. As for the idleness, dissipation, and extravagance of the Officers, that is another question, and must depend entirely on the character of the Commanding Officer with whom these young men have to deal. The Cavalry Officer, as well as the Private, has enough professional occupation to employ him during the day, and if he is permitted to neglect his duty, his superior is to blame. We must here break off for the present, but will resume the subject in our next, when our attention will also be given to the Household Cavalry and Staff.

We have so many times inveighed against the evil policy which brought about the reduction of that fine body of men, the Marine Artillery, at the very time when, owing to the introduction of steam-vessels into the Navy, their services would be more useful and necessary than ever, particularly when discharging shells, carcases, or rockets from such vessels, that we should not at present revert to it, had not a letter (which appears in our Correspondence) reminded us, that a favourable occasion now exists, whilst increasing our Naval force, to place this portion of the Marine corps upon its former footing. The men are probably not altogether lost beyond recal, having principally entered into other corps, (a great many into the Navy as Ordinary seamen,) and the inducement of a small bounty, with liberty to exchange, would probably bring more than half of the old hands back to their former duty. The Officers, too, are for the most part available, and certainly we are, that no better policy could be adopted by the Admiralty, than to reinstate this truly valuable and efficient corps in its former strength, and if need be to increase it; embarking detachments in steam-vessels, of adequate strength, to perform all the duties at the guns, and also, in small parties, on board of line of battle ships and frigates, sufficient to man one or two light field pieces, for accompanying landing parties, and performing the duty of the ordinary Marines at other times.

The death of Admiral Sir Thomas Pakenham has made another vacancy in the Grand Crosses of the Bath, thus leaving two Naval Grand Crosses less than there were on the 1st of January, 1833, and one less than the original number of Naval Grand Crosses on the enlargement of the Order in January 1815, when, we believe, the number of the First Class was limited to eighteen Naval Officers, and forty-two Military.

We regret that we have not yet received all the details which we were promised, relative to the other two Classes of this distinguished Order, as well as those of the Royal Guelphic Order, but we hope to get them at an early period, and when we shall have much pleasure in laying them before our readers. In answer to some of our correspondents, who have doubted the accuracy of our former statements, we are enabled to assure them that, on re-examining the analysis we gave, we find we were generally, and indeed we may say almost minutely, correct, and that there is at this moment still thirty-eight Naval Knight-Commanders of the Bath less than the original number on the first institution of this Class of the Order in January 1815, and eight less than on the 1st of January, 1833.*

As regards the Royal Guelphic Order, also, we are glad to know that we have been equally accurate, and that, as we stated, the numbers, on the first day of this year, stood three hundred and fifteen Military Officers, and fifty-four Naval. We hope soon to be enabled to publish in detail the names, rank, seniority, &c., of each Class of both Orders.

Believing, as we unfeignedly do, that the Government have every desire to ameliorate the condition of our gallant Officers of the United Service in every way that is in their power, we are led to submit to the consideration of the Commander-in-Chief at the Horse Guards, and of the First Lord of the Admiralty, the justice of recommending that some important amendments should be made in the existing system of Widows' Pensions.

Amidst the several alterations which are so loudly called for (and amongst which, it has been suggested to us, that the amount of pension should be arranged according to the length and value of the Officer's service), there is none more necessary, or more imperiously demanded, than that of extending the trifling grant now given to the Widow to the children also of the deceased Officer, upon their mother's death, or upon her second marriage, to be continued to them, if boys, till they are twenty-one years of age; and if girls, as long as it is shown by the certificate of the Justice of the Peace and Clergyman of the Parish in which they may reside, that they are unmarried, and are really and truly in need of this aid. We are led to make these remarks the more from having lately seen a public subscription for the daughters of a deceased Admiral, because, as his wife had died before him, his children were not entitled to even a part of the small stipend of a hundred and twenty pounds a-year, which she could have claimed for the support of her family, upon her husband's death, had she survived him. Thus, the unfortunate children were left in a state of perfect destitution!—Ought this to be? We ask of our generous countrymen, and we ask it more especially of those Legislators who are ever ready to cut down the poor Officer's miserable pittance? and we put this question the more boldly, because it must be borne in mind, that this gallant Admiral, together with every other Naval Officer, had, in point of fact, paid towards the Pension Fund from the hour that he entered the Service. And yet a large proportion of it, we believe nearly half a million, was most unjustly, if not illegally, appropriated, as it has been shown us, to other purposes some years since. It is not too late, however, we trust, for a Reformed Parliament to cause justice to be done, as regards the extraordinary application of these monies, and we anxiously hope that Government will yet see that these funds be restored to the purposes for which they were intended, and for which their accumulation was expressly formed, and that, by these means, a more liberal regulation regarding the pensions to the Widows and Children of deceased Officers may be carried into effect at an early period. This is the more necessary, because the small rate of pay enjoyed by our Officers prevents the possibility of their putting by any thing for the future support of their wives and families; and even were there not those funds, to which we have alluded, wherewith to aid the granting the proposed relief to the unhappy Widows and destitute children of our brave and faithful defenders, we are sure the British Nation are too just and too generous to refuse to them this inconsiderable boon as a solace to their afflictions, when they have lost their best protectors.

The Honourable Member for Middlesex has again, we have seen with much satisfaction, brought forward his motion regarding Light-Houses. We wish, however, that he had accepted the offer of the President of the Board of Trade, and have allowed this question to have been carried through all its stages by the Government. Perhaps Mr. Hume may yet see the propriety of doing this, as we fear there is but little chance of a successful termination to these inquiries, unless Ministers will themselves undertake the correction of the existing abuses. With regard to the Private Light-Houses which there seems to be so much difficulty about, our opinion has always been, that the amount of compensation to be paid to their proprietors should be assessed by a Jury, precisely as the value of lands are judged of that may be needed for improving a public highway. If we are not misinformed, the Court of Chancery pronounced against the legality of those grants very many years ago, but unhappily the desire to oblige a few influential persons, from time to time, has caused their continued renewals by successive Ministers down to the present period. One family, it is said, has received above a million since they first obtained their grant in the year 1673. In one or more instances it has been stated, that after it had been determined that a particular Light-House was even injurious to our shipping, from its being misplaced, and therefore ought to be discontinued; yet, rather than thus render useless the Patent of the Lord of the soil on which it stood, such Light has been permitted to be shown as before. There was a clause, we believe, in most, if not the whole of these original leases, directing "that all surplus receipts should be devoted to marine charities." Has this we would ask, been ever fulfilled or not? If not, of course, every deed is at once voidable in which this clause has been inserted. The surplus fund of these private Lights at this time we find, by the evidence before the Committee, to exceed sixty thousand per annum! What becomes of this vast sum? Has any part of it been ever applied to marine charities? or does the whole of it go into the pockets of the lucky Proprietors? The period is at length arrived, we trust, when these gross abuses must and will be put an end to; and we sincerely hope that Ministers will induce Mr

Hume to allow them to conduct this measure in Parliament, which he has so laudably introduced, and by these means insure to our shipping interest that relief from these unjust imposts which they ought long ago to have experienced.

In the House of Commons a Bill was read the first time on Tuesday, supported by numerous petitions from the sea-ports and other parts of the United Kingdom, for compensating Mr. Buckingham for the severe losses he sustained in India. A sailor himself, Mr. Buckingham has always powerfully advocated the sailors' cause, and, convinced that he will ever be found the firm friend of the Navy, we for that reason think it no less our duty than it is our inclination to use our efforts in his behalf. It is hard to say whether the conduct Mr. Buckingham experienced in India, or the treatment he has received from a portion of the press in England, is the most cruel and unjustifiable. Every man who undertakes to correct and expose public abuses, must make his mind up to endure the virulence of some whose business it is to support them; but, as regards this gentleman, party spirit has been even extended to personal abuse. We can easily imagine that the East India Directors feel acutely on this subject, for the exposures they provoked have been the main cause of breaking up the monopoly they had so long enjoyed; and when we view the obstinate refusal to perform a tardy justice, and the ungracious act of withholding it until it is absolutely forced upon them by the legislature and the voice of the country, we must suppose that orders for the line of conduct pursued towards Mr Buckingham at Calcutta emanated from Leadenhall-street, and not from the officials in India, as has been generally believed. It grieves us to have so frequently to allude to the conduct of the East India Directors in withholding justice even from their own servants; and we hope that, whenever it is thus obstinately displayed, they may be compelled by the legislature to the performance of that which it appears their own sense of rectitude cannot comprehend.

In our paper of the 6th inst., we published some calculations, taken from official documents, returned by order of Parliament, to prove that the difference of the cost of building two line-of-battle ships in the same Dock-yard, of equal tonnage or weight, was upwards of 60001. in favour of Captain Symmonds, the present Surveyor of the Navy. The Hampshire Telegraph has volunteered some argument to impugn this by quoting an imaginary data to prove, what? why, that the Vernon 50 gun frigate is produced at more expense than a ship of equal size and force in the French Navy! This may or may not be the case, and of course will greatly depend upon the relative price of wages, materials, &c., in the two countries; but what that has to do with the argument in question we are at a loss to imagine. A ship may be built cheaper in the Russian ports or in America than in England, but it is a curious line of argument to assume this, when we are comparing the expense of two vessels, built in the same country, under precisely the same circumstances as to the cost of materials and labour. We shall not enter into the merits of the insinuation put forth by our contemporary respecting the motive which has induced a public servant to falsify his official return; we do not believe that they exist, and surely they should not be made by such a respectable journal, upon slight authority. The article altogether is of very bad taste, and has evidently been poured upon us by a contemporary by the same parties who are continually misleading and prejudicing the public as to the performances of the present Surveyor's ships. One thing is certain, that should an investigation be thought necessary (whether public or private) as to the expenses of the present mode of construction compared with the old one, the result must depend not on the assertions of anonymous or imaginary authority, but upon the official statements of the Dock-yard officers, who have the only means of making the required returns.

We have been favoured, by an old correspondent, with the perusal of several letters from officers in the fleet at Malta, denouncing, in unmeasured terms, the very partial statements which appeared in the English journals respecting the trials between the Vernon and Barham. Our readers may recollect that we cautioned them at the time from placing any reliance upon the accounts published, purporting to be from officers of the squadron, because we thought we could discover evident symptoms of home manufacture in the style and tenor of them. It would appear that our conclusions were correct, for the Vernon still maintains her high character in the opinion of the fleet, notwithstanding the result of the late trials; and was recently remarked at Malta, and should have remained by themselves, that the ship having already established her character on all points of sailing, in rough and fine weather, upon a previous occasion, last March, any falling off could not detract from the merits of the vessel herself, but from the manner of trimming or managing her, or probably from the foulness of the bottom. It is the general opinion that upon the late trial she was not so much by the stern as on the former one, and although she displayed great superiority over the Barham whenever the breeze freshened, particularly against a head sea (the very situation in which her detractors have asserted she failed heretofore), still it was the theme of observation on board the Hermes that she did not sail so fast as on former occasions, which was evident from that ship holding a much better place in the contest. These letters intimate that the official report will be in favour of the Vernon, and there does not appear to be a difference of opinion in the squadron upon the merits of the two ships, taking their several qualifications as efficient men of war, as the Vernon outcarries and buries the Barham, without the least appearance of labour, and (what is of more consequence) without heeling beyond the vertical section of the angle within which her lee or weather guns can be horizontally pointed. We need hardly point out the absurdity of putting forth such statements as these in question, which were sure to call for comment and exposure when read in the fleet, and only revert upon the party who invented them. The letters we have seen deny the possibility of any such accounts having emanated from any officer of the fleet, for the Barham's, although warmly attached to their ship, do not deny the superiority of the Vernon in every point as a man-of-war, and are far too honourable to put forth false statements, even if the Hermes were not present as umpire to furnish an official report.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer, in reply to the application of the Solicitor to the Committee appointed by the Duke of York's creditors, says that Government would not be warranted in adopting the course suggested by the creditors, unless upon the authority of a legal decision—namely, for the appropriation of the Cape Breton mines.

Death of the Mother of Napoleon.—Madame Marie Laetitia Bonnaparte died at Rome, at one o'clock in the morning of the 2nd of this month. She was born on the 24th of August, 1750, at Ajaccio, of the Ramolini family, and had lived at Rome ever since 1814. From the time of her fall at the Villa Borghese she had lost the use of her limbs, and half reclined night and day upon a couch; her eye-sight had failed her for several years past; she took very little share in the passing events of the world, and admitted to her society only a small number of intimate friends. A lady constantly watched by her bed-side, and M. Bologna, her Secretary, once an officer in the old Guard, used to read the journals to the august invalid, to speak to her of France, and to make her live again in the times gone by. Her appearance gave a painful impression to the few visitors who were admitted to her palace; her frame had become so attenuated that life seemed almost extinct; and yet, at the name of France, of the Emperor, of her children, the octogenarian lady revived, there seemed to be thrones still around her, there was still a powerful voice on her lips, and the lightning of Napoleon's look to her eyes. Ever since the fall of the Empire the mother, whose children had mounted so many thrones, had received no other news from her family than those of mourning. The last blow that struck her was the death of the Princess de Montfort, to whom she was particularly attached. Few women have had so many favours of fortune heaped upon them, and few have had to drink more deeply of the dregs of the cup of misfortune. On the 27th Jan. she fell into a cold stupor. Cardinal Fesch, her brother, was summoned; a slight amendment took place after two or three days; the sacraments were, however, administered; her malady returned with redoubled violence on the 1st of this month, and on the 2nd she expired, retaining her faculties to the last, and sinking to rest calmly and peacefully. She, the woman who had produced Napoleon, died in solitude and in exile, but at the foot of the Capitol.

The Hon. Col. de Roos and Capt. Drinkwater, who were attached, pro tem., to Lord Durham's embassy, have returned to England.

The Standard says that an address to the King against the appointment of Dr. Hampden to be Regius Professor at Oxford, has been signed by more than 70 Tutors and Fellows, and transmitted to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Lord Brougham.—His Lordship is still at Brougham Hall, with little prospect of being able to encounter the fatigues of a Parliamentary campaign. The unceasing exertions, mental and bodily, to which he has subjected himself for many years, has produced considerable general debility, which is now aggravated by inflammation in the prostate gland. Though retired for a season from public life, his influence with his late colleagues appears to be undiminished. Two recent valuable appointments have been avowedly bestowed upon his Lordship's nominees.

Colonel Anson was returned on Monday for Stoke-upon-Trent without opposition. In case of a dissolution it is expected that Sir George Chetwynd will supersede Mr. Davenport.

Colonel Dickson, who has recently left the head quarters of the British Auxiliary Legion, and returned home dissatisfied, was, two days ago, closeted for an hour or two, at the Horse Guards, with the Military Secretary of the Adjutant-General.—Morning Herald.—[The Adjutant-General has not a Military Secretary.—Ed.]

Close of Lady Kirkwall's Case.—The jury, on Wednesday, found that "Lady Kirkwall is of unsound mind and is incapable of managing herself and her affairs; and that she became so on the 25th of Dec. 1831."

The Missley Whale Ships.—The Abram, from Davis Straits, arrived in the Humber on Sunday, the crews of on board amounting, with her own, to 92 men, all well. Two men only had died. Captain Wallis, of the Dordo and Captain Colclay, of the Mary Frances, whose ship had been lost, returned by the Abram, and arrived at Hull on Saturday night in the Pegasus steamer.

The Earl of Fife, on returning to Fife House, from an airing, met with a serious accident. His horse started and fell on his right side, and his Lordship's foot being last in the stirrup, his leg and ancle were considerably bruised; he is now doing well.

The dignity of Baronet of Great Britain is about to be conferred on Lieut.-Col. Henry Fairfax, the only son of the late Admiral Sir W. G. Fairfax, Knight Baroneret, Captain of the flag ship in the memorable battle of Camperdown; on Sir T. Brisbane, of Mackerstoun Roxburghshire; Sir Henry Bethune, of Kilconquhar Fifeshire; J. G. Sawter, Esq.; Rev. J. B. Mill; Sir F. A. Roe; and J. A. Carnac, Esq., Dep. Chairman of the East India Company.

Among the several candidates for the Government of Madras we understand that Mr. Stuart Mackenzie is the most probable to fill that appointment.

On Sunday last two men having permission to see a convict in the Hulks off Woolwich, whom they pretended to be a relative of, contrived to slip an instrument into one of their hands. One of the keepers a short time after observed a convict particularly watchful, which induced him to examine their chains, when it was discovered they had been unfastened at each end. This timely discovery no doubt prevented much bloodshed.

Death of a Waterloo Hero.—On the 12th of Feb. died at Strathfieldsaye, at old age, Copenhagen, the horse which carried the Duke of Wellington on the field of Waterloo. He was foaled about the time of the battle of Copenhagen, from which he got his name, and was remarkable for gentleness and spirit united. He lost an eye some years before his death, and has not been used by the noble owner for any purpose during the last 10 years. By the orders of his Grace a salute was fired over his grave, and thus he was buried as he had lived, with military honours. This horse has long been a great attraction to strangers, who were accustomed to feed him over the rails with bread, and the Duke himself preserved a special regard for him, which cannot be wondered at upon considering that he bore him for 16 hours safe through one of the grandest battles in the history of the world. The late amiable Duchess was likewise particularly attached to him, and wore a bracelet made of his hair.

The Duke of Wellington may be often seen at the Senior United dining on a joint; and on one occasion, when he was charged fivepence instead of a shilling for it, he bestirred himself till the odd threepence was struck off. The native was obvious; he took the trouble of objecting, to give his sanction to the principle.—Quarterly Review.

EAST INDIA COMPANYS' MARITIME OFFICERS.

On Wednesday a Special Court of Proprietors of India Stock was held at the India House, for the purpose of proceeding to a ballot, demanded by the Court of Directors, upon the resolution passed on a show of hands at the last General Court, and which was published in our paper of the 6th instant. The ballot commenced at 11 and closed at 6 o'clock, when the glasses were delivered over to the scrutineers, Mr. Wallace and Mr. Fielder being appointed for the Court of Directors, and Mr. Weeding and Mr. T. Barnie for the excluded officers. At seven the scrutineers returned into Court, and reported that it appeared that there were

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, 15th Feb.—The only business transacted was the presentation of a few petitions, and the postponement of motions by Lord Wharncliffe and Wynford.

TUESDAY, 16th Feb.—Nothing was done beyond the presentation of some petitions. The house adjourned till Thursday.

THURSDAY, 18th Feb.—Lord WYNFORD moved for a Committee to inquire into the causes of the distressed state of agriculture.—Lord MELBOURNE said he should not oppose the motion; the Government could be no party to any measure which would propose to tamper with the currency, either by a greater issue of paper, or by depreciating the standard.

FRIDAY, 19th Feb.—The Marquis of LONDONDERRY moved for certain papers connected with affairs of Spain, which Lord MELBOURNE said should be produced.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 15th Feb.—Mr. ROEBUCK moved for a copy of the instructions to Lord Gosford and the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the grievances of Lower Canada. Sir G. GREY was of opinion that the production of the papers would operate injuriously to the public service. Mr. ROEBUCK declined to press his motion.—Mr. ROEBUCK then brought forward his motion for the appointment of a Committee to inquire into the administration of justice in the Mauritius. The hon. member entered at length into the details of the case, in the course of which he charged almost all the public functionaries of the island with holding slave property contrary to law. Sir G. GREY defended the course which the Government had pursued. After an extended discussion, in which Dr. Lushington, Mr. F. Buxton, &c., took part, the house divided. For the motion, 69; against it, 227.—On the motion of Mr. P. THOMSON a Select Committee on the Port of London was appointed.—Mr. SCHOLEFIELD obtained leave to bring in a Bill for the relief and employment of the destitute poor of Ireland.—Mr. HUME moved for a continuation of Accounts of Surcharges connected with the Assessed Taxes, and said that some measure ought to be proposed to remedy the evils and annoyances of surcharges.—Mr. C. BULLER presented a petition from Mr. Vigors, praying for an inquiry into the elections for the county of Carlow in 1832, 1833, and 1834, if there were to be full and complete inquiry on the subject.

TUESDAY, 16th Feb.—Mr. TUFNELL's Bill for granting compensation to Mr. Buckingham was read a first time.—Mr. T. ATWOOD presented a petition from Birmingham, with 20,000 signatures, praying the house to proceed with measures of reform.—Mr. HARDY, on renewing the discussion upon the petitions relating to the Carlow election, and the transactions of Mr. O'Connell with Mr. Raphael, read the correspondence which had taken place between the parties. The transaction he contended, was distinctly in its character a bargain, and he challenged the Attorney-General to say whether he had ever witnessed a more complete bargain than this appeared to be. The subject of it was a seat in Parliament. After a brief vindication of his own conduct, and an assertion of his independence as a member of that house, he concluded by moving, "That a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the circumstances of the traffic and agreement alleged to have taken place between R. O'Connell and A. Raphael, Esqr., touching the nomination and return of A. Raphael as one of the representatives in Parliament for the county of Carlow, at the last election for that county, and to report the minutes of evidence taken before them, with their observations thereon." Mr. O'CONNELL detailed the history of his connexion and proceedings with Mr. Raphael. As to the charge of pecuniary corruption the whole of it arose from the circumstance of Mr. Raphael being applied to for the expenses of his election. But he would appeal to any man whether the legitimate expenses must not be considerable. Mr. WARBURTON moved as an amendment to Mr. Hardy's motion, that it be an instruction to the Committee to ascertain how the money advanced by Mr. Raphael was expended, and to the circumstances connected therewith. The motion was eventually carried, amended as proposed by Mr. Warburton; and the names previously selected by conference between parties on each side of the house were added. Mr. HARDY said he had neither prepared the list nor intended to be on the Committee. Nominees were afterwards chosen.—Mr. Sergeant Wilde and Sir F. Pollock, making thirteen members. The following are the members of the committee:—Mr. Ridley Colborne, Chairman; Mr. Bannerman; Mr. W. Ord, Sir H. Ferguson; Mr. H. G. Ward; Mr. H. Warburton; Mr. Serg. Wilde (nominee), Lord F. Egerton; Sir C. H. Vere, Sir J. Buller, Mr. Barneby; Sir E. Wilmot, Sir F. Pollock (nominee).

WEDNESDAY, 17th Feb.—Col. THOMPSON gave notice that, in the Committee on the Commutation of Tithes (England) Bill, whatever amounts should be awarded as hereafter payable for tithes, should be paid one half in money, and one half as a rent-charge.—Mr. EWART moved the second reading of the Prisoners' Defence by Counsel Bill.—Sir E. WILMOT moved, as an amendment, that the Bill be read a second time that day six months. After some discussion there was a division—for the second reading, 179; against it, 85.—Mr. POULETT SCROPE obtained leave to bring in a Bill to prevent the use of threats and intimidation in the election of Members to serve in Parliament.—Mr. HAWES moved that it be an instruction to the Committee on the plans for the two Houses of Parliament, to inspect all the plans that had been submitted to the Commissioners, &c., and to receive the estimates of the said plans from such architects as might be willing to furnish them to the Committee. The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER opposed the motion, as being calculated to open the whole question regarding the plans. The House eventually divided on it—for the motion, 43; against it, 120.—Lord CLEMENTS moved for papers relative to the projected improvements of the river Shannon, and complained of the delay. Motion agreed to.

THURSDAY, 18th Feb.—Lord MORPETH moved for leave to bring in a Bill to amend the law regarding the appointment, &c. of the constabulary force in Ireland. The motion was agreed to after some discussion.—Mr. SHEIL brought forward his motion respecting the Lay Association for the protection of Church property in Ireland, and after entering into minute details, moved for a Select Committee to inquire into certain particulars of their conduct while endeavouring to enforce the payment of tithe. After an extended discussion the motion was conceded.

FRIDAY, 19th Feb.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER moved for a copy of the Treasurer's minute to carry into effect the offer of Lord Sidmouth to resign his pension of 3,000*l.* which he received for the duties he had performed as Speaker of that House. Lord DUDLEY STUART rose to bring forward the motion of which he had given notice, relative to the position of Russia with Turkey and Poland. A long discussion ensued, and part of the papers moved for were agreed to be produced.

Foreign Intelligence.

FRANCE.—It is stated that M. Thiers is to be the President of the Council and Minister for Foreign Affairs; the Doctrinaires, that is, MM. de Broglie, Guizot, and Duchatel, retiring. With M. Thiers are to be associated, M. Montalivet, Home Office; M. Sauzet, Justice; M. D'Argout, Finance; Marshal Maison, War; M. Passy, Commerce; M. de Montebello, Public Instruction; and Admiral Rosamel, Marine.—The trial of Fieschi and his accomplices has at last terminated. It appears to be doubtful whether the law will be stretched to the last fatal extremity in any case, save that of grand criminal's, Fieschi.

SPAIN.—By a letter dated 13th, from Bayonne, we learn the capture of Balmaseda by the Carlists. The intention of the enemy is evidently to form once more the siege of Bilboa. A despatch from Eguia states that he attacked this town on the morning of the 9th with musketry and cannon, the latter soon clearing away the gates. Preparing to make a more practical breach, Eguia at the same time summoned the garison to surrender, offering them honourable terms; these were accepted, and they marched out prisoners to the depot of Lazcano. Stores of all kinds have been captured in Balmaseda. The news from Catalonia, on the other hand, is that Cabrera has surprised and cut to pieces a Carlist band.

Several mails were still due at a late hour last night—from France, from Flanders, from Holland, and from Lisbon.

Theatres.

KING'S.—Laporte's embarrassments will not interfere with the arrangements for the ensuing season. Several gentlemen form a committee of management. Unless anything unforeseen happen, the theatre will certainly open next Saturday, with Bellini's opera of La Straniera, in which Madame Colloni, from the Milan theatre, La Scala, will make her debut as prima donna. Signor Cartagenova is the basso. Signor Winter is the primo tenore.

COVENT GARDEN.—The benefit given at this theatre for the Polish Refugees, on Saturday evening last, was attended by a numerous and fashionable audience; and as the prices of admission were on this occasion raised to the old charge, we make no doubt but a handsome sum was realised for the charity. The entertainments were not well selected, there was variety without merit. A new piece, called Sigismund Augustus, was performed for the first time, and proved, most deservedly, a decided failure. It is said to have been written expressly for the benefit by the author of Tom O'Shanter!—we doubt not, for a more stupid, defective, and uninteresting affair we have seldom, if ever, witnessed; and we were well pleased with the audience who notwithstanding the piece was offered for a benefit) had the good sense to visit it with their just damnation. Was it to fear lest this Irish affair should meet with the well-merited censure of the public press that the theatrical reporters were excluded from the theatre?—or do the directors of this charitable fund suppose that they benefit their cause by excluding THE PRESS, at all times their most willing and powerful advocate?

OLYMPIC.—There is no theatre in this metropolis doing better than the snug little Olympic. We have been informed that the receipts since Christmas have been considerably greater than during any former season. This is as it should be, for the fair and fascinating widow deserves to do well, she caters so liberally for her patrons. On Monday she gave us another novelty in the form of a one act burletta, written by Mrs. Planché, and entitled A Handsome Husband. It is one of those light and agreeable trifles which are admirably well suited to the theatre, and safe to attract for a dozen nights or so. The plot of the new burletta is highly amusing, though not sufficiently clear; it is also very improbable, and occasionally too complicated: indeed it possesses exactly the same fault as the burletta of The Daughter. Can it be supposed for an instant that a wife, although a blind one who has been restored to sight during the temporary absence of her husband, could be so far deceived as to submit to a stranger being palmed off on her for her husband when restored to sight? Would not the sound of his voice be sufficient to dispel the deception?—or, as a lady who sat near us on Monday evening most touchingly observed, "the very sound of his footfall would be quite enough.—I have had the misfortune to be deprived of sight, and know it would!" The chief merit of the burletta consists in a smartly written and amusing dialogue. The principal characters in the piece were well acted. Mrs. Wyndham, the lady restored to sight, found a most fascinating representative in Vestris: the archness with which she asks Henry (supposing him to be her husband) to look at her, and say how he likes her eyes, was of itself enough to save the piece; she gave her new song "What can Beauty" charmingly. We never saw James Vining act better. C. Mathews was amusing—gentlemanly, he is as yet but an amateur: in our humble judgment Mr. Liston should have played this character. Miss Lee looked charming enough to captivate any handsome man; and Mrs. Macnamara played, as she always does, sufficiently well to ensure the applause of all men of taste.

QUEEN'S.—The Moor of Toledo has been played during the week, but with partial success. The French drama of Pauvre Jacques is not to be compared to the piece now playing at the St. James's Theatre, neither is it one half as well acted.

ST. JAMES'S.—The Rough Diamond, produced at this theatre, is not sufficiently brilliant to prove attractive at the court end. Braham ought to get something like a decent company.

East India Intelligence.

Sir Henry Fane's levee, on Sept. 12, was very numerously attended. It was a very business like affair, and did not occupy above 25 minutes. Scarcely any introductions took place, the Com.-in-Chief satisfying himself with bowing to the different officers as they approached him.—Englishman, Sept. 14.

SOCOTRA.—The William Ritchie arrived at Bombay from Socotra on the 14th Aug., bringing back the survivors of the first detachment sent on the ill-fated expedition for the occupation of that island. The opinion now seems to be that the neighbourhood of Tamarida bay, where the detachment at first encamped, will always be unhealthy, as, with the exception of one slight elevation, it is, throughout the monsoon, a complete swamp.—Ibid.

The colour of the uniform of the Native Irregular Horse has been changed from its former colour of bright yellow to French grey, as more consistent with the service in which they are employed. The colour is the only alteration in the uniform, their vests are as flowing as ever, and precisely the same cut as formerly.

The officers of the Bombay Army, stationed at Baroda and Ahmedabad, have, severally and collectively, approved of the principles of Mr. Carnac's fund.

The following correspondence has taken place on the application of solitary confinement as a punishment for European and Native soldiers. "Sir,—I have the honour by direction of the Provincial Com.-in-Chief, to transmit the annexed copy of an application from the Indian Law Commission, and to desire that you will bestow upon it mature consideration, and, finally, transmit your opinion on the various points the despatch embraces, for submission to the Major-General. (Signed.) J. R. ORMSBY, Adj.-Gen. "The points to which the inquiries of the Commissioners are particularly directed, are, 1st. To what extent is the mode of punishment in question, chiefly a solitary confinement. 2nd. What are its effects on the health and spirits of the offenders, and, specially, what is the degree of dread with which it is regarded, and consequent efficacy in deterring from crime. (Signed.) J. MILLER, Sec. to Law Commission."

We understand Lieutenants Irving and Goad, 1st Light Cavalry, and Lieut. Martin, 52nd N.I., have been placed in arrest, and ordered to proceed to the Presidency, to be tried on charges preferred by the late Commander of the Forces.

Literary Notices.

Memoirs of the Life, Works, and Correspondence of Sir William Temple, Bart. By the Right Hon. T. P. Courtenay. 2 vols. Longman and Co.

THESE memoirs are most valuable additions to our political history and to our literature:—they are written in that clear and comprehensive style we had reason to expect from their very talented author. Few names are more generally known than that of Sir William Temple; his style is a favourite theme with all writers upon English literature, and his diplomacy and political maxims have been matters of general praise, whilst, as Mr. Courtenay states, neither his writings nor the circumstances of his life are familiarly known. These and other equally just considerations induced Mr. Courtenay to become Sir William's biographer, as well as to review his various writings. From the original papers which were in his possession, from other unpublished documents and correspondence in our archives, which have been hitherto strangely overlooked (for some of the most curious particulars in these volumes are acknowledged to have been taken from these neglected papers), and from his historical researches, assisted by several literary friends, Mr. Courtenay has been enabled to complete a work full of anecdote and information, and so pleasantly told as to entitle it to rank with the best memoirs in our language.

Ben Brace, the Last of Nelson's Agamemnons. By Capt. CHAMIER, R.N., Author of the "Life of a Sailor," &c. 3 vols., post 8vo. Richard Bentley.

THE plan upon which this new tale of the sea is founded, is one of the happiest that could have been adopted. Ben Brace, the hero, is the constant follower and coxswain of the great Nelson, so that, over and above the narrative of his own adventures ashore and afloat, the novel is rich in descriptions, given with the peculiar humour and character of a thorough seaman of the old school, of all the naval actions wherein Nelson won his immortal renown. Thus we have stirring recitals of the battles of the Nile, Copenhagen, Trafalgar, and others interspersed here and there by the yarns of Ben's messmates relative to the victories of Jervis, Duncan, and the heroic exploit of Lord Exmouth at Algiers. These are the public and historical features of the novel; but Ben is not only a faithful chronicler, he is a humourist to boot, and as his private life was one of a very extraordinary nature, abundant opportunity is afforded him of displaying his peculiar vein of description, whether he details the horrors of a sea-fight, the devastation of an ocean-storm, the misery of a wreck, or, on the other hand, the fun and frolic of a Saturday night afloat, the extravagant and ludicrous whims of Jack "capering ashore," or the preposterous galley-stories by which his moments of leisure are amused. "Ben Brace" is, in short, a thorough English story, presenting scenes and incidents which no other nation than our's can furnish, and the masterly sketch it contains of Nelson himself will go far to render it one of the most enduring of our modern works of fiction. It would, indeed, be impossible to cite a name more dear to Englishmen than that of the illustrious hero of the Nile, whose character, we do not hesitate to say, will be better understood by the touching and familiar exposition of it given in the present volumes, than by any more formal and laboured biography. In aid of this effect, Capt. Chamier has obtained from several original sources many particulars connected with the great hero which have never yet been publicly known, particularly with reference to his last moments at Trafalgar. All these are embodied with singular dramatic tact, of which, in a future number, we may find room for a few striking specimens (as the subject belongs peculiarly to our columns), and at the same time offer a few criticisms on professional points.

The Bar Sinister. 2 vols. Smith, Elder, and Co.

THERE is evidence of considerable talent in these entertaining volumes, which are the productions of, we believe, a young lady. The tale is that of an illegitimate, and we are told it is "founded in fact." He is kindly treated by his father, but brought up in ignorance of his real position until made acquainted with it by a schoolfellow, the real heir to the title of Glenmore. The mortifications, to which he becomes subsequently exposed, are sketched with great feeling, and though the novel cannot be classed as one of the best of the season it is well worthy of perusal, and affords promise that we may expect from the fair author a much better work if she will give to it a little closer attention.

Fifth Epistle to a Friend in Town, Warwickshire, and other Poems. By Chandos Leigh, Esq. Richard Bentley.

We are glad to see that, in spite of utilitarianism and political economy, and the capriciousness of public taste, poetry (the divine art) is not yet altogether dead among us. Here is a little volume, full of high and graceful thoughts, clothed in numbers which once seemed the exclusive property of Campbell and Rogers, (why should such men lay aside their lyres?) and written by a gentleman of ancient family and large possessions, whose name is all but worshipped in his native county—Mr. Leigh of Stoneleigh. Surrounded by a numerous tenantry, and having those constant demands upon his time and presence to which every true English lord of the soil is subjected, the writer before us finds leisure in the retirement of the library to entitle himself, in addition to his other claims to distinction, to the praise due to his success in literature. For ourselves, busied as we are in the stirring scenes of professional life, it has been a great, because a novel pleasure, to peruse the calm and contemplative verses of the poet before us; and we think the following extracts will induce our readers to sympathise in our enjoyment:—

"A PARK SCENE.

Hear trees most prodigal of shade
With umbrage deep embrown the glade;
Each venerable as the oak Whence oracles of old have spoke,
Of years and leafy honours full,
Romantic, grand, and beautiful!

Some grouped less closely, on the hill
Stretch out their giant arms at will
Or singly grace yon upland swell.
In massive majesty sedate
They stand, immoveable as fate;
Some in decay—how picturesque!
Others, like sylvan Pan, grotesque
Each fit to canopy a throne
Of royal priest—the druid's stone;
Each fit to be, so high they tower,
An emblem of the Assyrian power.
And where breaks out the mellow mould
In shapes fantastically bold,
Entwisted in the bank above
Vast trunks projecting form a cove
O'er the calm river, that below
Reflects each gently-pendent bough;
Though here and there, half grey, half green,
Ledges of rock may intervene,
While many a trailing plant upshoots
From chasms underneath the roots.

A COMPARISON.

A sun-impurpled glow
Is on the waveless sea,
And not a breeze doth blow,
And not a sail I see.
Like heaven's own pavement bright,
Is now the placid deep,
On which the farewell light
Of sunset loves to sleep.
Thus beautiful in death
Is youth's departing flush;
And lovely is the wreath
Where latest roses blush.

"AN OLD AVENUE.

I love an Avenue—'tis like the aisle
Of a cathedral—solemn, ample, grand,
If at the close a venerable pile,
Grey, turreted, the interspace command,
Looking tranquillity, as evening bland
Comes on, and to the rookery return,
Darkening the air in flights, a cawing band
But Memory's spirit doth within me burn
As you majestic elms in rank I now discern.
Each tree has its peculiar charms allied
To early recollections: on the bough
Of one I dared, a venturous wight, to ride;
And where another lar its arms doth throw Around, a verdant arbour framed below—
A bower of bliss indeed, though not so gay
As that which Spenser's pleasuring fancies show,
In which Acrasia, fair enchantress, lay,
And spread her net for idle knights through the long summer day.

...ressions of America during the years 1833, 1834, and ...835. By Tyrone Power, Esq. 2 vols. 8vo. Richard ...entley.

Mr. Power seems to have visited America in the ...us, frank, good-humoured spirit peculiar to his coun...men. He is not only in himself unassailable by those ...glish imps, the blue-devils, but is a powerful exorcist ...hem in their strongest holds. His gaiety is proof ...nst the tedium of a transatlantic voyage, and he lands ...he United States as merrily as if he were stepping ...a ball room; and though disposed to deal his jests ...his merriment about him, takes especial care that the ...ghter be provoked shall inflict no pain, nor bear evi...ce of aught but good fellowship and pure enjoyment. ...e result of his residence with brother Jonathan is a ...k which, in one word, may be characterised as anti-...llinpian; not that it is deficient in fun, but that ...rything is recorded in a spirit of kindliness, while the ...pitable endeavours of the Americans to render plea...: his sojourn among them, is honestly and gratefully ...reciated. For the sake of both countries, it is to be ...hed that the same course were pursued by their ...ective travellers.

The adventures which Mr. Power met with were many ...various. His travels in the States were extensive, ...h by land and water; now sailing on the vast rivers, ...anon crossing the wild and stupendous mountains. ...steam-boat anecdotes are extremely rich; and ...ether he details the humours of the Scotch and Irish ...grants scattered throughout the Union, or the whim...l peculiarities of the various kinds of Yankees with ...om his wanderings brought him in contact, he is every...re the same racy and entertaining comedian as in his ...nediate province, the boards of the theatre. Some...es, indeed, he lays aside his drollery, and becomes ...assioned and poetical in his descriptions of the wild ...ideur of American scenery, and demonstrates his ...acity, as a man of the world, in his estimate of trans...ntic manners, commerce, and institutions.

...n giving a specimen, however, of Mr. Power's present ...formance, we shall best consult the amusement of our ...ers by a touch of his humour, leaving the graver por...s of his work for the deliberate enjoyment of those ...o may be so fortunate as to possess the volumes.

Dec. 9th.—I engaged a pilot-boat to run down the ...t south as far as Savannah, which, although some hun...d miles out of my line, I had set down as a place to be ...n. My Charleston managers, two worthy industrious ...s, hearing of my route, begged of me to permit them ...ake the pilot-boat off my hands for the transport of their ...pany, on condition that I would halt in Savannah for ...e or four representations. To this I was readily moved ...their strongly-expressed desire, and gave up my little ...ooner, becoming a passenger where I had looked to reign sole proprietor; the whole thing was arranged in the course of the day. The wind continued steadily about north-east, and by the evening, the freight, composed of the paraphernalia, was shipped and stowed: the company assembled; and, after sundry holdings-on for some music-book forgotten in the orchestra, or some actor left at his lodging, we, in about one hour after the time fixed by the pilot for the latest minute of tide, slipped the hawsers of the smart little Washington, and fell off into the stream of ebb.—When we got on the bar, it was almost low water: the schooner drew eight feet abaft, and we had just nine feet soundings over the bank; we cleared all, however, after a minute of some anxiety, owing to there being a heavy northerly swell setting in, which appeared each moment to increase.—Once over the bar, we got nearly before the wind with a staggering breeze, and went along right merrily. Our representative of all the Juliets and Julias had a pretty voice; the Kemble of the company, a fine, tall, good-tempered fellow, sang duets and trios well enough for a tragedian; a chorus was easily mustered out of the remaining members of the corps who constituted for the day; and we roused old Ocean with 'When the wind blows,' until he became too obstreperous in his emulation, and fairly drowned our melody.—The wind did blow, at last, in such a sort as to disperse our chorus; the schooner was about forty tons measurement, sharp as a wedge below, and not over three feet and a half between decks; the cabin was about the same square measurement, with two little berths, into which we stowed the ladies, the managers and the principals occupying the remaining space, in the hold, over the ballast, the rest of the company stowed themselves away.—To penetrate either of these close quarters I found utterly impossible: all were ill save the stout tragedian; comedy, farce, and opera, ballet and band, the manager, his subjects and his properties, were alike disorganised and overwhelmed. I resolved therefore on keeping the deck as I best could, by the help of a stout dread-nought, a pocket-full of cigars, and a mild infusion of old cognac, provided for me by a considerate friend.—Within two hours, the wind had gradually increased until it blew a gale: the fore-sail was taken in, the mainsail close-reefed, and the saucy boat flew along before it like a gull, the following seas just kissing the edge of her taffrail, as she slipped away before them.—Our pilot, the owner of the craft, was a careful and steady old Bristol-man, but somewhat nervous and timid: his regular crew consisted of two fine white boys, apprentices, and a couple of stout slaves: we had, in addition, taken on board an old apprentice of the pilot's, who, as we started, had volunteered to accompany his once master. This was a droll subject, a regular long-sided dare-devil of a South Carolinian: he was full three sheets in the wind when we sailed, and managed to keep the steam up by the contributions liberally proffered during our short season of festivity.—As the gale freshened this fellow showed out; when a sail was to be handed or a reef taken in, he was a crew in himself; one of the coolest and smartest fellows I ever met, but somewhat profane in his humour, and rather hard upon the nerves of the chief: few of his sayings will bear repetition; but the exaggeration of his figures of speech, the wild fantastic spirit of reckless humour by which he was governed, I shall not lose sight of; during the night I supplied him with cigars, and with his oddness wore away the time. One little bit of dialogue will describe this wild man of the water better than any words of mine. We had already taken in two reefs when the pilot gave directions 'Stand by to lower away the peak.'—'Ay, ay,' sang out his aide, as he sprang nimbly to the foot of the mast; adding, 'but what the devil are you going to do now, stranger?'—'Bear a hand!' cried the senior, 'take in another reef!'—'What! you're afear'd little Wash-the-water goes through it too fast, are you, old man?'—'To be sure; I don't want to get off the bar before day-light.'—'Dont you? Why then you must tie her fast to a stump, my friend; for if you let her go ahead, she'll make the light long afore you can see your way across the bar, between the white water.'—'The wind between now and then may slack a little,' urged the senior, looking back over the seas now rolling very high, as though he wished the time was come.—'Well, that's a cur'ous kind o' guess you've made, any way, old stranger,' laughed his tormentor, clapping his foot against the companion, and taking the pull of a giant on the reef-tackle as he spoke. 'If you ever know'd where to look for the fag-end of a north-easter at this time o' year, it's more nor you ever larn'd me to do, and that I do say was'nt doin' your honest duty by me. I'd lay a pistreen this breeze would last the Washy, to the south'ard o' the Tortugas, and well you know it too.'—'Well, suppose it would, I can't help it—what would you do, Matthew? It blows like thunder: I can't tell how fast she's going,—I don't want to over-shoot the light, and then have to thrash back through such a smother of a sea.'—'Well, now I see what you're at; and it's all right I guess,' observed Matthew, with affected deference of tone. 'I know the varmint's pretty slick, but I never should ha' thought of her crawling over ninety miles in four hours:'—it was at this time about midnight.—'You ask me what I'd do. Why now I'll tell you; if I was you, I'd say, Mat, here take the stick,—it wouldn't be the first time,—and I'd crawl out o' that hole and shake myself; and then I'd ask this gentleman for a cigar and a mouthful of liquor, and then I'd clap a bit o' the square mainsail on her, and lift the sloppy little slut out of it a yard or two; that's what I'd do: and now what have you to say agen it, he?'—'You have a square mainsail in the craft, I suppose?' here inquired I, by way of taking Mat-thew off the old man a little.—'Why, I don't know; may-be the old man has had it cut up to make trousers: but there used to be one when I was in her, and such an omni-potent tearer,—it had a hoist to heaven, it shocked home to h—ll, outspread the eternal universe, and would ha' dragged a frigate seventeen knots through a sea o' treacle, by the living jingo! Why, I've seen it afore now raise the kettle hooker clean out o' water, and tail off, with her hanging on, like the boat to a balloon.'"

The Pressure of Fluid, a Substitute for Steam.—The Rev. J. Porter, of the Close, Salisbury, has invented an engine which acts upon the well-known law of nature, "the pressure of fluids;" the construction of the apparatus is simple, merely consisting of four cylinders, two of which act as pumps, the other two as working cylinders, each of them having proper pistons; the double acting power (of the model) is put in motion by only twenty-five ounces of water, assisted by the lever. Some idea may be formed of the force of the pressure; with the stroke of one of the cylinders of the piston, an ash bough an inch and a half in diameter was broken with the greatest ease. The reverend gentleman is most sanguine in the success of his discovery, for he affirms that a ship, laden with the usual freight, may make a trip to the East Indies and back, the engine requiring for its total supply not more than half a hogshead of spring water; and not the least valuable part of this singular and important discovery is, that, unlike steam, not the slightest danger is to be apprehended from any accidental derangement of the machinery. Surely this is well worthy the consideration of its applicability to his Majesty's vessels.

We publish an advertisement of a Company formed for working the Mines known to exist in the Island of St. Domingo, which offers every prospect of success, if conducted with spirit. The authorities of Hayti are known to be anxious on this point, and have offered very advantageous terms to the individuals who have revived the charter originally granted some years ago, but subsequently abandoned by the Agent sent out from England. Amongst the speculations of the present day, this appears to us to be one of the most likely to succeed, no great capital being required to commence the business, and the return to be calculated on speedy.

The objects for which this Company is formed are, to work the mines of Copper, Gold, Silver, or other Metals in the Island of St. Domingo, and to carry on Streaming Works on the Banks of the Rivers which flow through the Mining Districts, and also to cultivate Coffee, Cotton, Tobacco, Sugar, Indigo, &c.

The Committee do not intend to follow the example of those persons who have directed the affairs of several Foreign Mining Companies, by expending large sums of money before it was ascertained where would be the most fit place to commence operations.

They intend to send proper and experienced persons to make selections from the various Mines included in the general grant on which they are acting.

Arrangements are made for the Cultivation of some of the best Plantations in the Island of St. Domingo.

To accomplish these points, the Committee do not intend to call for more than £1 per Share, payable in three months, in addition to the first deposit; and as soon as a Report is obtained from the Island, a Meeting of the Shareholders will be called, and the Committee will then be guided by the Resolutions which may be entered into at that Meeting on all matters of importance to the Company. In the meantime the Subscribers will not be called upon to sign any Deeds.

Two Thousand Shares are already subscribed for. Applications for the remainder may be made, if by letter, post paid, addressed to the Committee, at the Bankers, the Solicitors, or at the Temporary Offices of the Company, No. 2, Copthall Chambers; at which places Prospectuses may be had, detailing matters matters relating to the Company.

CAUTION.—It having been represented to Messrs. DELCROIX and Co. Perfumers to their Majesties and the Royal Family, that frequent disappointments were occurring to the Nobility and Gentry, in purchasing from shops having the appearance of respectability, counterfeit articles, bearing not only similar labels to their own, but even their name and address, Messrs. Delcroix and Co. have taken necessary steps to enable them to expose the parties so acting and they have the pleasure of informing their patrons and friends that Injunctions have been granted by the above Court, against Messrs. John Gosnell and Co. Lyle Place and Gosnell, of Regent-street, and 1 Kings' Court, Lombard-street,

Mr. John Colley, Perfumer, Bishopsgate Street Within, and Mr. Robert Haycomb, wholesale Perfumer, Crown-street, Finsbury-square; restraining them from vending imitations of Messrs. De Croix and Co.'s much esteemed Esprit de Lavande aux Millefleurs. And the Trade and others are hereby cautioned against similar practices, as Messrs. Delcroix and Co. are determined to proceed against all parties resorting to any means of injuring the great reputation their perfumes have acquired, not only in this country, but in every part of Europe, India, and all parts of the Continent.

Purchasers are requested to be careful to notice that their Esprit de Lavande aux Millefleurs and Vegetable Extract, will in future bear the signature of "J. Delcroix" on the labels, and the name and address "Delcroix, 158, New Bond-street," on the back of the Bottles.

London, 1848.

TO the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public — Families of distinction and Visitors to the Metropolis at this Season, who frequently experience great difficulty in suiting themselves with FURNISHED or UNFURNISHED HOUSES, owing to the great demand, are respectfully informed every attention will be afforded in the House and Estate Agency Department of HENRY L. COOPER, in obtaining or disposing of the same, or in the Selling, Letting, or Valuing, any description of property in Town or Country.

From the central situation of the Establishments in their respective commanding localities, every facility is rendered to families honouring his house with their instructions, and offering the advantage of a double connexion usually replete with eligible properties

The general introduction of PLATE GLASS for Windows, Carriages, Conservatories, Internal Decorations, &c., has induced H. L. C. to survey a Twelve months Trial of Messrs. HALL and Co's. PANNUS CORIUM or Leather Cloth Shoes. Speaking from experience, we can say they are much softer and more elastic than any leather we have ever worn, and peculiarly adapted for the present season. Belle Assemblee. "Gentlemen, having submitted the specimen of jointed cloth shoes to their Majesties, I am honoured with their commands to acquaint you with their approval of them. I am, Gentlemen, your obedient servant, HERBERT TAYLOR." "They made for Sir Herbert Taylor answer extremely well, and he has recommended them generally. Windsor Castle." "Hall and Co's. India Rubber Goloshes are indispensable to those who value the healthfulness of dry feet, and the comfort of genial warmth." Belle Assemblee. Every person who has tender feet, corns, or bunions will find immediate relief by wearing the cloth shoes and India rubber Goloshes. The former resemble the finest leather, but never draw the feet, the latter, extremely light and elastic, may be worn over them in wet weather, and being completely waterproof, will render the most delicate constitution independent of weather.—Hall and Co., Patentees, Wellington-street, Waterloo Bridge, Strand.

SAPONACEOUS AMBROSIAL CREAM.
NISBET, 39, Wigmore street, has the honour to announce to the Nobility and Gentry, that he has been appointed, by M. Guerlain, Rue Rivoli, a Paris, SOLE AGENT, Wholesale and Retail, for the SALE of the above. An article of the highest repute at the Toilet of Gentlemen throughout Europe, especially for Shaving, as from its emollient qualities it is far superior to the purest Naples Soap. It is also prepared in solid squares for the hands. Also Madame Cavallhon's Pomade Melalleucom, a highly esteemed preparation for dying the hair, &c.

THE TEETH.—GREIG THOMSON, Surgeon Dentist, begs to call the attention of the Public to the improvement he has recently made in gold stopping, filling decayed Teeth

The advantages arising from this improvement are, that the walls of the cavity being filled without pain, effectually arrests the progress of decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much more than any other description now in use.

Gold, from its being the only ductile metal that can resist the action of the acids of the mouth, has long been deservedly considered the only material with which decayed teeth can be filled with any certainty of a permanently beneficial result; this it must be evident to those who have had the misfortune to have their teeth filled with any of those cements to which so many fraudulent names are given, and to which so many miracles have been attributed. Those cements being amalgams of mercury with silver, tin, or lead, are quickly acted upon by the acids of the mouth, which, in a short time, convert the tooth and the stopping into one black mass, and ultimately dissolve both; in addition to this evil the deleterious effects of mercury upon the mouth are well known to require further comment.

Greig Thomson continues to perform all the operations of Dental Surgery, and to fix natural and artificial teeth on the most improved principles combined with the utmost moderation of terms.

FISTULÆ, PILES, ABSCESSES, STRICTURES, &c.—Mr. S. J. Consulted till one daily at his residence, No. 16, Percy-street, Bedford-square.—Persons afflicted may obtain a prospectus gratis, containing a few out of the many cures effected by him on applying to Mr. Cradock, Chemist and Druggist, No. 6, Rupert-street, Bedford-square.

H. L. C. begs to add that he manufactures them on his own premises, and has always on hand a large stock of well-seasoned materials, which enables him to produce work at the lowest possible rate and of a superior quality.

STEAM and SAILING VESSELS promptly fitted up with CABIN FURNITURE and PASSENGERS' REQUISITES.

SOLID and PORTABLE Furniture, Bedding, Musquito Hangers, &c., for Foreign Climates. Families going abroad will receive every information respecting the articles best adapted for their particular destinations.

Merchants, Captains, and Dealers, supplied with the utmost despatch, on the most liberal terms.

CARPETING

of the fabric especially made for the first Upholstery Houses, viz. Brussels, Kidderminster, and Venetian; also a few of the much admired velvet pile carpets, hearth-rugs, druggets, baize, floor cloth, &c.

BEDDING, BLANKETS, &c.

well-seasoned, real Dantzic feathers, also equally prepared Hungary downy feathers for second and third rate beds, elastic spring hair, and wool mattresses; real Witney, fine Bath and Yorkshire blankets, Marseilles quilts and counterpanes. In the article of bedding, blankets, &c., so essentially important to all, H. L. C. is determined that no trader shall supply them on better terms.

HOUSE AGENCY.

A register is kept at both establishments for the disposal or purchasing of every description of houses, furnished or unfurnished estates, &c. Properties surveyed, and fixtures appraised.

FUNERALS FURNISHED,

Families in the country may command the most approved taste by being waited on at home with patterns and designs made on the spot, calculated to harmonise with the plans, proportions and decorations of the rooms; and their orders delivered and fixed on terms forming a very small addition to the first cost, the system adopted by this concern.

With this short enumeration of the leading articles of his trade, and the very favourable terms on which he undertakes to supply them, HENRY L. COOPER appeals to all classes for a continuance of that flattering preference hitherto afforded his house, Bishopsgate Street Within; Western Branch, 57, Conduit-street, nine doors from Regent-street.

H. L. C. begs respectfully to solicit particular attention to the Address. Also, that any article will be exchanged should a valid objection arise, thus securing the Public from imposition.

"TO ALL OUR READERS who desire Ease and Comfort in Walking, we most strongly recommend a Trial of Messrs. HALL and Co's. PANNUS CORIUM or Leather Cloth Shoes. SECOND HAND LOOKING GLASSES.

Several superb Glasses, varying in size eight feet, nine feet, ten feet, and upwards in length, by five feet and five feet six inches in width, at a considerably reduction from the present tariff prices. DEFIANCE to BIRCH, by the mouth or season.

CARVING AND GILDING IN ALL ITS BRANCHES.

In the department will be found a very elegant and extensive variety of Chimney and Pier Glass Frames, Cornices to Windows, Ornamental Tables and Furniture, and richly executed Frames in various size for Portraits, Paintings, &c. Paintings neat Prints mounted, framed, and re-gilt.

PAPER HANGING, AND INTERIOR DECORATIONS

in all its branches, from the most simple to the first style of elegance. A rich variety of new patterns on show.

IN THE UPHOLSTERY ARRANGEMENT, the greatest attention is paid to unite elegance with economy in character for the drawing-room, boudoir, dining room, library, and bed-chambers, to the most quiet to the most costly styles. In the various articles of curtains, draperies, cornices, &c. A great variety of the most splendid and novel styles are constantly on view of those qualities which can alone insure permanent satisfaction, the extreme disparity in prices in these articles mainly arises from the inferiority of the fabric.

CABINET, CHAIR, AND SOFA WORK

manufactured of the most seasoned materials. In the finish of Chairs, Sofas, &c., much depends on the quality of the materials used, and the work manship. It may not be unworthy of remark that a similar effect may be produced at a saving of nearly one half, but which in the wear must eventually prove a serious disappointment to the purchaser. This applies also to the manufacture of Cabinet Goods, which, from being made of unseasoned and ruinous unsound work that cannot be detected by the casual observer, can never be of that service and durability so essential

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

AS the following letter received from Major-General Sir Henry Wheatley, Keeper of the Privy Purse, testifies:—

Sir,—I am honoured with the King's command to express his Majesty's sense of your polite attention in sending the two bottles of Essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been pleased to direct me to forward you ten pounds in payment for it—Inclosed you will find that amount.—I am, Sir, your's obediently,

H. WHEATLEY.

St. James's Palace, June 25th, 1835.

To Mr. Decimus Woodhouse.

WOODHOUSE'S ÆTHERIAL ESSENCE of GINGER is particularly recommended to all cold, phlegmatic, weak, and nervous constitutions; it is certain in affording instant relief in Cholera Morbus, Spasms, Cramps, Flatulence, Languor, Hysterics, Heartburn, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Pain and Oppression after Meals; also those Pains of the Stomach and Bowels which arise from Gouty Flatulencies; Digestion, however much impaired, is restored to its pristine state, by the use of this Essence for a short time, if taken in Tea, Coffee, Ale, Beer, Porter, Cider, or Wine; it corrects their Flatulent tendency.

The undernamed, and 208 other Medical men have given certificates of their unqualified approbation of the value of the Essence, as also of its superiority over all other similar preparations. Drs. James Johnson, Physician to his Majesty, A. T. Halroyd, S. Ashwell, R. Rowley, A. Middleton, C. London, D. Davies, Surgeon to their Majesties, J. Pereira, G. Pitcher, F. Salmon, F. Tyrrell, J. B. Curtis, Artist to his Majesty, C. Millard.

This Essence is prepared only by DECIMUS WOODHOUSE, Operative Chemist Extraordinary to his Majesty, 18, King William-street, New London-bridge; and sold by him, wholesale and retail, in bottles 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., 10s. 6d, and 21s. each, and may be had of all Medicine Venders.

TO CAPTAINS, MERCHANTS, &c.

CROSSE AND BLACKWELL'S PREPARED HORSE RADISH.—For Hot and Cold Meats, &c. The excellence of this universally admired Vegetable for its digestive and tonic qualities being so well known and acknowledged, has induced the Proprietors to offer more extensively for Sale their much approved Preparation of the same. To prepare this necessary article for the table, though simple in itself, is usually attended with much trouble and expense to those who have occasion to purchase such time it is in request. C. & B.'s Preparation entirely supersedes this inconvenience, and is blended with a facility and economy truly desirable, as it will be found, on trial, to reduce the expense to one half,—produce an additional zest,—and be ready for use at a moment's notice.

CROSSE and BLACKWELL'S Celebrated SOHO SAUCE for Fish, Game, Steaks, Made Dishes, &c

DINMORE'S ESSENCE OF SHRIMPS will be found far superior to the Essence of Anchovies for every description of boiled and fried fish, being of a more mild, rich, and delicious flavour.

TO EPICURES, &c.

DINMORE'S SHRIMP PASTE, a superior Delicacy to any thing yet offered to the Public, for Breakfast, Sandwiches, &c.

The above to be had of most Sauce Venders throughout the Kingdom, and wholesale of the Proprietors, 11, King-street, Soho.

TO PREVENT FRAUD.

THORN'S POTTED YARMOUTH BLOATERS, for Toast, Biscuits, Sandwiches, and Wine, in Pots, 1s. and 2s. each. The high repute and immense sale of this delicate preparation has induced several would-be tradesmen (who not having an idea of their own, to attempt an imposition by labelling a pot exactly like his, thereby to deceive the public and injure him, (having actually applied to his printer for that purpose,) well knowing they cannot prepare the Fish, the receipt being an old family one, and the secret in the curing of the Herring, by which its rancid qualities are destroyed, and it becomes so delicious a relish. It is easily detected by observing his signature, ALEX. THORN, on the side, and on the top, Proprietor of the celebrated for Fish, Game, Steaks, Wild Fowl, and all Made Dishes, imparting a zest not otherwise acquired—the most economical now in use; in Bottles, 2s. and 4s. each, warranted in all climates. Wholesale at the Manufactory, Thorn's Oil, Italian, and Foreign Warehouse, 225, High Holborn; also of all wholesale oilmen and druggists; and retail by all respectable oilmen, grocers, and druggists in the United Kingdom.

WARRANTED NOT PATENT!!

BRETT'S IMPROVED BRANDY, possessing all the estimable properties of real Cognac and equally well enduring the test of dilution, is best appreciated by comparing it with the much-vaunted productions of pretended Patentees.

Cash price, 16s. per Imperial Gallon. If settled for in London, a Gallon of upwards will be forwarded, free of carriage, to any market town in England; or a Half-dozen Hamper for a Guinea, including the package.

This salutary Spirit may likewise be obtained in sealed Bottles, 3s. 6d. each, or 40s. per dozen, bottles inclusive, at No. 109, Drury-lane (N.B. 109), under guarantee of our Seal, Label, and Signature, which are attached only to the Old Brandies, bottled on our premises.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Rissoles, Currirs, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against counterfeit compositions, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 79, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin,—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

BRITISH CONSUL'S OFFICE, Philadelphia.—Know all persons to whom these presents shall come, that I, Gilbert Robertson, Esq., his Britannic Majesty's Consul, do hereby certify that R. Warton, Esq. who attests to the efficacy of OLDRIDGE'S BALM of COLUMBIA in restoring Hair, is Mayor of this City, and that M. Randall, Esq., is Prothonotary of the Court of Common Pleas, to both whose signatures full faith and credit is due. I further certify, that I am personally acquainted with J. L. Ingle, Esq., another of the signers, and that he is a person of great respectability, and that I heard him express his unqualified approbation of the effects of Oldridge's Balm in restoring his hair. Given under my hand and seal of office, at the City of Philadelphia, Dec. 29, 1821

(Signed) GILBERT ROBERTSON

Oldridge, No. 1, Wellington-street, Strand, where the Balm is sold, price 3s. 6d., 6s., and 11s. per bottle.—N.B. The Public are requested to be on their guard against counterfeits. IMPORTANT DISCOVERY IN MEDICINE.—LEFAY'S GRAND POMMADE.—The extraordinary preparation cures, by two or three external applications, Tic Douloureux, Gout, Rheumatism, Lumbago, and Sciatica, and all painful Affections of the Nerves, giving instantaneous relief in the most severe paroxysms. It has been extensively employed in the public and private practice of several Continental physicians, who have declared that in no case have they found it to fail in curing those formidable and tormenting maladies. Since its introduction into England, it has in every case fully maintained its high character its unrivalled success has obtained for it on the Continent. Patients, who had for years drawn a miserable existence, and many who had lost the use of their limbs by rheumatism and paralysis, have, by a few applications, been restored to health, strength, and rightful, after electricity, galvanism, blistering, veratrine, morphia, colchicum, and all the usual remedies had been found useless. Its astonishing and almost miraculous effects have also been experienced in the cure of nervous and rheumatic pains of the head and face, paralysis, affections, contracted and stiff joints, glandular swellings, pains of the chest and loins, chronic rheumatisms, palpitation of the heart, &c. The way of using it is by rubbing. It requires no interval nor diet or restraint of any kind.

Sold, by appointment of J. Lefay, by Sterling, 86, High-street, Whitechapel, in Pots at 4s. 6d. each, and may be had of Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Butler, St. Paul's; Barclay, Farringdon-street; Harvey, 61, Great Surrey-street, Blackfriars road; Sutton and Co., Row Churchyard, Strand; Ring, Royal Exchange; Newton and Co., Cheapside, Blackfriars road, and most of the principal Medicine Venders. Observe, the genuine has the name of J. W. Sterling engraved on the stamp, who will attend to any communication or inquiries respecting it. All Letters must be post paid.

YOLAND'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION is the most wonderful Medicine ever discovered by man, for the cure of GONORRHŒA, GLEETS, STRICTURES, WHITES, Pains in the Loins, Affections of the Kidneys, Gravel, Irritation of the Urethra or Bladder, and for all Urinary Diseases in both sexes.—This Medicine is patronised, prescribed, recommended, and sanctioned by the Most Eminent of the Faculty, not only in England but on the Continent, and stated by them, from experience, to be the only Medicine that can be relied on for the cure of these complaints, and that invariably resort to it when their own remedies fail

YOLAND'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION cures both sexes, at all times sooner than any other known remedy, with the most thorough success, after every Medicine of the present day has proved ineffectual, so that this justly celebrated specific has arrived at the acme of perfection, surpassing every thing of the kind that ever bore the name of medicine, by quickly curing some of those serious diseases in a few hours. Those who have suffered from any of the above diseases for many years (such as strictures, &c.) will find upon taking this medicine for a short time, that, if not entirely cured, they will no longer feel much inconvenience from the trifling complaint that remains.

References to respectable Surgeons, who are in the habit of prescribing this medicine extensively, will be given on application to the Proprietor's Agents.

Sold in Sealed Packets, with full directions, so that any one may cure themselves with perfect safety and secrecy, sent to any part of the world by HANNAH and Co., 61, Oxford-street, the corner of Wells-street, London, to whom dealers in the country are requested to forward their orders direct, and Retail by all respectable Medicine Venders. Price 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. Country Order, Orders for the Continent, and shipping Orders to any extent, executed as usual on the day of arrival curious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.

FAMILIES in want of really good Servants of every description, both Male and Female, will decidedly find their interest better consulted, and their object much sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, No. 124, Oxford-street, near Hollis-street, established in 1830, than through the adoption of any other method whatever; as Domestics, with good characters, are in waiting to be hired from 10 to 5 o'clock.

PORTSMOUTH, Feb. 26.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Scout was floated out of Dock on Saturday afternoon, and immediately proceeded to Spithead. She sailed for the Cape of Good Hope on Sunday morning. A ship of the line called the Liverpool, a present from the Imaum of Muscat to his Majesty, arrived at Spithead on Tuesday from the Cape of Good Hope. She hoisted a red flag, and saluted the Port Admiral, who returned an equal number of guns on Wednesday morning. This ship is of teak, nearly similar to the Melville, although some say built on the lines of the Ganges and Asia, is in charge of Capt. Cuthbert, E.I.C.S., and manned with about 30 Europeans and 120 Lascars. She has some specimens of natural history on board, a carriage and horses as presents, and about 300 tons of timber. The guns of the old Liverpool frigate are in her; she is waiting orders at Spithead. A French man-of-war cutter, on her way from Brest to cruise between Hastings and the French coast, for the protection of the fishery, put into Spithead on Tuesday to get an English pilot. A salute of 15 guns was fired from her, and returned by the Britannia. The officer in command was entertained by the Admiral on her Majesty's birthday. The cutter sailed on Thursday. The Hope transport, Lieut. Spencer, R.N., arrived on Wednesday from Bermuda, with a company of H. Artillery, some invalids, and a quantity of copper; having landed the latter, she proceeded to Woolwich. The Vanguard and Bellerophon are fitting with all despatch. Vice-Adm. Sir P. Halkett re-hoisted his flag on board the Melville on Thursday. She is at moorings opposite the dockyard apart from her hulk, will bend sails on Monday, and sail for the West Indies the latter end of the week, her stay at Spithead being only to take in her powder, and pay the crew advance. The system of getting everything on board in harbour, is an infinite saving of time, labour, and money to officers, men, and boats. The rumour of the Britannia, 120, flag ship at this port, being ordered to relieve the Caledonia, 120, in the Mediterranean, is utterly unfounded. The latter ship is ordered home to be paid off. The Parmelia transport was to have gone to the river Thames this day, but a violent storm of snow from the eastward, has prevented her moving. The Pique was masted on Saturday, and is waiting to be commissioned. Ships in port—Liverpool at Spithead. Britannia, Melville, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Romney, and Parmelia transport, in harbour.

Court-Martial on Captain Leyton, Royal Marines, at Woolwich.—We last week gave a sketch of the proceedings in this case (by a typographical error, Engineers was substituted for Royal Marines). The evidence for the prosecution closed on Monday last, and Capt. Leyton was granted until Thursday to prepare his defence, when the court reassembled. Capt. Leyton obtained permission for his legal adviser to read his defence. In the course of it, Capt. L. called the attention of the court to the cross-examination of Lieut. Hawkins, wherein Lieut. H. admitted that on occasions when he, Lieut. H., had acted as caterer, "he had not thought it necessary to keep receipts for articles furnished by him for the mess, but had destroyed them, after having been seen by his brother officers." Yet Lieut. H. had framed this charge against Capt. L., having seen the mess-book, and not having objected at the time to the items. This took place on 13th Jan. last; on the 14th, Lieut. H. called the attention of Capt. L. to the points stated in the charge; on the 16th, Capt. L. in reply, offered to give every explanation, and then further stated, that instead of any overcharge, 11s. were due to him from the officers, which he had omitted to insert in the account. Yet notwithstanding this, Lieut. H. on the 17th addressed Col. M'Cleverty, the Commandant, on the subject, Lieut. H. having been requested to do so, as senior Subaltern of the detachment, in the names of Lieuts. Hawkin (not Hawkins), Lee, Miller, and Caugdin, and in consequence of which Capt. Leyton demanded a Court-Martial. "The indecent haste which characterised this proceeding," Capt. L. begged leave to state he wished to impress upon the Court, as being at variance with the prosecutor's assurance that he was actuated by no private feelings (to speak no harsher, particularly when it is combined with the fact that Lieut. H. had only been with the detachment ten days out of the 164 !! being the period comprised in the charge). Capt. L. then stated he could prove, by the evidence of his servants, that the bills and receipts, which he had considered as done with after the examination of the mess-book by the officers (which had been allowed by the prosecutor's evidence to have been always laid on the table for inspection), were put into a drawer with old reports, and used to light the fires; and that he could also prove by other servants that he had given frequent sums for extra articles, which had been obtained of the nearest tradesmen, as required. Also that he could substantiate by a porkman that he had been in the habit of sending to him for fresh and salt provisions, for which he paid ready money, consequently he had charged in the mess account the fresh pork under the head of butcher's meat, and the latter under the head of cheesemonger's bill, which accounted for the seeming overcharge; and that so far as related to the baker's bill, the articles of brown bread had been supplied extra to the white, and that this bread had been brought over by the servant of Lieut. W. Wood, who had paid for the same, and repaid by him, Capt. Leyton, consequently it did not appear in the baker's bill. Capt. Leyton concluded his defence with an energetic appeal to the court. During his services of thirty-three years in the Royal Marines, although he had not been fortunate enough to be in any general engagement, he had been, he trusted, usefully employed, and hitherto with the approbation of those officers whom he had served under. Captain Leyton's address was listened to with the most profound attention by the court and auditory. He then proceeded to call Mr. Ward, pork-butcher at Deptford, and Privates Steele, Jackson, and Robertson, all and several of whom corroborated the statement of Capt. Leyton, though strictly cross-examined by the prosecutor. The following witnesses to character were then called:—Col. M'Cleverty stated that Capt. L. had been under his command for nearly six years, and his conduct had ever met his entire approbation. Lt. Col. Nicholson had known Capt. L. for thirty years, and gave him the highest character as a gentleman and a vigilant officer, voluntarily adding, whilst he was a Subaltern under his command he had the payment of a company, which duty he discharged with honour and credit. Capt. Walker gave similar testimony for thirty-one years; Capt. Vallo for thirty-three years; when Capt. L. handed up to the President a document, attested by the Mayor of Cadiz, signed by Lieut.-Col. Adair, of the efficiency of the men under the command of Capt. Leyton while on board H.M.S. Donegal; also a letter from Capt. Pritchard, commending that ship in 1826, stating that the officers of her had subscribed a sum of money to purchase a silver snuff-box as a testimony of their estimation of Capt. L. for his conduct during the time he had acted as caterer of their mess; and lastly, a letter from Capt. Fanshawe, of the Donegal, in which ship Capt. L. had again sailed between 1833 and 1834, testifying his honourable conduct as an officer and a gentleman on all occasions. The court adjourned at a quarter past three o'clock, until Saturday, to allow Lieut. Hawkins to reply to the defence.

Efficiency of Steam.—H.M.S. Scorpion, which arrived at Falmouth on the 23rd inst., with the mail from Lisbon, sailed from thence so long ago as the 31st Jan. making a passage of 24 days. The private steam-packet Liverpool left Lisbon on the evening of the 4th inst. and arrived at Falmouth on the 9th, being a passage of little more than four days.

Captain Ross's Expedition.—Extract of a letter dated Kirkwall, Feb. 9th, 1836:—"I have seen and conversed with an intelligent person belonging to H.M.S. Cove, going to the relief of ice-bound whalers. It appears that the Cove put back to Stromness, where she arrived on the 6th inst., after having experienced a series of the most severe gales ever witnessed by the oldest and most practised seamen. She had reached the 30th degree of W. long., and was lying to on the starboard tack, when a most dreadful sea broke on board her, taking her on the bow, carrying away the bowsprit inside the knight heads, splitting the gammoning knee and stem, carrying away all the quick work, breaking some of the iron knees, and straining her throughout. The watch on the deck were thrown down, and, for an instant, imagined themselves overboard; the helsman instantly went over the wheel. Fortunately, the officer of the watch (Lieut. Inman) held firmly on, and as soon as he saw her rise out of the sea, without bowsprit, took the most prompt and seamanlike steps to save the foremast, by putting the ship before the wind, till the topmast was struck and jury stays carried to the cat heads, &c. Every body below, at the instant of the awful accident, thought an ice-berg had struck the ship, and rushed on deck. The saving of the ship speaks well for the seamanship of the officers and men. The Cove had got another bowsprit at Stromness, and is expected to sail again on 13th inst. The unfortunate ships in the ice must be in a shocking state by this time, and we fear they will not get relief till the summer."—Hampshire Telegraph.—[Had this vessel been built by Capt. Symonds, our worthy contemporary would have doubtless attributed the accident to the nature of her construction.—Ed.]

Leveret, 10, was at the Gambia on 24th Nov.; Wasp, at Vera Cruz on Dec. 13, to take specie to England; the Liverpool, a large line-of-battle ship, under the charge of Capt. Cogan, of the Indian Navy, was at the Cape of Good Hope on 2d Dec.; this ship is a present from the Imaun of Muscat to the King of England.

On Monday a Coroner's Jury was summoned at the King's Head Tavern, Woolwich, to inquire into the circumstances which led to the death of a marine, named William Saundrey. Mr. Carttar, the Coroner, stated that the case required the most mature consideration, and he considered that it would be better, first, to receive the evidence of the medical gentlemen. Mr. Parkin, the visiting military surgeon, deposed that the deceased had been flogged on the 8th inst. He saw him in the hospital on the 9th. On the 10th his back was all but well, and on the 18th it was quite so; but he complained of a fixed pain in his left groin, so that he could not sleep. He had fever upon him, but no inflammation, nor any appearance of local disease. His fever ran very high for some days afterwards, and he was bled repeatedly. His blood was in a highly inflamed state, symptoms of inflammation of the mucous membrane of the bowels evinced itself, accompanied by a cough, shortness of breathing, and such symptoms as led him (Mr. P.) to believe he was labouring under effusion of the chest, of which symptoms, in his opinion, he died. He did not think the symptoms had any relation to the punishment he had received. Nothing, however, but a post mortem examination could distinctly bring to light the absolute cause of death. The Coroner then observed, that as they could not proceed further until the post mortem examination had taken place, it must be adjourned. The Inquiry was then postponed until the following morning. In the meantime a post mortem examination had taken place, attended by 10 medical gentlemen, who stated they believed that the deceased had died from the effects of fever, and certainly not from flogging. The following verdict was delivered to the Coroner by the foreman:—"That he died by the visitation of God, and not by the hands of any person or persons whatever."

On Monday se'nnight the boat's crew of the Portland Station, under Lieut. Drew, R.N., seized 97 tubs of foreign spirits, which had not long been landed on Portland Beach, and supposed to have been the cargo of the well known French smuggling cutter, the Elise, from Cherbourg, the boat of which has in consequence been detained, the crew, fortunately for them escaping. The tubs were deposited in the Custom House of Weymouth.
